"' No officer or member of the said police force, under penalty of forfeiting the salary or pay which may be due him, shall withdraw or resign, except by permission of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, unless he shall have given the major and superintendent one month's notice in writing of such intention.'

"SEC. 2. That one-half of the amount necessary to provide for the increased salaries and compensation of the Metropolitan police authorized in this act is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and the other one-half out of the revenues of the District of Columbia, to supplement the amounts appropriated for the members and employees of the Metropolitan police mentioned in the act entitled 'An act making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes,' approved July 11, 1919.

"SEC. 3. That the watchmen provided by the United States Government for service in any of the public squares and reservations in the District of Columbia shall hereafter be known as the 'United States park police,' and their annual basic salaries shall be as follows: Lieutenant, $1,900; first sergeant, $1,700; sergeants, $1,580; privates, $1,360: Provided, That every watchman employed for such service at the time this act becomes law shall, in addition to the salary received by him for the period of service between August 1, 1919, and the time this act becomes law, receive for such period the difference between such salary and the salary payable to him under the provisions of this section for a period of equal duration.

"SEC. 4. That to provide for the increased salaries and compensation of the United States park police so much as is necessary is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to supplement the amounts appropriated for park watchmen mentioned in the act entitled 'An act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes,' approved March 1, 1919."

And the Senate agree to the same.

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to H. R. 9821, entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act relating to the Metropolitan police of the District of Columbia,' approved February 28, 1901, and for other purposes," submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conference committee and submitted in the accompanying conference report as to the amendment of the Senate, namely:

The Senate amendment struck out all after the enacting clause of the House bill and inserted a substitute therefor. The House recedes from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate and agrees to the same with amendment as reported by the committee of conference.

The Senate recedes and accepts the House provisions as to the salaries of officers and members of the Metropolitan police force except the salary for police surgeon, which was fixed at $1,600 per annum instead of the House provision of $1,400 and the Senate provision of $1,800; except the salary of captain, which was fixed at $2,400 per annum instead of the House provision of $2,300 and the Senate provision of $2,500; except the extra compensation of mounted police, which was fixed at $540 per annum instead of the House provision of $480 and the Senate provision of $600; and except the extra compensation of bicycle police, which was fixed at $70 per annum instead of the House provision of $60 and the Senate provision of $75.

The compensation of the major and superintendent, the assistant superintendents, inspectors, lieutenants, sergeants, and privates of classes 1, 2, and 3, and the compensation of the members of the force mounted on motor vehicles remain the same as in the House bill.

The conference report accepts the provision of the Senate amendment requiring the appointment and promotion of the officers, members, and civilian employees of the Metropolitan police to be made according to the provisions of the civil-service act, except the major and superintendent, the assistant superintendents, and the inspectors, and provides for two assistant superintendents, as provided for by the Senate.

The House provision which in effect prevents the members of the police force from joining any organization affiliated with another organization which holds, claims, or exercises the right to strike is retained with an amendment to perfect the text. The Senate recedes from the so-called "Myers amendment," which would extend the scope of this provision to all organizations of Federal employees.

The Senate provisions making it a misdemeanor for any member of the Metropolitan police force to enter into a conspiracy, combination, or agreement with the intent or purpose of substantially interfering with the efficient conduct or operation of the police force in the District of Columbia by a strike or other disturbances is retained.

The conferees accepted the provision of the Senate amendment providing for increased compensation for the watchmen of the Federal parks within the District of Columbia (to be known hereafter as the "United States park police"), which will amount to about $30,000 per year, and the provisions making appropriations to meet the increases of salaries provided for.

The Senate receded from the provisions of the Senate amendment giving increases of compensation to the civilian employees in the police department, awaiting the report of the Joint Commission on Reclassification of Salaries.

JAMES P. WOODS,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, the statement gives a very clear explanation of what was done in conference, and unless there is some question——

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman a question. Is it a fact that the Senate has refused to approve of the conference report?

Mr. MAPES. Not to my knowledge. I do not see how it could, because we have had possession of the papers and the report has not been before the Senate.

Mr. BLANTON. I have not read the evening paper myself, but I heard that to-night's paper had that statement.

Mr. MAPES. I have not heard of it, and it would be impossible, because we have had possession of the papers ever since before the Senate began session this morning. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. MAPES, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the conference report was agreed to was laid on the table.

AMENDING THE FEDERAL RESERVE ACT.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Speaker, I present a conference report on the bill S. 2472, an act to amend the act approved December 23, 1913, known as the Federal reserve act, for printing in the RECORD.

CONFERENCE REPORT.

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill S. 2472 having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its amendments numbered 1, 4, and 17.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the House numbered 2, 3, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 18, 20, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, and 35, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 14: That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 14, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: After the word "such," in said amendment, insert the words "general conditions as to security and such"; and the House agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 15: That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 15, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: After the word "herein" insert a new sentence as follows: "Nothing contained in this section shall be construed to prohibit the Federal Reserve Board, under its power to prescribe rules and regulations, from limiting the aggregate amount of liabilities of any or all classes incurred by the corporation and outstanding at any one time"; and the House agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 16: That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 16, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: After the words "United States" insert the words "authorized by this section"; also strike out the figure "5" and insert "10"; and the House agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 19: That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 19, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out all of the amendment except the word "but" and insert the following: "not engaged in the general business of buying or selling goods, wares, merchandise, or commodities in the United States, and not"; also, after the word "transacting," insert the word "any" and strike out the comma after the words "United States" and before the word "except"; and the House agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 21: That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 21, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: The words "except in a corporation engaged in the business of banking, when 15 per cent of its capital and surplus may be invested," stricken out by the House, to be retained in the bill; and the House agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 22: That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 22, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the word "they" and insert in lieu thereof the words "it either directly or indirectly"; and the House agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 36: That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 36, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: Strike out the proviso at the end of the first paragraph, and insert a period after the word "corporations"; in the first line of the third paragraph insert after the word "institution" the words "principally engaged in foreign business"; and the House agree to the same.

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 2472) to amend the act approved December 23, 1913, known as the Federal reserve act, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conference committee and submitted in the accompanying conference report:

To nearly all of the restrictions and limitations placed in the bill by the House the Senate conferees readily agreed, but in agreeing with some of them further amendments were submitted and agreed to by the House conferees, as follows:

On No. 14: The right to issue debentures, undoubtedly included in the power to borrow, was clearly set forth and limited in this amendment, which is further safeguarded by the insertion of the words "general conditions as to security and such," so that the amendment as agreed to will read: "to issue debentures, bonds, and promissory notes under such general conditions as to security and under such limitations as the Federal Reserve Board may prescribe, but in no case having liabilities outstanding thereon exceeding 10 times its capital stock and surplus."

On No. 15: To this amendment was added a sentence further referring to the limiting of liabilities "of any and all classes" by the Federal Reserve Board.

On No. 16: The addition of the words "authorized by this section" in this amendment was made to conform with the restrictions upon deposits made above in the same paragraph, and the reserve required is raised from 5 to 10 per cent.

On No. 19: Most of the amendment inserted by the House is stricken out as unnecessary and possibly hampering to the successful operation of the financial corporations in competition with similar foreign institutions and with the great private banking firms. In certain South American countries control of trading companies through ownership of stocks is declared to be necessary, and there are certain other countries where American goods, raw materials, or machinery can not be safely sold on long-time credit unless a voice in the management of the properties during the period of the credit can be obtained. In receding from most of this amendment a further amendment was agreed to making certain that none of these subsidiary corporations should engage in the general business of buying and selling goods in the United States.

On No. 22: This amendment further strengthens the safeguards against attempting to control prices of commodities.

On No. 36: The proviso in the taxation paragraph is stricken out. This has reference to the taxation of shares owned by nonresidents.

In the third paragraph, first line, after the word "institution," the words "principally engaged in foreign business" are inserted to prevent a National or State bank of discount and deposit from being converted into an international banking or financial institution under the terms of this section.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. DOWELL, by unanimous consent, was given leave of absence for the remainder of the session.

LEAVE TO EXTEND REMARKS.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on a bill that I have this day introduced.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Reserving the right to object, on what subject is the bill?

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Antisedition, a bill against the Bolsheviks; no politics in it.

Mr. BLANTON. I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a resolution of the Cottage Hill Farmers' Union of my county of which I am very proud.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent to print in the RECORD a resolution by the Cottage Hill Farmers' Union, of Marshall County, Kans. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The resolution is as follows:

At a meeting of Cottage Hill Union, F. E. and C. U. of A., held November 12, 1919, the following resolutions were adopted:

"Resolved, That we resent the implication that the farmers of this country can be yoked up with greed and lawlessness, whether capitalistic, laboristic, or Bolshevistic, and we call upon all in authority to quell lawlessness wherever it may occur with firmness and dispatch, and demand of those in positions of leadership in farmers' organizations and the organizations themselves shall take such action as will place the farmers in the attitude of true, uncompromising Americanism. Be it further

"Resolved, That this union send a copy to the following in authority: Senator CAPPER and Congressman STRONG, also to State President McAuliffe to be published in the Farmers' Union, and a copy be sent to the Blue Rapids Times and the Waterville Telegraph.

"H. T. BRUNNER,
"ED NELSON,
"J. C. STYKER,
"Committee."

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD a tribute to Col. Roosevelt by the Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York was not recognized for that purpose.

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD in which I will include the tribute by the Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection.

There was no objection.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to make a very brief statement as to the business of the session.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent to make a brief statement in regard to the business of the session. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I said this morning that I hoped the House would not attempt to transact any important business for the remainder of the session after the passage of the railroad bill. That is still my view of what should not be done. The Senate is likely to send to the House to-morrow a resolution extending the authority of the War Trade Board over the importation of dyestuffs until the 15th of January. If that comes I hope that it can be agreed upon by unanimous consent. The gentleman from Wisconsin will make the motion to adjourn under which the House will adjourn until noon to-morrow. At that time I hope it may be found possible to obtain an agreement for an adjournment sine die. [Applause.]

If that agreement can not be secured at that time, it is my purpose to seek to secure such an agreement until it is secured, and not to ask the House to transact any important business in the meantime.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may extend my remarks in the RECORD upon the subject of the business of the extra session.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the subject of the business of the session. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

DEPORTATIONS.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, will not the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] consent to have the chairman of the Committee on Rules call up the resolution from the Committee on Rules allowing the Committee on Naturalization and Immigration to sit during the recess?

Mr. MONDELL. I do not imagine there will be any objection to that, if the gentleman will submit a request for unanimous consent to have his committee sit during the recess.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization be permitted to sit during the recess.

Mr. RAKER. Or a subcommittee of that committee.

Mr. MADDEN. Or a subcommittee.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. And to summon witnesses.

Mr. GARRETT. Oh, I shall object to any unanimous consent, but if the chairman of the Committee on Rules desires to submit the resolution, well and good.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. It will take only a minute. If the chairman of the Committee on Rules will submit it, it will soon be disposed of. There is some work to do here, and the House is quite liable to be without a quorum.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, a resolution was agreed to by the Committee on Rules authorizing the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization to sit during the recess of the House, and I will read the resolution.

The SPEAKER. It will only have to be read again by the Clerk, the Chair would suggest to the gentleman.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. If it is offered, of course it will have to be read again.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I think I can cut the thing a little bit short, if I may be permitted to ask the gentleman from Washington a question or two.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Very well.

Mr. GARRETT. This resolution was agreed to in the Committee on Rules unanimously. Since that time—and I wish to be perfectly frank with the gentleman—I have understood that a resolution has been presented to the Committee on Accounts authorizing this Committee on Immigration and Naturalization to employ an attorney or attorneys?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT. And that that was being considered. If that is true, the gentleman from Washington will understand why objection is made. We go a long way in the resolution in that we authorize a legislative committee of the House, for the purposes of legislation, to bring witnesses before it and swear them—a most unusual thing.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT. I want to say to the gentleman with entire frankness that while I agree to that, yet if this is to be followed by a resolution authorizing this committee, for the purpose of preparing legislation, to employ attorneys, I do not feel disposed to let it come up by unanimous consent.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I would say to the gentleman that I have not been able to get the committee together the last two or three days. The only thought of an attorney which was in my mind was to offer the pay of a Member of Congress to an attorney for a week, on some work considered necessary. However, I am quite willing to waive that and get along without an attorney. I waive that provision.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, the Committee on Rules acts in good faith with Members of the House and must have a complete understanding with the Members of the House with respect to what it does. This resolution authorizes the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization to sit during the recess of the House here or elsewhere, and it is the understanding of the Committee on Rules that "elsewhere" meant New York.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. That is true.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. During the recess of the House. It has since been stated that it was contemplated that a committee should go to the Pacific coast.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. That is not the case.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. If that is true, I will not offer the resolution, and I want the chairman of the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization to make a statement with respect to that.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I will say to the gentleman that it is not contemplated to do anything between now and the 1st of December except to make an investigation at Ellis Island and elsewhere in New York.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. That was the statement made.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. In regard to any further resolution as to expenditure, permit me to say that I secured from the rooms of the Committee on Accounts a copy of a resolution previously adopted and adapted it to this situation, with no thought of asking for powers too broad. This committee has no idea of visiting Hawaii or the Pacific coast or Japan or any far-distant place without additional authority from the House of Representatives.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I submit a privileged resolution from the Committee on Rules.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object——

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. This is not subject to objection.

Mr. MAPES. Will the gentleman yield for me to ask the chairman a question?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I will.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

House resolution 379.

Resolved, That the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization of the House of Representatives, or any subcommittee thereof, in the preparation of such legislation as may be advantageous, necessary, and compatible with sound American policy, be authorized to sit during sessions of the House and the recesses of Congress in the city of Washington or elsewhere in the United States, to compel the attendance of witnesses, to send for persons and papers, and to administer oaths to witnesses.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, the purpose of the resolution has been stated on the floor. There is an additional purpose that I think the House and the country should know: Many alien enemies have long since been marked for deportation. These enemies are still within the country. Some of them are at Ellis Island. I think it important to the country to know why these men have not been deported and why greater activity has not been undertaken in the deportation of alien enemies and enemies to the Government and people of the United States. [Applause.] It was with the view of expediting the deportation of undesirable enemies of the United States, alien and otherwise, to look into the question of the citizenship of men who have taken partial steps to securing citizenship, that this resolution was agreed to by the Committee on Rules authorizing the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization to take steps in that direction.

Mr. McFADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I will.

Mr. McFADDEN. My attention has been called to the situation in New York, and I want to ask the gentleman whether this resolution will remedy this situation. I understand at the present time that in New York at the Bureau of Naturalization there are now between 125 and 130 declarations of intentions daily, and that from 40 to 50 per cent of the applications are avowed Socialists, who are sent there by the New York Socialist organization to become citizens. There is no question, according to the answers given, that they are enemies of our Government and that something should be done by the Congress to remedy the situation. Will this reach that class of people?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. One purpose of this resolution is to acquaint the membership of the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization with just such a situation and enable them to prepare legislation to meet it.

Mr. McFADDEN. I am heartily in favor of it.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT].

The CHAIRMAN. There is an amendment to the rule which the Clerk failed to report. The Clerk will now report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: After the word "thereof," line 3, insert the words "for the purpose of examining the proceedings under which deportations are made under the act of February 5, 1917," so that as amended the resolution will read:

"Resolved, That the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization of the House of Representatives, or any subcommittee thereof, for the purpose of examining the proceedings under which deportations are made under the act of February 5, 1917, in the preparation of such legislation," etc.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, this resolution is a very unusual one. Once before during this session the Committee on Rules has reported a resolution authorizing the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, for legislative purposes alone, to summon witnesses, to send for books and papers, to administer oaths, and so forth. That is a very unusual proceeding. This is the second resolution of that character, authorizing this Committee on Immigration and Naturalization to send for persons and papers, to administer oaths, and so forth, for legislative purposes, and in order to look into the proceedings in reference to the deportations that should have been made. Now, I think that there are two reasons why deportations have not been made. I do not know whether I should go into that or not, but I think it is due very largely to the personal disposition of that gentleman who was at the port of New York—I have forgotten his name——

SEVERAL MEMBERS. Howe.

Mr. GARRETT. I think very largely due to him in the first place; he is out of the service now, and I think very fortunately for the service, from what I have learned here on the floor of the House. [Applause.] The other reason is the lack of funds to carry out this deportation.

To be entirely frank about it, I do not think this committee in its investigations is going to find anything much more than that, so far as I have been able to learn about it. However, it was agreed by the minority members of the Committee on Rules not to oppose this resolution if the majority decided to take the responsibility of passing it and not to object to it; we agreed that we would share the responsibility with them. I will put it that way. I did learn subsequently that this resolution was pending before the Committee on Accounts, which would involve a lot of expense; and while it has not been the policy, is not now the policy, of the minority to oppose the majority in any investigation of departments that it may see fit to make, at the same time upon this proposition, which is declared to be legislative in intention and not for the purpose of investigating expenditures, I did not feel that I wanted to share, and the minority, so far as I can speak for them, did not feel that they wanted to share, the responsibility of going into the Treasury for money to pay the expenses of an attorney, and for that reason I interposed my objection.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. I want to say to the gentleman that in my judgment until this service is taken out of the Department of Labor and placed in the Department of Justice we shall not get any anarchists deported. [Applause.]

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution as amended.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

EXPENSES OF THE COMMITTEE ON IMMIGRATION AND NATURALIZATION.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I present a privileged resolution from the Committee on Accounts.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan presents a privileged report from the Committee on Accounts, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Accounts, to whom was referred House resolution 382, authorizing the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization to make expenditures from the contingent fund of the House in carrying out the provisions of House resolution 319, after having had the same under consideration, recommend its passage, as follows:

"House resolution 382.

"Resolved, That the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, or any subcommittee thereof, be, and is hereby, authorized and empowered to employ such stenographic, clerical, and legal assistance, and to have such printing and binding done as it may deem necessary.

"All expenses that may be incurred by said committee, including the expenses of said committee or any subcommittee thereof when sitting outside of the District of Columbia, shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House of Representatives on vouchers signed by the chairman of said committee, or by the chairman of a subcommittee, where such expenses are incurred by such subcommittee."

With the following committee amendments:

In line 3, after the word "empowered," insert the words "under the provisions of House resolution 379."

In line 6, after the word "committee," insert the words "under the provisions of said House resolution 379."

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I have a further amendment to carry out the understanding that was had here on the floor.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MAPES: Line 4, after the word "clerical," strike out the words "and legal."

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman state what House resolution 379 is? Will he state what that covered?

Mr. MAPES. That is the one that was just adopted by the House.

Mr. WALSH. Authorizing the committee to sit during the sessions and recess of the House?

Mr. MAPES. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the last amendment by the gentleman from Michigan, striking out the words "and legal."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MAPES. I ask unanimous consent that the word "and" be inserted before the word "clerical."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent that the word "and" be inserted before the word "clerical." Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the other amendments.

The other committee amendments were agreed to.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Accounts a question. Does not the gentleman think the resolution ought to limit the amount of money to be expended?

Mr. MAPES. The limitation is in the original resolution; and I might say for the purposes of the RECORD that the Committee on Accounts did not report the resolution allowing legal assistance until they were assured that the expenditures for an attorney would be very small, not to exceed at the outside $500.

Mr. CALDWELL. This carries a proposition to employ stenographers.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. That service will be required in order to enable the members of the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization who are willing to stay to perform this work to be back here with the proposed legislation ready the first week in December.

Mr. CALDWELL. I think there ought to be a limitation, and I therefore move as an amendment that the moneys expended under this resolution shall not exceed $5,000.

Mr. MAPES. I move the previous question on this resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan moves the previous question.

Mr. CALDWELL. I have the floor.

The SPEAKER. The Chair was not aware that the gentleman had the floor.

Mr. CALDWELL. I asked recognition and got it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognized the gentleman to ask a question. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAPES] has the floor, and he moves the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 8 o'clock and 45 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Tuesday, November 18, 1919, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting report of an inspection of the several branches of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers (H. Doc. No. 299); to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed.

2. A letter from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting a tentative draft of a bill to amend the act of February 28, 1919, entitled "An act permitting any person who served in the United States Army, Navy, or Marine Corps in the present war to retain his uniform and personal equipment and to wear the same under certain conditions" (H. Doc. No. 300), to the Committee on Naval Affairs and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. VOLSTEAD, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 10074) to enlarge the jurisdiction of the municipal court of the District of Columbia, and to regulate appeals from the judgments of said court, and for other purposes, reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 472), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. DICKINSON of Missouri: A bill (H. R. 10608) for the purchase of a site for a public building at Pleasant Hill, Cass County, Mo.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. McKELLAR. The junior Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECKHAM], the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS], the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN], the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS], and the senior Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH] are detained from the Senate on official business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-three Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present. The pending amendment is the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] to the amendment offered by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER]. The amendment and the amendment to the amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] proposes as an additional reservation the following:

The United States withholds its assent to Part XIII (articles 387 to 427, inclusive) of said treaty unless Congress, by act or joint resolution, shall hereafter make provision for representation in the organization established by said Part XIII, and in such event the participation of the United States will be governed and conditioned by the provisions of such act or joint resolution.

The Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] proposes as a substitute the following:

The United States withholds its assent to Part XIII, comprising articles 387 to 427, inclusive, of the said treaty of peace, and excepts and reserves the same from the act of ratification, and the United States declines to participate in any way in the said general conference, or to participate in the election of the governing body of the international labor office constituted by said articles, and declines in any way to contribute or be bound to contribute to the expenditures of said general conference or international labor office.

Mr. MCCUMBER. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I shall vote for the substitute offered by the Senator from Utah to the proposed reservation affecting Part XIII. If that is defeated, I shall vote for the reservation offered by the Senator from North Dakota. Whether that reservation is adopted or rejected, I am compelled to cast a negative vote upon the treaty if it retains some articles of the part to which that reservation is directed unless they shall be materially modified by specific reservations directed thereto.

My understanding of the effect of the substitute is that it excludes Part XIII from the treaty, the Senate withholding its assent therefrom. I am convinced, as I have heretofore declared during the consideration of the treaty, that the United States can not afford to accept this part of the treaty and at the same time do justice to its own people and preserve unimpaired the institutions of the Republic. My apprehensions regarding the subject may be unfounded or unduly exaggerated, and I hope they are, especially if this treaty is to become the supreme law of the land. But if an investigation, attended by a sincere desire to approve the treaty, and to which I have brought a mind entirely free from prejudice, means anything to the individual, I am carried to that conclusion.

I have heretofore analyzed some of the articles in Part XIII. Some Senators did me the honor to give attention to my remarks and others, I hope, have since read what I then had to say. However that may be, I shall not weary the Senate by repetition except in so far as it may be necessary to make my attitude clear.

I am unable, Mr. President, to support the provisions of the treaty which in effect confers sovereignty upon each and every organization of employers and employees throughout the world, clothing them with several authority to summon members of the league before a tribunal of its own creation to stand trial as an ordinary litigant, bearing, of course, the consequences which the tribunal may dictate as essential to the observance of its judgment. It is a fundamental principle of constitutional law that the sovereign can not be sued by the subject. No association however strong, no corporation however extended its activities, can summon a State of the Union or the United States to the bar of any tribunal. And that is as it should be.

Some years ago, before this generation, a constitutional amendment was deemed essential that the States might be forever exempt from judicial proceedings instituted against them in the courts of the United States. The arguments upon which the need for that amendment was based are infinitely stronger in support of the proposition that no organization, and particularly no foreign organization, should be clothed with such power; yet it is the fact that such a covenant appears in Part XIII of the treaty of peace.

I have had occasion, Mr. President, to emphasize the tendency of all of these organizations whenever social conditions, the supposed execution of an obnoxious law, or the laxity of executing a popular one to appeal to "direct action," as it is called, rather than to abide by the slower, more just, and orderly processes of the law.

Mr. HARDING. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. THOMAS. I yield.

Mr. HARDING. I dislike to scold, but I came across the Chamber to sit immediately in front of the speaker in order to hear him, and I can not distinctly hear him even at this distance.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Well, the Senate prides itself on being a self-governing body, and the Chair does not feel called upon to sit here and hammer the desk all the while in order to get Senators to behave themselves.

Mr. HARDING. If the Chair will permit, then, I shall repeat the request for order from time to time.

Mr. THOMAS. Hence, Mr. President, I assert that this power, if granted, will be subject to continuous, chronic, and perpetual exercise, and especially against the principal allied and associated powers. They will be summoned not only in succession but by repeated contemporaneous complaints to answer charges of every description, thereby placing the sovereignties of the world in a continual and chronic state of defensive litigation, the expense of which we can neither foresee nor prescribe, unless as to ourselves the Congress shall emphatically refuse to enact financial legislation whereby the public revenues shall be diverted from their legitimate purposes to those I am considering.

The spectacle of Great Britain, the United States, Japan, Italy, and France, or even Siam and Liberia haled before a foreign tribunal to answer complaints made by societies foreign to themselves is so monstrous, both in its conception and in its consequences, that I am amazed that such provisions should have been tolerated, much less introduced, in a great world treaty, whatever their apparent necessity. Hence, Mr. President, any article of this treaty permitting such consequences or possibilities, supplemented as they are by others permitting single individuals as delegates to the general conference to do the same thing, should not, in my judgment, receive the approval of any Senator disposed to give a moment's reflection to the subject.

This proposed league of nations, according to its terms, is confined to members of the league, both present and prospective. Certain nations have been invited to join; others have not been mentioned; but the general labor conference, now in session, notwithstanding we are still considering the treaty, has received the delegates of three nations not members of the league into that body, two of them being enemy countries, the other, Finland, not yet receiving that recognition which is essential to enable it even to become a candidate for league membership. The misfortune is that in carrying out this policy the members or delegates to the conference have the sanction of a resolution of the peace conference at Versailles, expressly recommending that policy. If Finland can be admitted, so can Turkey, so can Russia, so can all peoples of the world pretending to have a government of their own. Our legislation can be controlled as to all matters of labor concern in the United States and our sovereignty can be haled before these foreign tribunals by delegates or by any delegate to the conference, whether such delegate represents members of the union or nations which are not members of the union.

To illustrate, the delegate or delegates from Finland may individually or collectively file complaint against the United States that it is not carrying out or effectuating some covenant or the recommendation made by the general conference and subsequently adopted by the various countries. Of course, I do not contend that the proposals for covenants or draft conventions, as they are called, by the general conference bind this Government until we shall adopt them; but when Brockdorff-Rantzau on the 22d of May protested against the incorporation into the league of Part XIII because its conference did not include all nations and also because the conference to be created was not given power of independent legislative action, Clemenceau, speaking for the conference at Versailles, answered that such power of independent legislation was recommended in a resolution adopted by the commission preparing Part XIII and intimated that the right of independent legislation was only a question of time.

I put a copy of that resolution in the RECORD of the 31st of October. The Labor Union Internationale, which is but another name for the international socialists of Europe, in their previous conference at Berne especially demanded that program, and they have followed it up by announcing that in the future the labor delegations to the conference who act under and by its direction, which, of course, means the exclusion of labor, except in so far as that body may be representative of certain organizations, intend to press, and will press, the extension of the provisions of Part XIII so as to give to the resolutions and enactments of the general labor conference eo ipso the power, force, and effect of international law. It is to that end we are drifting; it is to that end we will surely come, in my judgment, if by this treaty we erect one great class of people in the world into a separate body and endow them with independent legislative power, which means legislation inimical to everyone else, not only in the nations inside but the nations outside of the league. This, to my mind, constitutes through Part XIII a system which creates not a supernation composed of a class common to all countries, and recognized as possessing rights peculiar to themselves, requiring their own recommendations and their own legislation for their preservation and advancement.

Such a government would be sufficiently sinister if it were proposed seriously by this Nation as affecting itself or by a single State in the Union as affecting itself, much more as a grand world scheme, denominated by the President as labor's Magna Charta, yet bound in its operation either to deliver the world to the purposes of international socialism or by the enactment of class legislation, the adoption of which can be forced by the use of the boycott, the strike, or both combined, operating upon every nation whose people without the power or the will at whatever sacrifice to resist such innovation. The result is inevitable. The supernation becomes the supreme one or the subject nation must throw it off. In either alternative the peace of the world can not endure.

Mr. President, in my judgment, the way to avoid such possibilities is to begin at the beginning and take no chances. If Mr. Clemenceau speaks for France in his answer to Brockdorff-Rantzau, that is the concern of the French Republic, not ours; if he is authorized to speak for Great Britain, very good; but he should have no right to speak for us upon a subject involving our fundamental rights and ignoring our constitutional limitations. Only the judicial and legislative representatives and spokesmen of our own people may do so.

Mr. President, it is for these reasons particularly that I hope to see the substitute of the Senator from Utah adopted; and if not, then I ask the Senate to support the reservation offered by the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. THOMAS. I yield.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I find a provision in Part XIII, bearing on the point the Senator has just been making, which reads:

> If on a recommendation no legislative or other action is taken to make a recommendation effective, or if the draft convention fails to obtain the consent of the authority or authorities within whose competence the matter lies, no further obligation shall rest upon the member.

For instance, if the delegates of the United States did not agree to whatever resolutions or agreements the conference had reached, then, according to the provision I have read, there would be no further obligation.

Mr. THOMAS. Undoubtedly; undoubtedly; and that is the reservation which it is proposed by the resolution of those drafting this part of the treaty to repeal by clothing the recommendations of the general conference with the force of international law. Now, you tell me, and I concede it, that the operation of that clause of article 405 is a safeguard, to which we must cling if these reservations are to be rejected. But let me answer the Senator by putting a suppositious case.

Suppose that the general conference shall agree upon and recommend legislation to the members regarding some subject. It makes no difference what it is so long as it is within the purview of the general purpose of Part XIII to bring about strict uniformity of labor conditions throughout the world. It is passed by a two-thirds vote of the members interested in the adoption of such legislation or the acceptance of such a covenant, and we will say that behind it are Great Britain, France, Italy, Japan, Belgium, and our other competitor nations, and the United States refuses to accept it. What then? Does not the Senator know that the whole power and force of this international creation, the tremendous organizations behind it and with which ours are identified, because they are all international, will, by political and economic influences, bring pressure to bear upon the Government of the United States to force its adoption? It may not succeed; but we can easily understand the social, industrial, and political disorders and upheavals and possible bloodshed which must inevitably follow the adoption and enforcement of such a policy.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, the point I was getting at was that in any event each sovereign power has the right to accept or reject; and if it rejects, then no obligation rests upon that sovereign power.

Mr. THOMAS. That is true; but that power is still subject to the pressure of those tremendous influences which are organized to make such recommendations universal, not only among the members of the league but among those nations which lie outside of it. And right there I call the attention of the Senator to the closing sentence in article 396. The functions of the international labor office constitute the subject of article 396, and it is there provided that—

Generally, in addition to the functions set out in this article it shall have such other powers and duties as may be assigned to it by the conference.

No limitation whatever is placed upon that grant of authority; and the general conference, by a majority vote—because the two-thirds required by Part XIII is limited to these recommendations for draft conventions—may endow the international labor office with powers and authority which, however unconstitutional and unheard-of, that body will exercise, if possible, and have behind it the united force of the class in whose interest and for whose benefit Part XIII is specifically designed and by whose representatives it was prepared; for when Mr. Gompers returned to this country he said: "The provisions of Part XIII were drawn by labor for labor." I am not criticizing that. The commission delegated to draft it were representatives of labor, and they would have been unmindful of their trust and of their responsibilities if they had not sought by every possible means so to frame these articles of Part XIII as to safeguard and promote the interests committed to their keeping and which they were designed to subserve.

But, Mr. President, I must pass from that subject to another before I resume my seat. At the risk of repetition, I want again to refer briefly to articles 423 and 426 of Part XIII.

Article 423 reads:

Any question or dispute—

Not some questions, but any question or dispute—relating to the interpretation of this part of the present treaty or of any subsequent convention concluded by the members in pursuance of the provisions of this part of the present treaty shall be referred for decision to the permanent court of international justice.

Section 426 provides that—

Pending the creation of a permanent court of international justice, disputes which, in accordance with this part of the present treaty, would be submitted to it for decision will be referred to a tribunal of three persons appointed by the council of the league of nations.

If these articles mean anything—and the language is perfectly clear—they mean that we must surrender or delegate to a tribunal to be hereafter created, and pending its creation to a tribunal of three to be appointed by the executive council, every question or dispute affecting the interpretation not of the treaty but of this part of the treaty. Some of its provisions may be unconstitutional, or that question may be raised. Some of its provisions may seriously affect in their private capacity the lives or property or business of citizens of the United States. Some may involve great problems of international concern about which heretofore the judicial power of the United States had been invoked, and properly invoked, for their solution; but these articles would deprive the Supreme Court of the United States or the other courts created by Congress under the Constitution of their jurisdiction over such disputes or such questions, and transfer them in the first instance to the jurisdiction of a tribunal which may be composed of three foreigners, and ultimately to an international tribunal upon whose bench we may or may not be represented.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator if he thinks the decision of the council or the selection by the council of this tribunal of three persons would be accomplished by a majority vote of the council?

Mr. THOMAS. No, I do not; and that is comforting.

Mr. FLETCHER. Or would it take a unanimous vote of the council?

Mr. THOMAS. I have heretofore said the introduction of the principle of unanimity into this treaty, while it may prevent the creation of such a tribunal, is a principle which tends to make the whole scheme unworkable. The unanimity required as a condition of affirmative action by the Polish Diet was the prime cause of the collapse of the old Polish Kingdom, and here its operation will be challenged, fortunately, in an instance of this kind; but I do not think we should take any chances upon that, for if the treaty is ratified, and the ratifications exchanged, our member upon the executive council, if he performs his duty as he should, must agree, because the treaty requires him to agree, to the creation of this tribunal. He may see to it that one American is upon it. He can not demand more than that; but, unfortunately, the principle of unanimity does not apply expressly to the action of the tribunal itself when created. In other words, this international tribunal or the temporary tribunal of three may decide and enforce its judgment by a majority vote or majority decision, just as the Supreme Court of the United States and other courts do.

But independently of that, Mr. President, I want to put the question fairly and squarely, particularly to the lawyers who occupy seats in this distinguished body—men of learning, men versed in the principles and practice of constitutional law and construction—whether the proposals involved in sections 423 and 426 do not conflict with the Constitution of the United States, in that we propose to delegate a part, a fundamental part, an indispensable part of the judicial power to a foreign tribunal?

"Oh," you may reply, "the Supreme Court of the United States will never permit that"; and I quite agree that until it degenerates to a degree that is unthinkable it will sustain the integrity of our institutions of the country and insist upon the exercise of their judicial functions. But, Mr. President, shall we escape our own responsibility and vote for two articles in this treaty that seem to infringe upon and violate the Constitution of the United States merely because we can take refuge and the country can take refuge in the ultimate action of the Supreme Court? We also have sworn to support the Constitution of the United States. Upon us, also, is the duty of vindicating the integrity of our institutions; and we can not, if we would, escape that responsibility by comforting our consciences with the reflection that we have passed it to the judicial authority, satisfied that they will sustain it with courage and unflinching devotion.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. THOMAS. I yield for a moment.

Mr. REED. In what way could this question really get before the Supreme Court practically? I can conceive phases of it, but in its broad aspects, how could our Supreme Court protect us?

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, there are a number of ways in which the Supreme Court could acquire jurisdiction of the question, particularly if some recommendation or draft convention were adopted by the United States which was challenged by one of the States of the Union or by any particular line of commercial activity. I think they could question its application by assailing its unconstitutionality, and there are many other methods.

Mr. REED. I only wanted to direct the Senator's attention to that point. I assume that phases of it, details of it, could get before our Supreme Court; but if this thing is set up, if it undertakes its general broad purpose, can our Supreme Court afford us any adequate protection?

Mr. THOMAS. It can not afford us any immediate protection. At one time I flattered myself that the old doctrine of no wrong without a remedy was a rule admitting of very few exceptions. Of recent years I am somewhat doubtful of the universal integrity of that rule, but I will trust to the American people to devise methods, and effective methods, of securing a judicial interpretation of these parts of the treaty if necessary.

I am aware that the Supreme Court decided, and properly decided, some years ago, that the construction and operation of treaties, viewed as contracts between independent nations, are questions for the political departments of the contracting powers and not for the courts. Assuming the universality of that principle, there still remains the infraction of the exercise of that power, the power of political construction, by the delegation of jurisdiction of all these disputes and questions to this international tribunal. So it impinges not only upon the judicial power but upon the political power of construction, the chief one to be applied to treaties, except in case of disputes involving personal or general rights.

I am aware also, Mr. President, that many treaties in the past contained, and very properly contained, provisions for referring certain disputes between nations to the arbitrament of tribunals either existing or to be named. But those are treaties establishing procedure for disputes that may arise independent of any treaty, as well as those arising under them. Questions of interpretation, disputes as to the application of the text of treaties, and, above all, the mighty question of the relation of the treaties to the limitations of the Constitution are so clearly within the province of the judicial power of this country that it is not necessary to waste the time of the Senate in a citation of authority in support of the proposition. The fundamental fact stands out that by sections 423 and 426, applicable to only a part of the treaty, but a very important part, we propose to clothe a tribunal not yet created, and until created and filled to a commission of three to be appointed by some other power, to determine for all time and for us, regardless of their effect upon our institutions and our organic law, controversies of the most tremendous character, controversies of comparative unimportance, all controversies which are the subject of dispute or contention regarding this part of the treaty.

For one, Mr. President, I am unable in the absence of a reservation such as is suggested by the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] to give the sanction of my affirmative vote to a treaty containing such a provision. We can not delegate any authority, executive, legislative, or judicial, to any custodians, foreign or domestic. They have been distributed by the organic act of the Republic. Only the people, through organic changes, can disturb them.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Harding	McNary	Simmons
Ball	Harris	Moses	Smith, Ariz.
Bankhead	Harrison	Myers	Smith, Ga.
Borah	Henderson	Nelson	Smith, Md.
Brandegee	Hitchcock	New	Smith, S. C.

Frelinghuysen	Lodge	Reed	Watson
Gay	McCormick	Robinson	Williams
Gerry	McCumber	Sheppard	Wolcott
Gronna	McKellar	Sherman
Hale	McLean	Shields

The VICE PRESIDENT. Ninety Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I ask the attention of the Senate and each Senator for a moment, to explain the difference between the reservation which I offered and the substitute offered by the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], and I shall take only a minute to explain the difference.

The real difference, Mr. President, is the difference between the use of an ax and an anesthetic in performing a surgical operation. Both have exactly the same effect in reducing the patient to a state of insensibility. The difference between the two, however, is that one kills while the other leaves open the door of hope. The Senator's substitute provides that—

> The United States declines to participate in any way in the said general conference, or to participate in the election of the governing body of the international labor office—

And so forth.

The Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] was correct when he said the effect of it is a rejection of Part XIII.

The reservation which I offered reads this way:

> The United States withholds its assent to Part XIII (articles 387 to 427, inclusive) of said treaty, unless Congress, by act or joint resolution, shall hereafter make provision for representation in the organization established by said Part XIII—

And that is not all—> and in such event the participation of the United States will be governed and conditioned by the provisions of such act or joint resolution.

Mr. President, there are a great many labor organizations which feel that some benefit might be derived at some time in the future by a world's conference on the question of labor and conditions of labor. They, I think, as a rule, do not want this particular part of the treaty; but I want to leave open the door so that at any future time the Congress of the United States may say to what extent we will enter into such a conference, and to what extent we will allow our representatives to bind us in any matter on such a conference.

I think that ought to be done. I do not want to offend needlessly any of these organizations which have a hope to secure some benefit. Therefore I think that while the two reservations both bring about the same result, and nothing can be done unless Congress hereafter provides the necessary legislation and governs and controls the right and authority by that Congress, we ought not to say that we shall never have anything to do with the matter in any way, shape, or form. That is the real difference between the two.

I believe we can secure some good by an international labor conference, but it is not necessary that the Nation should be made subservient to any organization in order to secure that end.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, as between the ax and the anesthetic, so far as Part XIII of the peace treaty is concerned, I prefer the ax. I think it would be more effective.

I shall support the substitute offered by the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] for the reservation offered by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER]. I think it vastly better and more effective. If that shall fail to be adopted, then I shall vote for the reservation offered by the Senator from North Dakota.

If this supergovernment which is contemplated by Part XIII of the peace treaty should be erected, I think it would simply be an international body of official meddlers. I think it would be continually meddling with the industrial conditions of the world and would keep them in a continual stew and upheaval, in a condition of uncertainty, just as they are now in this country. I think it is intended for that purpose by some who are interested in it and think it would serve that purpose. I believe it is intended by the radical element of labor as a means to enable it to put its heel on the neck of the world just as it has its heel on the neck of this country to-day, and I believe it would serve that purpose. I believe it would afford constant opportunity for complaint against industrial conditions of the different countries of the world and be the means of bringing those countries to the bar of this supergovernment which it seeks to erect.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. MYERS. I yield, with pleasure.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Of course I take it that the Senator has looked up the method of organization and membership of this international labor conference?

Mr. MYERS. Yes; I have read Part XIII.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It is proposed that the Governments are to appoint and the employers are to appoint and the employees are to appoint, which gives a two-thirds majority to the employers and the Governments, if united, or to labor and the representatives of Government, if they are united, or to the employers and the employees against the Government, if they are united. How could the radical element of the world in labor take possession of and control a body two-thirds of which are appointed, one half by the Governments of the world in their official capacity and the other half by the employers in equal number?

Mr. MYERS. Yes; I know all of that. Much would depend on who might represent the public. In the recent conference between capital and labor which assembled in Washington one of the representatives of the public was Mr. B. M. Jewell, who, I believe, said that if the President pursued a certain proposed course regarding the railroads last August they would be tied up so tight they would never run again. I understand Mr. William Bullitt and the Rev. Dr. Herron have also been representatives of this Government in international matters.

Mr. THOMAS. If the Senator will permit an interruption——

Mr. MYERS. Certainly; with pleasure.

Mr. THOMAS. I think it might be appropriate to add that when the commission prepared Part XIII and presented it to the conference at Versailles, signed by Mr. Gompers and the secretary of the league, the statement was made that, inasmuch as labor rather than the employers would probably control the Government delegates, they accepted that division of delegates.

Mr. MYERS. I think there is a strong probability of it. I think this tribunal would keep the industrial world in a state of perpetual stew, unrest, and uncertainty, and would thus interfere very materially with the reconstruction and development of the world.

I think most of these bodies of arbitration, compromise, mediation, and conciliation have that effect. I believe most of them result in more harm than good, because always there are certain to be very radical elements in those conferences, and, while they may not be in the majority, they have the opportunity to raise questions that neutralize any good that might otherwise result from the conferences.

I think that was the case with the conference recently called by the President between capital and labor which assembled in Washington. In that conference representatives of labor injected into it the issue of determining the steel strike and insisted that it be settled by that body in the way that the strikers wanted it settled, and in doing so they simply broke up the conference and aborted and neutralized whatever good might otherwise have come from that conference, which was called, I have no doubt, for a good purpose and from the best of motives; but it resulted in nothing except harm. If that conference had not been called, I believe the steel strike would be ended to-day.

I think that is the way with most of these conferences in which it is sought to reconcile irreconcilable forces and interests.

There is a conference now going on in the city of Washington that, I believe, is likely to result in more harm than good. That is the conference between the coal-mine operators and the striking miners which is being conducted by the Secretary of Labor. The President of the United States, the Secretary of Labor, the Attorney General, and a high court have all declared that the coal strike is an unlawful strike. If I am correctly informed, the Secretary of Labor has said that the coal miners were working under a contract which has not expired, and which will not expire until peace is declared or until the 31st of March, 1920.

The Attorney General has said the same thing. Judge Anderson decided the same thing. If those declarations are true; if the President of the United States, the Secretary of Labor, the Attorney General, and Judge Anderson were right in their pronouncements upon the strike; if the strike is unlawful and in violation of contract, then those miners should have been told to go back to work and fill their contract, and should have been told that if they did not do so other laborers would be put in their places to work the mines, and that, if necessary, martial law would be declared and the United States Army would be called out to protect the strike breakers from interference. Instead of that they are called into a conference and apparently the Secretary of Labor is seeking to get for them a part of their demands in violation of their contract—not all of them, but a part of them.

I believe that such an example, if successful, will have a bad effect upon the country. It will encourage other workers who have contracts to strike in violation of their contracts, in the belief that the Department of Labor or some other mediating authority will call them into conference and that thereby they will get a part of what they are not entitled to under their contracts.

It will encourage men to act on the theory that if I sue a man for $500, when I know he does not owe me a cent, some mediating board or power will call us into conference and advise the defendant that he would better pay me $50 that he does not owe me than to hire a lawyer and go into court and defend the case, especially if I am not good for a judgment against me for costs.

In my humble opinion, if the Department of Labor would devote more effort to deporting anarchists and less to trying to get strikers engaged in an unlawful strike a part of their demands, which are inconsistent with the terms of their contract, it would be doing more good for the country. The coal situation, in my opinion, is a situation in which a little Grover Cleveland backbone would be useful. I believe it would be more beneficial to the country than all of the conferences that may be held.

I believe it would be just so with the proposed international conference if it were established. In my opinion it would afford an opportunity for the international industrial boycott and would enable the freaks, lunatics, and Bolshevists of Europe to make all sorts of demands upon and complaints against the stable governments of the earth. Under it some socialist government in Europe might undertake to make trouble for this country because the infamous, red-handed murderer, assassin, anarchist, Tom Mooney, is not granted a new trial or a pardon, and might seek to bring this country to bar before this tribunal to defend its action.

Complaint might be made of this Government that it does not grant the demands of the steel strikers or the coal strikers or some other strikers. This country might have to go to the expense and trouble of appearing before this tribunal and defending itself for not having legislation demanded by strikers.

If we should have a nation-wide railroad strike, which we are liable to have at any time—and I see, by the way, it is reported that the Director General of Railroads has just put $3,000,000 a month more upon the tax-ridden people of this country to go to the railroad employees in the hope of persuading them to postpone for a while the nation-wide railroad strike which they have declared inevitable unless they get all of their demands.

Thirty-six million dollars a year by a stroke of the pen, if reports be true, put upon the people and consumers of this country for the benefit of the railroad employees, notwithstanding the railroads are being conducted by the Government, I understand, at a loss of a million dollars a day. As I started to say, if repeated and continued demands of railroad employees should not be granted, and there should be a nation-wide railroad strike, complaint might be made by some socialist government in Europe or some other part of the world that we were not granting legislation demanded by railroad strikers. Our country might be brought to the bar of this tribunal to answer to that. It would simply mean, I apprehend, an interminable and unending lot of strife and contention and commotion, disputes, and controversies, and the keeping of the entire industrial world in a chaotic state. Any European socialistic sniper could from that ambush fire a shot at the industries of any country of the world that he chose to try to stir up trouble for.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to his colleague?

Mr. MYERS. I yield, with pleasure.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I have not studied this article with the care with which I should like to have studied it if I had had the time at my disposal, but I desire to say to my colleague that I have not been able to discover in my study of it that such a proposition as he suggests could by any possibility come before the tribunal.

Mr. MYERS. I have read this part of the treaty in full, but I have not read it recently and have not all of the details in my mind.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I may say to the Senator that I can not think that he advisedly informs the Senate that all disputes respecting particular wages that should be paid to certain employees could come for adjudication before any tribunal constituted under this part of the treaty.

Mr. MYERS. As I have said, I have read the article in full with painstaking and care but not recently, and I do not remember all of its details. I will say, however——

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I inquire of my colleague if I am incorrect in this statement: The conference recommends a draft convention; it may make recommendations as to certain legislation or it may make a recommendation of a draft convention, which is practically a treaty. If we enter into a draft convention or a treaty, under which we obligate ourselves to pass certain legislation and we do not enact that legislation, then the particular member may be cited before the tribunal to show cause why it does not enact the legislation; or if it has enacted it and it does not carry it out, it may be cited before the tribunal. Is not that the limit of the jurisdiction of the tribunal?

Mr. MYERS. I was going to say that I was basing my assumptions upon statements made this morning on the floor by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS]. I am not quoting him, but as I caught the drift of his argument it was that any government which was represented on the tribunal might make complaint against any other government, a member of the tribunal, that it had not lived up to any principle laid down by the tribunal.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I will advise my colleague that there is not anything of the kind in Part XIII. It is simply provided that the conference may pursue one of two courses: It may either recommend legislation to the various members—which is a mere recommendation of legislation; they may adopt that recommendation or not, as they see fit—or it may recommend a draft convention, which is a treaty, proposing to the various nations that they enter into a treaty by which they shall obligate themselves to enact certain legislation. If they do enter into the treaty by which they obligate themselves to enact the legislation, and they do not enact the legislation or they do not enforce the legislation which they do enact, they can then be cited before the tribunal for adjudication. That is all. The only two questions that can come up are, first, did you enact the legislation that you agreed by treaty that you would enact, or have you enforced the legislation which you have enacted?

Mr. MYERS. I take it from my understanding of the matter that if a government is represented on the tribunal and the tribunal, by a majority vote, recommends the enactment of certain legislation, that government is bound by it, whether it agrees to enact the legislation or not?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I am glad to correct my colleague about that. There is not anything of that kind in Part XIII.

Mr. MYERS. Then, my colleague informs me that a member nation can not be bound by anything in the way of legislation recommended by the tribunal to which it does not agree?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. To which it does not agree by treaty. I will read the article if my colleague will permit me.

Mr. MYERS. I shall be glad to have my colleague read the article.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I read from article 405:

In the case of a draft convention—

Which is a treaty—

the member will, if it obtains the consent of the authority or authorities within whose competence the matter lies, communicate the formal ratification of the convention to the secretary-general and will take such action as may be necessary to make effective the provisions of such convention.

If on a recommendation no legislative or other action is taken to make a recommendation effective, or if the draft convention fails to obtain the consent of the authority or authorities within whose competence the matter lies, no further obligation shall rest upon the member.

Then, article 416 provides:

In the event of any member failing to take the action required by article 405, with regard to a recommendation or draft convention, any other member shall be entitled to refer the matter to the permanent court of international justice.

Article 417 reads:

The decision of the permanent court of international justice in regard to a complaint or matter which has been referred to it in pursuance of article 415 or article 416 shall be final.

That is, the matter which is to be submitted to the court of international justice.

Mr. MYERS. I take it under that, Mr. President, that if this Government should agree to enact legislation of a certain character and the tribunal was of the opinion or a complaint was made that this country had not carried out that legislation in a proper spirit or had not enacted it in the way it was intended by the tribunal, a complaint might be made against this country and it might be brought to bar by the tribunal.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The Senator is quite right.

Mr. MYERS. So it would be a question of whether this country had carried out the spirit of the decree of the tribunal, and the tribunal would be the judge as to whether this Nation had carried out its spirit and enacted the legislation in the way that the tribunal thinks it ought to be enacted and whether or not the acts of this country complied with the interpretation of the tribunal.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, my colleague has been very kind to me in permitting interruptions.

Mr. MYERS. I gladly yield further to my colleague.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. But let me say to my colleague that is just exactly the case with respect to every other treaty that we make with any nation. If we do not carry out the treaty, the other nation can cite us before the league to show cause why we did not carry it out.

Mr. MYERS. I do not know of any other tribunal, however, which assumes the power, scope, and jurisdiction to make recommendations about any and all kinds of social legislation and to be the judge of whether or not it is enacted in the spirit that was intended. This provision covers a broader scope, a wider field, and gives rise to the possibility of more misinterpretation and more trouble, I think, than the provisions of any other treaty ever entered into by any nations of the earth. It extends to any and all subjects which it may take up, which may relate in any way whatever to the cause of labor or anything incidental or appurtenant to it; and it seems to me that it offers a more potential field of trouble, of complaint, and of controversy than any other international agreement that ever was contemplated in the world. Whether or not complaint or charges would properly come within its provisions, there would be nothing to prevent meddlesome delegates from attempting to make them and thereby stir up trouble. I believe it would give rise to endless trouble. All sorts of fantastic notions might be agitated and advocated. Any nation which is a member of the league might lodge complaint against this country that it had not carried out some decree of the tribunal in the manner in which the tribunal thinks it should be carried out, and if the decision, as I understand, should be against this country it would be in the power of the other members of the tribunal to institute a boycott against this country, to punish it in various ways, to inflict damage upon its industries, upon its commerce, and upon its prosperity in divers ways. I do not know that all of those means would be invoked or would result in detriment to this country if employed, but I think they would be the source of trouble, dispute, and expense and would inject into our national life a new instrument of mischief, an element of interference by the outside world which has never existed before and which would be very detrimental. As I have said, I think that a great many conferences for purposes of mediation, conciliation, and adjustment result in a great deal more harm than good, and I believe the detrimental results of this part of the treaty, if ratified, would surpass those of all other treaty provisions of which we have any record or which are now contemplated or any conference in which we might engage.

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. President, the objections to Part XIII, the labor part of the treaty with Germany, seem to be based on a fundamental misconception both as to the object and the effect of its provisions. I shall not attempt to enter into a general discussion of its specific provisions, as time will not permit, but shall briefly relate the circumstances in which the conception of the labor organization arose.

Mr. President, the idea of an international organization for the discussion of labor problems is by no means a new one. The need for such an organization was recognized long before the war. The severe competition which existed in the industrial field made it difficult for one nation to adopt improvements in labor conditions which might increase the cost of production if its rival held back, thereby preventing progress. The United States, Great Britain, France, and other advanced nations in labor thought and action were working by experiment, research, and along other lines for the improvement of labor conditions. These activities were directed toward perfecting safety devices, recreation, preventing industrial disease, and in other ways, but they were working independently. Cooperation and coordination only existed to a small extent. The work which was being done in one country was only imperfectly known in others, though some attempt had been made by the interchange of official publications to diffuse knowledge on the subject. Some small progress toward international action in industrial matters had already been made: (1) By negotiations between States, for example, the agreement between France and England in regard to the compensation of workmen for accidents under their compensation laws; (2) by the agreements made at Berne in 1906 at a conference convened by the Swiss Government in regard to the prohibition of the employment of women at night and the prohibition of the use of yellow phosphorus (the cause of a dangerous industrial disease) in the manufacture of matches. Further agreements of a similar kind were under consideration when the war broke out.

The war produced great changes in the labor situation. Labor had shared to the full the sufferings of the war, and also the burden of carrying it through, both in the field abroad and in the workshops at home, and in all countries demands were being made by labor not only for the prevention of war in the future but for the insertion of provisions in the treaty of peace which would bring about a reconstruction of social conditions and give labor a new status and a new hope. Public opinion in all the countries recognized the great contribution which labor had made toward the successful issue of the war; and there was, I think, a widespread desire that, if possible, there should be no return after the war to the worst social evils of the past. The unrest among labor was a very serious fact which had to be taken account of and dealt with. The task before the allied and associated Governments in Paris was to meet the desire of labor for a new status and new conditions by methods of evolution.

It was out of the conditions above mentioned that the conception of an international labor organization arose. Labor in England, France, and other countries was asking for the inclusion in the treaty of peace of the "labor program" which had been drawn up before the close of the war and for the participation of labor in the peace negotiations. This course, for obvious reasons, was impossible. The rejection of this proposal by the peace conference was a proof of their desire not to encroach on national rights or offend national susceptibilities; but it was possible to devise an organization which would deal, progressively and with full knowledge of all the circumstances and conditions, with proposals for the improvement of labor conditions. This was the task intrusted to the labor commission of the peace conference which was presided over by Mr. Gompers, and its recommendations were adopted unanimously by the allied and associated powers at Paris. These recommendations were framed after the representatives of labor in the United States, England, France, Belgium, and some of the other countries had been consulted, and representatives of labor were included on the commission.

Mr. President, the following countries were represented on this commission. The United States of America, the British Empire, France, Italy, Japan, Belgium, Cuba, Poland, and the Czecho-Slovak Republic.

The American delegates were Mr. Samuel Gompers and Mr. E. N. Hurley, and the substitutes Mr. H. M. Robinson and Dr. J. T. Shotwell, professor at Columbia University.

The leading ideas in the scheme proposed by the commission and embodied in the peace treaty are (1) cooperation between the nations in the progressive improvement of labor conditions; (2) the summoning of a labor conference, in which all the parties interested — Governments, employers, and workers — should be represented and should discuss freely and independently the ways in which that improvement could be secured. The method adopted is the method of agreement, not compulsion; of free discussion and negotiation, in which labor equally with the other interests is given full opportunities of making its views known and getting its claims considered. In other words, it is an application to the industrial sphere of the free representative institutions for which the United States and Great Britain have long stood in the political sphere. No alternative scheme was submitted either to the commission or to the peace conference itself, except the impossible proposals of the extreme labor section, which asked for a labor parliament on which labor was to have half of the total representation, and the decisions of which were to be binding on all Governments.

Mr. President, the rejection of this plan would be to weaken the moderate and responsible elements in labor who desire an orderly evolution and to strengthen the hands of the Bolshevist element, who are trying to persuade the working masses that improvement can only come by upheaval. The Bolshevist element have no love for the plan and would gladly see it defeated.

It is suggested that some of its provisions violate the United States Constitution. I am informed that its application to the United States and other States with a Federal constitution was carefully considered at Paris, with the help of the legal experts of the United States delegation, and that the provisions of article 405 were modified for the express purpose of adapting them to our Constitution. By those provisions it was intended that international conventions in regard to any labor matters which fall within the jurisdiction of the State governments, and not the Federal Government, would require the sanction of the State governments before they could become operative.

In that connection, I desire to read a paragraph from the report of the commission:

The American delegation, however, found themselves unable to accept the obligations implied in the British draft on account of the limitations imposed on the central executive and legislative powers by the constitutions of certain Federal States, and notably of the United States themselves. They pointed out that the Federal Government could not accept the obligation to ratify conventions dealing with matters within the competence of the 48 States of the Union, with which the power of labor legislation for the most part rested. Further, the Federal Government could not guarantee that the constituent States, even if they passed the necessary legislation to give effect to a convention, would put it into effective operation, nor could it provide against the possibility of such legislation being declared unconstitutional by the supreme judicial authorities. The Government could not therefore engage to do something which was not within their power to perform and the nonperformance of which would render them liable to complaint.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have the following two paragraphs of this report printed as part of my remarks.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

The commission felt that they were here faced by a serious dilemma, which threatened to make the establishment of any real system of international labor legislation impossible. On the one hand, its range and effectiveness would be almost fatally limited if a country of such industrial importance as the United States did not participate; on the other hand, if the scheme were so weakened as to impose no obligation on States to give effect to, or even to bring before their legislative authorities, the decisions of the labor conference, it was clear that its work would tend to be confined to the mere passage of resolutions instead of resulting in the promotion of social reforms with the sanction of law behind them.

The commission spent a considerable amount of time in attempting to devise a way out of this dilemma, and is glad to be able to record that it ultimately succeeded in doing so. Article 19 (same as article 405 of the treaty) as now drafted represents a solution found by a subcommission consisting of representatives of the American, British, and Belgian delegations specially appointed to consider the question. It provides that the decisions of the labor conference may take the form either of recommendations or of draft conventions. Either must be deposited with the secretary general of the league of nations, and each State undertakes to bring it within one year before its competent authorities for the enactment of legislation or other action. If no legislation or other action to make a recommendation effective follows, or if a draft convention fails to obtain the consent of the competent authorities concerned, no further obligation will rest on the State in question. In the case of a Federal State, however, whose power to enter into convention or labor matters is subject to limitations, its Government may treat a draft convention to which such limitations apply as a recommendation only.

Mr. HENDERSON. I desire to read just one extract from the last paragraph:

The exception in the case of Federal States is of greater importance. It places the United States and States which are in a similar position under a less degree of obligation than other States in regard to draft conventions.

It is also suggested that the plan is an invasion of the domestic affairs of the United States. The answer is that the United States will have perfect freedom to accept or to reject any convention that may be submitted by the international labor conference.

Objection is made to the provisions in the treaty as to the enforcement of labor conventions. Without some guaranty of the observance of agreements the scheme must necessarily fail. The provisions are most carefully safeguarded against vexatious and unfounded complaints and the steps which can be taken against a defaulting State are of an "economic" character only, such as the withholding of economic privileges guaranteed under the treaty—the loss which is suffered by other States through the action of a defaulting State being of an economic character. It may be noted that these economic measures would hurt the United States less than any other country in the world.

Admittedly such powers are needed mainly for the backward countries; in the advanced nations the character of the administration and the force of public opinion will be sufficient guaranties. Discrimination, however, in the treaty between States in different stages of development would not be possible. Is it incompatible with the dignity of a great power voluntarily to place itself under the obligations which it asks the more backward powers to accept? The same remark applies to the obligation to submit the credentials of its representatives to the scrutiny of the conference. The representation of labor must be a genuine one if the conference is to be accepted by labor, and the risk that some countries would send delegates who do not represent labor has to be guarded against. A great power which is above the possibility of suspicion can accept it as a formality which all must go through.

It is suggested in the speech of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] that the effect of the scheme will be to reduce the conditions of the more progressive countries to the level of the more backward. This has not been the effect of international labor agreements in the past—the Berne conventions of 1906 have had the effect of bringing the more backward States up to a higher level. This will undoubtedly be the effect in the future. No State will be asked to lower its standards. Even if a convention is adopted on some subject, such, for example, as hours of labor, which does not come up to the standard of the United States, the United States, in accepting it, would still maintain its higher standard unimpaired.

I will read from the last paragraph of section 405 of the treaty with Germany, which reads as follows:

In no case shall any member be asked or required, as a result of the adoption of any recommendation or draft convention by the conference, to lessen the protection afforded by its existing legislation to the workers concerned.

The evident purpose is to bring the more backward States to a higher level.

Further, Mr. President, the United States and other progressive countries will be able to exert a beneficial influence in the international labor organization on the more backward States. The public discussion in an international forum of proposals for the improvement of labor conditions has a powerful influence on the backward States.

Mr. President, apprehensions appear to be entertained as to the effect on the labor situation here of the introduction of the ideas and aims of European labor through the medium of the international conference. Labor, however, is now organized on an international basis—American labor is taking a leading part in these international organizations—and whether the labor part of the treaty is accepted by the United States or not, foreign influence will not be excluded. Rather, if the labor provisions are rejected, the influence of extreme sections of foreign labor will be strengthened. The international labor organization provided by the treaty (1) gives labor a constitutional means of expressing its views and exercising its proper influence in the regulation of labor conditions; (2) it helps to remove the hindrance to progress which results from international competition; (3) it promotes continual progress in the improvement of labor conditions by the stimulus which the contact of different minds, all interested in the same problems, provides; (4) it pools the experience of all nations and makes that experience available for all.

Mr. President, I can see something hopeful in these international councils. They will bring together the brightest minds of the world to solve the social questions of mankind, for in Part XIII each country at meetings of the general conference will have four delegates—two representing the Government, one representing labor, and one representing the employers. As Carlyle has well said:

This that they call the organizing of labor is, if well understood, the problem of the whole future for all who in future pretend to govern men.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I have not had an opportunity to study this section of the treaty to the extent that I would like to have done, but I have had occasion to listen to some of the addresses upon the subject. Most of these speeches were in opposition to the provision. The Senator from Nevada [Mr. HENDERSON] has most ably championed the cause of labor under the labor section of the treaty. I think the Senator from Nevada has very clearly described the purpose and effect of this provision, and there is nothing that I can add to what he has said except to say that it seems that the opposition to this provision has the same foundation as the opposition to the treaty as a whole and to the league of nations—that is, it is founded in selfishness, in suspicion, and in fear. It is the fear of ultra conservatism; it is the fear of some of our citizens to attempt anything progressive lest there be danger in it.

Now, let me just suggest one other thing. The excuse for a high protectice tariff in this country has always been the necessity of protecting the labor of this country against cheap labor in other countries, due to low wages and improper conditions of life. There is not any question at all but what there is no power in the world that can ever bring down the standard of labor in this country. Therefore the whole tendency and purpose of this provision must be to lift the standards in other countries. If the standards are lifted in other countries, then this country will be protected by that act, and artificial means of protection, such as the high protective tariff, will be entirely unnecessary.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, it will be conceded by all that there is a broad and ever-increasing field for legitimate and proper international activity. With the growth of civilization and the progress which the world has made, particularly during the past hundred years, the interdependence of nations is recognized and the necessity of a spirit of helpfulness and cooperation between peoples and nations is desired by conservatives as well as by the most chauvinistic. This view finds expression in the last address of President McKinley, delivered September 5, 1901, wherein he said:

> God and man have linked the nations together. No nation can longer be indifferent of any other. And as we are brought more and more in touch with each other the less occasion is there for misunderstandings, and the stronger disposition, when we have differences, to adjust them in the court of arbitration, which is the noblest forum for the settlement of international disputes.

But the development of a spirit of amity and fellowship among the different nations and peoples of the earth does not call for the obliteration of State boundaries or the amalgamation of the races of the world. International peace and the establishment of justice and righteousness as the rule of conduct among nations will sooner be realized if there shall continue to exist free and independent Commonwealths inhabited by virile, progressive people.

A communism of States would be as deadly as a communism of peoples. Vigorous, puissant States are necessary to civilization and liberty and to a world-wide reign of law and order and justice. Individual development precedes mass development. It is the differentiations among individuals which means the progress of the State. Uniformity does not necessarily mean progress or advancement; it is variations, diversity, breaking with the past, and striking out into new and undeveloped fields that often prove the indicia of progress and advancement. Nature seizes the slightest change, if it marks growth, and by the application of the law of natural selection develops and improves until a better organism or higher species results. With modifications the law of evolution applies in the social and political organism. The promotion of genuine world peace will be accomplished by the maintenance of vigorous States which possess high ideals and national consciousness and have zest and joy in vigorous competition and generous rivalry with neighboring States. The spirit of altruism will be strengthened and the growth of a spirit of international good will and amity will be accelerated by the extension of freedom in local and domestic concerns; so world peace and justice find security only upon the broad shoulders of free and independent States. The practical conditions of life, the vast differences which race and religion and physical conditions develop, if not compel, have been ignored by preachers and dreamers who have contended for the obliteration of States and the coalescing of all peoples.

Both philosophy and the highest forms of religious expression recognize racial aspirations and the necessity of separate and independent governments. A recognition of racial differences, of habits and modes of thought resulting from physical and geographical conditions, is a part of the learning and philosophy of the age, and the highest development of peoples morally and politically will be realized by recognizing the ethnological and geographical conditions in the world. A nation has been described as an ethnographic unity within a geographic unity. When we think of the future of humanity we remember the stirring and eloquent words of Mazzini:

> You are men before you are citizens or fathers. If you do not embrace the whole human family in your love, if you do not confess your faith in its unity—consequent on the unity of God—and in the brotherhood of the peoples who are appointed to reduce that unity to fact * * * you disobey your law of life, or do not comprehend the religion which will bless the future.

But applauding their fine spirit we advance humanity's cause and hasten the realization of unity and world peace by devotion to country and by an observance of the moral precepts which make for justice and righteousness.

It is true that it has been the dream of prophets and poets that a millennial day would dawn and peace and righteousness cover the earth as the waters cover the mighty deep. Some teachers have believed that human governments were unimportant and that national consciousness was a reversion to older and undesirable types. Men everywhere are seeking the truth, the establishment of law and order and justice; a finer spirit of brotherhood is being developed, and the cause of civilization is advancing. But it is unwise to ignore the practical, the real, the concrete things the past has been compelled to encounter and which the present and the future must confront. We live in the midst of natural forces and are subject to world conditions and inexorable physical laws. All should sincerely seek the reign of justice and righteousness. The advent of that period when justice and peace shall prevail in the world will be accelerated through the perfection of individuals and nations. Our service to humanity will be all the greater by devotion to family and State and Nation. Though we recognize our obligations to the world, it is obvious that those obligations can best be discharged under the moral stimulus which will be generated through a scrupulous observance of the duties which we owe to ourselves and to this Republic.

In one of the last addresses made by President Roosevelt, on Lafayette Day, September 6, 1918, he stated:

> Patriotism stands in national matters as love of family does in private life. Nationalism corresponds to the love a man bears for his wife and children. Internationalism corresponds to the feeling he has for his neighbors generally. The sound nationalist is the only type of really helpful internationalism, precisely as in private relations it is the man who is most devoted to his own wife and children who is apt in the long run to be the most satisfactory neighbor * * *. To substitute internationalism for nationalism means to do away with patriotism and is as vicious and as profoundly demoralizing as to put promiscuous devotion to all other persons in the place of steadfast devotion to a man's own family. Either effort means the atrophy of robust morality. The men in this country who have stood the stanchest for the performance of international duty are the men who have most keenly felt nationalism and Americanism in their blood, in their veins.

No one contends that individuals or States are absolutely independent. The truth of the statement made by that trenchant writer, C. Delisle Burns, is recognized by all who are conversant with historical development or social evolution. He states:

> Present facts, then, demand the recognition of continuous and normal interdependence of States. The nature of the State is to be understood at least in part from its relations with other States, and all philosophies which even imply that the State is isolated are out of date. Indeed one may say that the modern State must be understood by this external reference.

The theory of absolute isolation, or complete and absolute and unrestricted sovereignty, leads to international anarchy. Such a view is an anachronism. It was expounded by Bernhardi and applied by the Kaiser and the military camerilla by which he was surrounded. The great tides of art and literature, the mighty streams carrying religion and science and philosophy, fructify arid wastes and produce a civilization, in part at least, common to all who come within their influence; and the mighty developments of science, as well as the softening influences of religion, have bound all peoples with chains of steel and linked nations together. International organizations and conferences and congresses likewise are powerful instrumentalities in securing cooperative efforts between nations and in promoting fraternity between diverse races and peoples. In the year 1913 more than 130 international congresses met for the discussion of questions of importance to the world. No one insists that a State in its international relations may be absolutely and arbitrarily independent. Indeed, in some internal affairs its sovereignty is necessarily limited in consequence of its relations with other powers. Even the strongest nationalists of this day would not approve of the statement of Canning if applied generally to the relations among nations when he said:

> Things are getting back to a wholesome state again. Every nation for itself and God for us all. * * * The time for Areopagus and the like of that is gone by.

He was protesting, of course, against the Holy Alliance and the sinister designs which it had of crushing out the spirit of democracy which was animating the hearts of the world, and of suppressing the revolutionary movement in Spain and forcing the Spanish-American colonies back under Spain's autocratic dominion.

Progress follows individualism, and a certain degree of particularistic evolution, as is expounded by Spencer, results from differentiation. Progress is marked by growth from homogeneity to heterogeneity, and this finds exemplification in the life of States as well as in the biological field.

Lecky attributes progress to the process of differentiation which results from the spread of education and to the expanding interest of individuals in the multitudinous affairs of human life.

It has been alleged that the nationalism of Luther broke the power of an oppressive medievalism which sought to impose an international organization upon the world.

The great poet Dante contended for a universal—or perhaps it would be more accurately expressed a unified—government, if not for the world at least for Europe, and sought the peace of the world through the intervention of such a government. But the Renaissance was a protest against an oppressive internationalism and a political and spiritual overlordship which ruled with benumbing force the peoples of Europe.

Mr. Rose, in his work entitled "Nationality in Modern History," states that Dante's De Monarchia "rests upon a fundamental conception that the world, being a thought of God, is designed for unity, the attainment of which is the chief end of man."

Though Grotius insisted that "all mankind, or at least the great part of it, constitutes a society of peoples for which the rule of a general law is indispensable," and insisted that "the law of nature, according to the theory of the ancient Roman jurists, should obtain among peoples," he nevertheless recognized the necessity of independent nations whose people possessed a strong national spirit and a fine and noble patriotism. While he laid the foundations of international law deep and broad and sought to terminate the international anarchy prevailing in the world, he regarded the development of the State as indispensable to progress and liberty.

Of course, the medieval concept, as Gierke so clearly develops, rested upon the Christianity of the Middle Ages, wherein it was set forth that mankind is a single and universal community owned and governed by God himself. "Mankind is one mystical body; it is one single and internally connected people or 'folk.' It is an all-embracing corporation—universitas—which constitutes that universal realm, spiritually and temporally, which may be called the universal church, or, with equal propriety, the commonwealth of the human race—respublica generas humanis. Therefore that it may attain its one purpose, it needs one law and one government."

The rise of Protestantism more or less fractured the crystallized views then prevailing in Europe, and certainly destroyed the idea entertained by some of a great international state superimposing its will upon people racially and ethnologically different and with no traditions or immediate interests held in common, to effect union and promote solidarity of action. Perhaps the reaction against the medieval thought developed too strongly the nationalistic spirit, and yet it must be said that with the growth of nationalism and the development of race consciousness the cause of civilization received a new impetus. There developed the political view expressed by Blackstone, of the sovereign state, and he defined sovereignty "as the supreme, irresistible, absolute, uncontrollable authority." His imperishable writings became the inspiration, in part, at least, of those who founded this Nation.

The dawn of freedom for the individual is the beginning of civilization. The State finds its prototype in the individual. A free, independent individual, within a proper sphere of activity, is essential to national as well as international progress. There must be fields for individual activity within which no other power may intrude. Notwithstanding the dependence of the individual upon others, there must be a domain free from control or intervention. This alone will permit his highest development and equip him for those interrelated and intersocial responsibilities resultant from the multiform conditions of our social organism. So it is with the State, though the oceans are narrow and nations and peoples, by the achievements of science, are brought into apposition, and notwithstanding the increasing interdependence of nations, there must ever be a domain which alone may be occupied by the State and within the sacred precincts of which other States or people must not enter. As the individual must possess his own soul and spirit and will and purpose, and as he holds within his hands his own destiny, so also does the State possess a spirit and a soul and a destiny. Its spirit may not be defiled by other States; its soul must be free to will and to execute; otherwise death and disintegration are inevitable. In our eagerness to consort with other nations and to aid in bearing the international burdens of the world, we must be careful not to destroy the national spirit or to jeopardize the national life.

Mr. President, thoughtful men and women since the dawn of civilization have earnestly sought the adoption of some plan that would prevent, if possible, the horrors of war and establish the basis of an enduring peace. At the close of sanguinary conflicts this desire has strongly manifested itself, and serious efforts have frequently been made to bring about some international organization or some concert between nations and peoples which would make the recurrence of wars impossible; but notwithstanding the progress of civilization and the development of altruism and the enlightening spirit of Christianity all efforts have been in vain. The frightfulness of the great conflict through which the world has just passed powerfully impressed all classes in every land with the importance of devising some scheme which would be acceptable to the world and remove so far as possible the possibility of another devastating and destructive war.

President Wilson while the war was in progress challenged attention to the necessity of a concert of the democratic nations of the world and to the formation of a league of civilized nations and the establishment of a partnership among the free peoples of the world for the purpose of preventing war and maintaining the peace of the world. His views were enthusiastically received, not only among the democratic and Christian nations but in almost every part of the world. People believed the time had come for the establishment of a genuine league of nations, that such a union could be effectuated, and that in its operations the national, sovereign powers of the members of the league would not be infringed, and the domestic and internal policies would not in any manner be affected.

When the first draft of the covenant of the league of nations was submitted to the world it met with a most cordial reception. It is true it aroused criticism—some friendly and constructive, some violent and unreasoning. An instrument involving such tremendous issues of necessity aroused discussion and provoked criticism. It would have revealed a mental torpor and stupidity incompatible with a virile and progressive people if its proclamation had evinced complacent acquiescence in its provisions or at most an idle curiosity as to its terms. Numerous suggestions were made looking to correcting some obvious defects or changing some structural features.

The finished draft as it came from the peace conference showed improvement and indicated that the representatives at the peace conference had attempted to meet the constructive criticism offered by genuine friends of world peace. But with the changes made the covenant of the league still contained imperfections which, in the opinion of many, seriously marred its splendid proportions. Of course, it is beyond the finite mind to divise a form of government for individual nations or a plan for international cooperation that will be free from defects, and which in its operations will result in equal and exact justice and bring freedom and happiness to mankind. There is so much of genuine merit in the covenant of the league that, notwithstanding its defects, I believe it should be approved by the people of the United States, and that the pending treaty should be ratified by the Senate. A number of reservations have been suggested and have been approved by a majority of the Senate. Some of these reservations I regard as unnecessary because they merely emphasize what otherwise is expressed. Still other reservations, in my opinion, improve the treaty under consideration and will remove the objections of many patriotic Americans who desire to see the treaty ratified, but who entertain serious misgivings as to the future of this Republic under the league unless certain reservations become effective.

The covenant of the league, as I have stated, possesses most excellent features. It has been the policy of this Republic for more than a hundred years to settle by arbitration, so far as possible, controversies which might lead to war. Treaties in later years have been entered into between the United States and many nations which bound the signatories to arbitrate justiciable questions; indeed the policy of our Government has been to settle all international controversies without resort to war.

The covenant of the league provides machinery for arbitration and for the settlement of disputes arising between nations. The league conceives the plan of preserving peace by an international concert, and by such action as may be exercised by an alliance or league of nations, including the great powers and free States, which are willing to subscribe to the principles of peace and international righteousness.

The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX], in an address delivered before the Pennsylvania Society of New York in December, 1909, discussed the question of international unity, or rather questions of international import, and as to which nations may unite to effectuate their settlement. He reviewed various conferences, international in character, which had been held, and then stated:

That the termination of war by the conclusion of peace, the regulation of eventual war, and the settlement of difficulties without a resort to war are matters of international concern. However important the acts of these conferences, the fact of their meeting was even more important, for it is evident that the common interest of nations is being recognized as superior to their special interests, and that unity of action in international matters may yet control the unrestrained, unregulated, or isolated action of independent States. * * * Just as individuals and separate nations advance in the fruits of civilization and display in their conduct higher regard for honesty and justice and peace and less tolerance for wrong and oppression and cruelty, so these ideals of private national conduct are manifestly inspiring all nations in their relations with each other. As nations understand each other better and the world draws closer together in the recognition of a common humanity and conscience of common needs and purposes there is carried into the international field the insistent demand for greater unity in enforcing everywhere the principles of a high morality and, by restraints mutually implied and observed, all the human ameliorations, without which both national and international life would soon fall into anarchy and decadence.

As stated, the covenant submitted seeks to bring about a spirit of unity among the nations for the establishment of world peace. As I have indicated, it is not free from objections, and no doubt its operation will show the wisdom of making some changes. Reference has frequently been made to the condition in which the Colonies of America found themselves at the conclusion of the War of Independence. There is an analogy, but not a parallel, between those separate States and the Union which they formed, and the nations which participated in the recent conflict and the league of nations which they are seeking to form for the better security of the territorial integrity and independence of all nations and the perpetuation of peace in the world. This much may be said, however, that amendments were submitted to the Federal Constitution and adopted; and unquestionably when the league of nations actively functions there will be disclosed weaknesses and defects which will perhaps call for radical and possibly vital changes in its structure. But, as I have stated, serious as some of the defects may be, the virtues of the treaty are such as to not only justify the United States becoming a member of the league but such as to require prompt action.

The following provisions of the covenant are so important and will prove so advantageous to the world that they warrant the approval of the covenant, notwithstanding the defects found therein:

Those relating to the disarmament of nations except for the purposes of defense.

Those restricting the manufacture of munitions and implements of war.

Those relating to the settlement of international disputes by arbitration or by conference, and the obligation of the members of the league to refrain from war, and to submit for determination their disputes to arbitration or to the consideration of the organizations and tribunals prescribed in the covenant of the league.

Provision is also made for a court of international justice which shall have power to decide upon international controversies submitted to it.

Without attempting an analysis of article 10, and not desiring to interpret or construe its controversial features, the provision therein which imposes an obligation upon the members of the league to respect the territorial integrity and political independence of all other members of the league is of the highest importance and is a long step in the direction of world peace. If each nation is under solemn obligation to respect the territorial limits and the political independence of all other members of the league, the cause of world peace has been greatly advanced. If the league contained only those provisions which deal with justiciable or arbitral controversies, as well as those referred to in article 15 of the covenant, which are likely to lead to a rupture, it should commend itself to the civilized peoples of the world.

Ex-Senator Root, as I recall, declared that the arrangements for the settlement of nonjusticiable controversies were satisfactory and indeed admirable.

As I have indicated, it is believed by many that the pending treaty could be improved and the interests of the United States more effectually guarded if reservations dealing with a limited number of matters were made a part of the resolution of ratification.

It is not my purpose to discuss the reservations submitted other than the two principal ones dealing with Part XIII of the treaty. I regret that the representatives of the peace conference felt it necessary to deal with a question that is essentially national and domestic in character and has no proper place in the treaty drafted by them. Notwithstanding my sincere desire to see the treaty ratified, and notwithstanding the earnest support which I have given to the efforts made to secure its ratification, I have been unable to approve the provisions of Part XIII. They are wholly extraneous to the subject with which the representatives of the various nations were dealing. At the close of a world war they were negotiating a peace treaty, not an agreement for the control of the domestic affairs of nations. Part XIII is incongruous and wholly irrelevant to the questions which brought the representatives of the warring nations to the peace conference. It does not strengthen the treaty, but weakens it. Moreover, it is at variance with the letter and the spirit of the treaty, and if enforced by the organization which it creates increasing irritation will be developed and serious controversies will arise which eventually may culminate in conflicts; if not between States, then between such organization and one or more States. The defeat of the Central Powers compelled the negotiation of a treaty, and the primary questions at the peace conference related to the terms to be imposed upon the defeated nations. However, both the victors and the vanquished understood that a sincere effort would be made by the peace delegates to devise some form of international organization which would permit the cooperation of nations to secure the peace of the world. The peace negotiations also demonstrated that some organization was necessary to carry out the terms of the peace treaty. Properly and logically a plan for a league of nations came into existence. In acting as an agency to enforce certain terms of the treaty the organization known as the league of nations was performing international functions, and confessedly its operations were international in character and were to be limited to efforts to preserve peace between the members of the league. It was obvious that whatever organization or instrumentality was provided through which the nations were to speak, or which was to constitute their agent for their mutual advantage, it must and should be limited in its functions and authority to international questions and concerns. The American people are not willing to erect a supernation or construct an international authority which may impinge upon national sovereignty or interfere with their domestic and internal affairs.

As I have indicated, the league of nations is to be organized for the purpose of maintaining the peace of the world, or, to speak more accurately, peace between the nations of the world. While the league has been called an international organization it is regarded by many as in reality an alliance of equal and separate national States or Governments for the purpose of the mutual protection of the territorial integrity and political independence of the members for the preservation of peace between the members of the league. The league, therefore, is a very different organization and has very different objects and principles from those which may be brought within the denomination of internationalism, which is a conscious endeavor not to protect and defend the separate nationalities within the league but to destroy and submerge the national and patriotic consciousness of the separate peoples into a common internationalism, or, more accurately, a common consciousness of world "citizenship," which shall ignore and obliterate national distinctions as well as the distinctions of language, civilization, and culture, which have characterized the national life of the great countries of the world.

The propaganda of socialism, founded upon the impossible projections of Karl Marx, has for its principal slogan, "Workers of the world, unite." This appeal is directed to all men of all countries, and is dependent directly upon the so-called extension of the working-class consciousness to the so-called workers of all countries. The theory of this propaganda is that the Governments of all civilized States are capitalistic governments and therefore opposed to the interests of the working class, and that the working class of all countries have common interests as distinct from and indeed antagonistic to the interests of the several States wherein they reside and the interests of their fellow citizens in other walks of life. The ultimate aim of the socialistic propaganda is to form working-class governments and, indeed, to amalgamate all the countries of the world into a so-called working-class government. This professed internationalism is one of the main principles of socialistic propaganda. The conferences of the European socialists, held at stated periods in different continental cities, are termed internationale.

Part XIII of the treaty of peace is an attempt to attach these internationales to the league of nations and to give the so-called socialistic working-class propaganda an international sanction and status subsidized by the league of nations and to make this internationale, otherwise international labor office, an independent agency for the procurement and enforcement of so-called labor legislation in the several countries of the world, and, furthermore, to constitute the international labor office an independent agency for the arrangement of international conventions and treaties respecting labor, and, substantially, all domestic affairs of the States, which shall give the projects of the international working-class movement the status and force of international law.

The plan is to effectually divide society and to treat the workmen of the members of the league as a separate part or class and accentuate such division by compelling States to recognize the same and to commit to an international authority the power to legislate and act for such class, utilizing the league of nations, the primary purpose of which is the preservation of the peace between nations of the world by dealing with international concerns as well as the members of the league as subordinate agencies to execute its purposes.

This whole propaganda is based upon the fallacy that the interests of so-called labor in any country are different from the general interests and economy of such country as has heretofore been comprehended within the phrase "the public welfare," or the welfare of the people, which is the main political object of the so-called capitalistic governments.

The wealth of nations and the prosperity and progress of men in the modern state of civilization depends upon the utmost liberty of production and exchange. The division of labor, upon which the modern social and economic society is based, can only accommodate the needs and requirements of the life of men by the freest exchange of labor and the products of labor between the members of the commonwealth. The only way labor may pass into commerce is by the process of natural persons advancing their services to or working for others, or bestowing their labor on such goods or materials as are advanced to others and thus pass into commerce. If labor is not thus used or employed, labor itself has no real existence, and in the place thereof we have merely idleness and inutility of men. It has been said that there is no excellence without labor. This does not mean potential but actual labor.

Production is impossible without capital. It is capital which makes labor valuable, and this capital is not a static thing in the world. Like labor itself, it is being constantly consumed in the processes of production and must be constantly replenished in order to sustain the processes of production. Labor has indeed a most intimate connection with all the enterprises of production and exchange, and labor comprehends not only common manual labor and rough physical work, but all those services of a personal nature which pass into commerce and for which men pay or exchange a value fixed by mutual contract. The whole fabric of commerce and finance is made up of a mass of contracts which touch every active man in the world and which are being constantly settled, executed, and renewed to carry on the processes of production and exchange, upon which the life, convenience, and comfort of men directly depend. As production can not proceed without capital or rather stock, which is progressively consumed in industry, but must be progressively renewed out of new stock saved from consumption, it follows that this new stock must be obtained from those who have saved, or, rather, have saved the money which may go into the market and demand it.

Profits are the increase of production over expenditure in the processes of production and are measured in money, which is the balance of the aggregate transactions involving both profit and loss in the conduct of business.

The controversy over profits thus involved is the whole question of capital and labor. In the present practice the enterpriser pays the hire of labor and the hire of capital as wages and interest, respectively, in a certain amount ascertained and secured by a contractual obligation which must be discharged whether the business makes profits or losses. After paying the debts both of capital and labor, the enterpriser takes the residue of returns for himself. If laborers desire to unite in an enterprise and pay the hire of capital, which does not fluctuate, but is standardized around 6 per cent per annum, they may divide profits among themselves, and thus do away with the so-called wage system. There is nothing in our so-called capitalistic laws which lays any legal impediment to an arrangement of this kind.

The class consciousness of laborers as a class, apart from their fellow citizens in the body politic when they are in fact an inextricable part of the body politic, is the fallacy which lies at the base of the so-called class struggle. This is a wholly artificial conception and has only made notable headway among the most unskilled and untrained men in the ranks of labor. Men have thus been caused to think that they are fighting capital, as they call it, when they are in fact fighting their own fellow citizens and neighbors in society. It is the fallacy of the static condition of capital as a thing which is constantly holding them in subjection instead of the thing which is being constantly renewed in the processes and for the processes of business which has given this word an odious meaning to men of little understanding, whereas, when properly understood, capital and the production of capital is the most beneficent factor in the economic life of the commonwealth. The more capital there is in a country the richer is that country and all of its inhabitants.

The poor man who lives in a wealthy country is infinitely better off than the poor man who lives in a poor country, and any means for the wider distribution of capital must be found not in disturbing the capitalistic system of production but by increasing both the facilities of producton and the facilities for the more equal distribution of the products of industry in the incomes of those who contribute to the same.

The energy of men, their desire for progress, and their pride in accomplishment call them to venture their capital or stock in new enterprises. If it were not for the accumulations of the rich as well as the savings of the frugal and middle classes, as they are called, the country would lack the means of constant replenishment and expansion of capital required for the operation of business and the accommodation of the needs, wants, comforts, and progress of men. The only use which can be made and is made of the accumulations of the rich is the investment of the same in new enterprises and in replenishment of the capital of old enterprises to meet the needs, tastes, pleasures, and desires of men in the modern world.

The accumulation of wealth is not against the interests of any class of the people. Wealth itself, if not used and employed and reproduced in the processes of production, is wasted and consumed in the decays, disintegrations, and depreciations which are inevitable in the natural world. The wealth and progress of any nation depend upon the constancy and expansion of the process of production. Indeed, wealth itself is not anything but a process. It is a condition of national expansion and growth, the products of which are the stock of goods and commodities to sustain the life and support the progress and improvement of the country.

There is therefore no possibility of separating the welfare of the working class from the general welfare of the community. The promotion of class consciousness and international solidarity among the workers is directly contrary to the interests of the commonwealth and of nations both in their domestic and international relations. Strange names and doctrines from overseas will not make business grow in any country. The wealth and progress of the country is the primary object of political economy and endeavor. The solidarity of the nation itself is the proper aim of the State. The welfare of the people, the protection of the health and strength of those who labor, is a proper object of domestic policy in every nation, and the citizens of every country should look to their own government for protection of this character. The competition among nations themselves in the field of commerce is of itself a potent and constantly operating inducement for each government to husband well the strength and health of the people employed in its industrial pursuits. The Congress of the United States, under the power delegated to it by the Constitution, and the legislatures of the several States of the Union, by virtue of their inherent legislative powers, are entirely competent to take effective measures for the protection of the health and happiness of the people. Suggestions from extraneous sources are neither necessary nor permissible. Such suggestions themselves are an infraction of the dignity and sovereignty of the State. The State itself, moreover, has no proper control of the wages or prices, as these are properly and legally fixed by the stipulations of private contract. The interference with such questions by foreign emissaries would be utterly intolerable. There is no field within which the general conference or the governing body of the international labor office set up by Part XIII of the treaty of peace with Germany can operate in the United States. We do not need any enlightenment from the vagaries of European economic speculation from which we have formerly been free. We have already had too much infusion of exotic isms into the political thought of our people.

Article 19 of the league of nations provides that—

> The assembly may from time to time advise the consideration by members of the league * * * of international conditions whose continuance might endanger the peace of the world.

Part XIII of the treaty setting up the international labor office seems to be founded upon the conception that there are "conditions of labor which produce unrest so great that the peace and harmony of the world are imperiled." The assembly of the league of nations is entirely competent to deal with such conditions of labor as may affect the peace of the nations. The assembly of the league of nations is a forum into which should be brought all questions affecting international peace, including those having to do with labor. The assembly should recommend legislation by the States of the league deemed to be necessary, if any extraneous organization should be permitted that privilege. There is no proper place for the international labor office in this scheme of the league of nations. Part XIII should therefore be eliminated from the treaty. It is intolerable to think of nongovernment delegates in an international conference having to do with international affairs and politics. Such an arrangement is a clear case of imperium in imperio.

The observations just submitted may be deemed irrelevant to the subject now before us, but I have not so regarded them. They were offered for the purpose of showing that labor is not a thing apart and can not be dealt with independently of capital. The welfare of society, capital, labor, production, wealth, property, contracts—these are all involved in the internal policy of the State. They are not subjects to be committed to international organizations or agencies.

When the first draft of the covenant of the league was submitted sincere friends of a league of nations to prevent future wars insisted that the final draft should specifically reserve the domestic affairs of the members of the league from its jurisdiction or control in any manner. To meet the suggestion it was provided in article 15 of the covenant that if disputes arise between members of the league growing out of matters which they or either of them claim, under international law, are solely within the domestic jurisdiction of the States, the council shall so report, and shall make no recommendation as to its settlement. Unquestionably this provision was intended to preclude the league or any of its organizations or agencies from interfering with any domestic question. Notwithstanding this provision, there are sincere supporters of the league who feel that a reservation is required broader in its language for the protection of the members of the league against any intrusion by the league or its organizations into the internal or domestic affairs of the States. Such a reservation has already been adopted by the Senate. It reads as follows:

4. The United States reserves to itself exclusively the right to decide what questions are within its domestic jurisdiction and declares that all domestic and political questions relating wholly or in part to its internal affairs, including immigration, labor, coastwise traffic, the tariff, commerce, the suppression of traffic in women and children, and in opium and other dangerous drugs, and all other domestic questions, are solely within the jurisdiction of the United States and are not under this treaty to be submitted in any way either to arbitration or to the consideration of the council or of the assembly of the league of nations, or any agency thereof, or to the decision or recommendation of any other power.

No one questions but what labor and all cognate questions come within the domestic jurisdiction and police of the State. It is essentially a question domestic and internal in its nature. No State could commit the determination of its internal affairs to foreign powers or to a league of nations and long maintain its independence. There are some matters so vital, so interwoven with the very life of a State, that to relinquish control of the same to any other power would result in the destruction of the former. A nation or State would cease to exist if its internal and domestic problems were subject to the control of even a friendly power. The peace of the world, in my opinion, would not be subserved by the members of the league surrendering control of their domestic questions and internal affairs to the council of the league or to any other international organization.

The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] submitted an amendment to the pending treaty which called for the elimination of Part XIII. I believe that a majority of the Members of the Senate were in favor of the amendment, but it was defeated because Senators felt that, if adopted, a textual change in the treaty would thus result, which would call for a resubmission of the treaty to Germany. From statements made by Senators I am convinced that a majority of the Members of this body profoundly regret that the provisions of Part XIII were embodied in the treaty.

The view is entertained by many that such provisions constitute a menace to members of the league and an extraneous force which will persistently be exercised against protective national barriers and the internal policies and administration of the States of the league.

The record of the Senator from Wisconsin with respect to organized labor and questions affecting labor is well known to the Senate and to the country. He is everywhere recognized as the friend of organized labor. His opposition to Part XIII of the treaty is therefore not the result of any hostility to the cause of labor. In the able speech delivered by him he pointed out in a clear and convincing way the dangers to American labor that would result if this Nation should be subject to the provisions of Part XIII.

Like many of my countrymen who examined the treaty, I was eager to discover its merits and virtues. Every predilection was in favor of a league of nations or some international organization which would, if possible, reduce or prevent the causes of war. It was therefore with keen regret that I discovered within the treaty provisions which may seriously affect our country and which are wholly irrelevant and foreign to the subject with which the treaty should deal.

My opposition to these provisions results in part from the conviction which I have that if the United States is bound by them the interest of labor and of this Republic will be profoundly affected, and to their disadvantage, and for the further reason that Part XIII creates a powerful extranational organization which in time will impair the sovereignty of the States constituting the league and wrest from them the control of undoubted domestic and internal questions.

It is quite likely, Mr. President, that many will take issue with this statement and regard my apprehensions as the result of an unfounded fear. I confess that the activities of international socialists, the battle cries of the Bolshevist emissaries in our midst and in all parts of the world, and the indubitable evidence of their world-wide plan to destroy nations and establish international communism may have unduly influenced my mind and unnecessarily aroused my fears as to the evil consequences which will result from the establishment of the organizations provided for in Part XIII and intrusting to them the powers conferred by its provisions. But it is impossible to construe the provisions of the treaty which I am now discussing apart from the propaganda which preceded the drafting of Part XIII and the forces and influences back of the movement culminating in its adoption by the Paris conference. Even the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER], who is one of the ablest champions of the league and the treaty, has just stated that Part XIII is not only "obnoxious" but "abhorrent" to him. He sees its dangers and is unwilling that the Republic shall pass under the yoke of international organizations which may attack our domestic system and menace our peace and prosperity.

I did not support the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin, notwithstanding my serious objections to Part XIII, because I wanted, if possible, to prevent further treaty negotiations with Germany, and also because I felt that if the other signatories to the treaty desired to submit to the provisions of Part XIII, the United States could not properly interpose to prevent such action. However, I offered a reservation to be incorporated in the resolution of ratification. It reads as follows:

Resolution.

Resolved (two-thirds of the Senators present concurring therein), That the Senate advise and consent to the ratification of the treaty of peace signed at Versailles on the 28th day of June, 1919, by the plenipotentiaries of the United States and the other belligerent powers, with this reservation: That

Whereas the Government of the United States takes the view that it is entirely competent through the legislative powers delegated to Congress by the Constitution, and the inherent legislative powers of the several States of the Union, to deal with all questions of domestic policy and especially with all questions concerning the status and relations of labor; and

Whereas article 19 of the convention of the league of nations, which is a part of said treaty, provides that the assembly of the league of nations may from time to time advise the consideration by members of the league of international conditions whose continuance might endanger the peace of the world, under which power the assembly of the league of nations is entirely competent to deal with such conditions of labor as may produce unrest so great as that the peace and harmony of the world are imperiled; but notwithstanding said provision said treaty of peace further provides a special international organization of labor which is extraneous to the league of nations, the powers of which are defined in Part XIII of the treaty, comprising articles 387 to 427, inclusive; and

Whereas the Government of the United States does not recognize that the intervention of such said international labor office is at all necessary for the adoption of humane conditions of labor or would promote the cause of labor within the United States, or that such intervention would in any wise be proper or permissible:

Therefore the United States of America withholds its assent to Part XIII, comprising articles 387 to 427, inclusive, of the said treaty of peace, and excepts and reserves the same from the act of ratification, and the United States of America declines to participate in any way in the said general conference, or to participate in the election of the governing body of the international labor office constituted by said articles, and declines in any way to contribute or be bound to contribute to the expenditures of said general conference or international labor office.

I did not expect that the preamble would constitute a part of the resolution if adopted, but made it a part of the reservation for the purpose of directing particular attention to the nature of the subject involved in Part XIII. Senators will perceive that the resolution challenges attention to the implications of Part XIII. The preamble declares what all patriotic Americans believe, namely, that this Government is entirely competent to deal with all questions of domestic policy including those concerning the status and relations of labor and the welfare of the people of the United States. The preamble further states that Part XIII provides a special international organization of labor which is extraneous to the league of nations, and that this Nation does not recognize the intervention of such organization for the promotion of the cause of labor, or that the intervention of such an organization would be "wise, proper, or permissible." The resolution proper, which I desire to constitute a reservation to the treaty, declares that this Republic withholds its assent to Part XIII and declines to participate in the international organizations to be created by the provisions of the treaty in question. The construction given to the cloture rule prevents amendments being offered to tendered reservations; therefore I reframed the resolution, omitting the preamble. In this form I have offered it as a substitute for the reservation submitted by the distinguished Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER]. His reservation reads as follows:

14. The United States withholds its assent to Part XIII (articles 387 to 427, inclusive) of said treaty unless Congress, by act or joint resolution, shall hereafter make provision for representation in the organization established by said Part XIII, and in such event the participation of the United States will be governed and conditioned by the provisions of such act or joint resolution.

The Senator from North Dakota has just stated that "the real difference" between his resolution and the substitute which I offered—is the difference between the use of an ax and an anesthetic in performing a surgical operation. Both have exactly the same effect in reducing the patient to a state of insensibility. The difference between the two, however, is that one kills, but the other leaves open the door of hope.

Senators will observe that the reservation of the Senator from North Dakota merely withholds assent from Part XIII until Congress shall make provision for representation in the organization provided for by said Part XIII. This reservation extends a luring chain which will be tantamount to an invitation for the internationalists throughout the world to drag the United States into the superstructure provided by Part XIII. It is an invitation, indeed an encouragement, to all who seek to extend the powers and jurisdiction of the labor organizations to be created by the terms of the treaty to bring to bear upon the United States every influence and all the pressure possible to secure its adherence to Part XIII. The internationalists who seek the domination of the world will make an issue in congressional and senatorial elections in this country, and political parties will be called upon to declare in their platforms whether they will or will not by congressional legislation force upon the unwilling hands of this Nation the international labor chains which will be forged by the machinery provided by Part XIII.

The Senator from North Dakota declares that his reservation is an anesthetic. Evidently he believes that the patient, which is his reservation, does not suffer death, but will remain anesthetized until the influences to which I have referred produce an awakening. The trenchant expression of the Senator that the reservation which I have submitted has the effect of an ax seems to indicate that he regards the adoption of the latter resolution as effectually dealing with the subject and as administering a coup de grâce to the plan to place this Republic under the international organizations to be created by Part XIII. I could only wish that my resolution would be effective and end all efforts to subject the internal affairs of this Republic to the all-powerful organization which the international socialists throughout the world believe will be created when the provisions of Part XIII are effectually administered.

Part XIII deals exclusively with domestic and internal concerns. It is comprehensive and will be construed to embrace substantially all matters and questions connected with the life of the people. The organizations created by Part XIII are to deal with the following questions:

All conditions of labor involving injustice, hardship, and privation, or which produce unrest. The regulation of the hours of work, including the establishment of a maximum working day and week; the regulation of the labor supply and prevention of unemployment; the provision of an adequate living wage; the protection of the worker against sickness, disease, or injury arising out of his employment, and protection of children, young persons, and women; provisions for old age and injury; protection for the interests of workers when employed in countries other than their own; recognition of the principle of freedom of association; the organization of vocational and technical education; and other measures.

If all these subjects are dealt with by this organization there will be but a very narrow field left for the exercise of national functions and authority by the member States of the league. Under the power to regulate the labor supply, this international organization could claim jurisdiction over immigration, particularly the immigration of workers. It might determine that Japan's labor supply was too great and that of the United States inadequate, and therefore there should be a migration of Japanese laborers to the United States. Porto Rico or the Philippine Islands might be regarded as too densely populated for the welfare of the laborers residing in those islands, and efforts might then be made to convey thousands of the inhabitants of those islands to the United States to work in the fields, upon the farms, or in other industrial pursuits. This international organization which would be controlled by countries other than the United States might determine that labor was receiving too great a reward in the United States, and that in order to equalize the wages of other countries, where wages are low and the wage earners are numerous, an enormous influx of labor into the United States was necessary. In order to prevent unemployment, the international organization might follow the Bolshevists, and require the United States and other nations to nationalize mines and factories and railroads and to engage in all forms of paternalistic enterprises which would be destructive of the economic and political systems obtaining in various countries of the world. How would this organization prevent unemployment in India and China and in other nations of the world where the laboring man is paid but a few cents per day, and where it is difficult to obtain employment of any character? Will it assume, in order to furnish employment, the control of the industrial life of the States within the league? Will it lay its heavy hand upon the members of the league and require them, under the threat of economic boycott or isolation from other nations, to furnish employment to their respective nationals? Or will it order all national lines to be obliterated, so that labor, like a great human tide, may sweep over continents and islands without impediment or obstacle until it circles the earth?

This organization is to deal with the subject of an "adequate living wage," and the protection of the worker against sickness, disease, and so forth, and the protection of children, young persons, and women. This will involve the question of production, the relation of capital and labor, the processes of production; and the determination of these matters will involve the question of housing and sanitation, and all matters and influences that enter into the lives of the people. The protection of children and young persons, of necessity, will involve the question of education, and that is directly related to the question of taxation. Provisions for old age and injury will involve the question of insurance and pensions. The determination of this matter will call for plans for private insurance or for governmental insurance. This international organization may conclude that it is the function of the States to provide insurance and old-age pensions and indemnity for injuries sustained in occupational pursuits. Its requirements may call for the destruction of the insurance systems found in most civilized countries of the world.

I have not time to point out to what extent the activities of this organization would cover the field of domestic control of the nations who may become members of the league. But it is apparent that the assertion of the power sought to be conferred upon the international labor organizations would divest States of the control of their most important affairs and leave them stripped and naked. Time will not permit a detailed analysis of the 40 articles found in Part XIII, which are devoted to the organization, or instrumentality, or superpower, or supernation—whatever it may be called—which is created to control to a greater or less degree the internal affairs of the members of the league.

A recent article written by Mr. Edward N. Dingley appears in the November number of the Protectionist which deals with this part of the treaty and analyzes some of its provisions. Without reading, I shall insert a portion of the article in connection with my remarks:

In the discussion of the terms of the treaty of peace between the United States and the allied nations on the one hand and Germany on the other, comparatively little notice has been taken of what is designated as Part XIII, under the title of "Labor." Yet this portion of the treaty, occupying about 10 pages of the entire 213 comprising the voluminous document, contains provisions of vital and far-reaching importance, especially to the United States. * * *

The underlying principle of the "labor" provisions, as of the "covenant," is internationalism. Its objects are set forth in the preamble:

The proposed "organization of labor" is planned to be an adjunct of the league of nations—a wheel within a wheel. Ratification of the treaty of peace by the United States will automatically make the United States a member of the International Labor Conference. The original members of the league of nations "shall be the members of the labor organization." Since there are to be 32 original members of the league of nations, there will be the same number of members of the international labor organization. The permanent organization "shall be (1) a general conference of representatives and (2) an international labor office controlled by a governing body." The general conference shall meet at least once a year and "shall be composed of four representatives of each of the members"; two shall be Government delegates and one shall be an employers' delegate and one an employees' delegate. Each delegate may be accompanied by not more than two advisers without votes.

Under this plan the general conference of representatives of the members will consist of 128 delegates, 64 representing the several Governments, 32 representing the employers, and 32 representing the work people. The 64 "non-Government delegates," as they are called, are to be chosen "in agreement with the industrial organizations which are most representative of employers or work people." There is no specific provision for the selection of the 64 Government delegates. Presumably they will be named by the heads of the respective Governments or by the persons representing the respective nations in the league of nations. The 64 "non-Government" delegates, if "chosen in agreement," must be agreeable to both employers and employees. No procedure is provided in case of a disagreement.

The following countries, self-governing colonies or dependencies, each will have four delegates in the general conference of representatives: United States; Belgium; Brazil; British Empire, Canada, Australia, New Zealand, South Africa, India; China; Cuba; Ecuador; France; Serb-Croat-Slovene State; Siam; Czecho-Slavonia; Uruguay; Greece; Guatemala; Haiti; Hejaz; Italy; Japan; Liberia; Nicaragua; Peru; Panama; Poland; Portugal; Roumania.

It will be observed that the British Empire, together with its four "self-governing" colonies and India, which is not self-governing, will have 24 votes and the United States will have 4—the same number that Japan or Haiti or Hejaz or Liberia or Siam will have.

The general conference will meet at the seat of the league of nations, where an "international labor office" will be established "as a part of the organization of the league of nations."

Article 339 provides that "each of the members will [shall] pay the traveling and subsistence expenses of its delegates and their advisers and of its representatives attending the meetings of the conference." There is no method provided whereby this fund shall be raised or through what channel it shall be disbursed. However, the presumption is that each member [nation] agreeing to the treaty and thus becoming a party to that portion of the contract devoted to the international labor conference will appropriate funds to meet the expenses.

The governing body of the international labor office is to consist of 24 persons, 12 representing the Governments and 12 representing the employers and the workers—6 each. The 12 latter shall be elected by their respective groups. Of the 12 representing the Governments, 8 shall be "nominated" by the "chief industrial groups in the main conference" and 4 shall be "nominated" by the Governments' delegates. The council of the league of nations shall decide which are the groups "of chief industrial importance." Members of the governing board will hold office for three years. The governing board shall regulate its own procedure and fix its own times of meeting. There is to be a director appointed by the governing board and a staff (no number mentioned) appointed by the director.

We now have (1) a general conference of 128 delegates meeting at least once a year, (2) a governing board of 24 holding office for three years and meeting when and where it pleases, (3) a director of the international labor office with an indeterminate number on his staff. Each of the members will [shall] pay the traveling expenses of the delegates to the conference, members of the governing board, and all advisers. All other expenses of whatever nature "shall be paid to the director by the secretary general of the league of nations out of the general funds of the league."

The functions of the international labor office (controlled by the governing board) shall be the distribution of information "on all subjects relating to the international adjustment of conditions of industrial life and labor and the preparation of the 'agenda' (program) for the meetings of the conference."

The subjects for discussion and consideration by the conference "shall be determined by the governing board." Objections to any subject may be made by any of the members [Governments] but such objections may be overruled by a two-thirds vote of the delegates present in the general conference. After the conference has reached a decision upon any subject a proposal either (1) for legislation or (2) for an international convention may be recommended to the members [Governments] to give it effect. A two-thirds vote is required and "due regard to climate, conditions, and imperfect development" shall be had.

Now comes the vital part of the contract. Each member "undertakes [agrees] that it will within the period of one year at most from the closing of the session of the conference or at the earliest practical moment, and in no case later than 18 months, bring the recommendation before the authority or authorities within whose competence the matter lies for the enactment of legislation or other action." In the case of Federal States the power of which to enter into conventions on labor matters is subject to limitations, this provision of the agreement is limited to recommendations only, and "in no case shall any member be asked or required to lessen the protection afforded by its existing legislation to the workers concerned." This is good as far as it goes.

In case any member [Government] fails to comply with the recommendations of the conference, an explanation may be required by the general board. If no reply or an inadequate reply is received, the fact may be published for the information of all the members. Any member [nation] may file a complaint against any other member [nation], and the governing board, after such complaint or on its own motion, may institute a commission of inquiry. Each member [nation] agrees to nominate three persons, forming a panel from which the members of the commission of inquiry shall be drawn. The secretary general of the league of nations shall nominate from this panel the three members of the commission of inquiry. This commission shall make a report indicating among other things "the measure, if any, of an economic character against a defaulting Government which it considers to be appropriate and which it thinks other Governments would be justified in adopting." The secretary general of the league of nations shall communicate the report to each of the Governments concerned in the complaints. Each Government must decide either to accept the recommendations or refer [appeal] the complaint to a permanent court of international justice to be established. The decision of this court shall be final and the court shall "indicate the measure, if any, of an economic character which it considers to be appropriate." In the event of any member [nation] failing to carry out the recommendation, any other member [nation] may take against the defaulting member [nation] the measures of an economic character indicated in the report of the commission or the decision of the court. These provisions of the treaty are to apply to colonies, protectorates, and possessions "except where local conditions make it impossible or require modifications." All expenses of the first meeting of the labor conference in Washington and originally called for October, 1919, will be borne by the members [nations] "in accordance with the apportionment of the expenses of the International Bureau of the Universal Postal Union."

How will this portion of the treaty of peace, providing for an international labor conference, affect America industrially and economically? It is clear that the machinery provided in the contract contemplates the internationalization of all matters "touching the problem of industry and employment," including unions, collective bargaining, strikes, wages, hours of labor, and all kindred subjects. A body of 128 delegates, 64 representing the Governments—presumably politically appointed—32 representing the employers and 32 representing the work people, in session at the seat of the league of nations, will have the power to consider and "recommend" what the policy of any member [nation] concerning any problem of industry and employment shall be. In this conference the United States will have 4 votes—4 out of 128.

For example, take the five most vital questions touching industry and employment—wages, unions, closed shops, strikes, and collective bargaining. For a hundred years, with a few and never-to-be-forgotten exceptions, the United States has adhered to the policy of protection. The difference between the cost of production in this country and competing countries as a rule has measured the amount of protection accorded. Wages are about 80 per cent of the cost of production, hence wages have been a matter of vital importance. The scale of wages always has been higher in this country than in any other country. Suppose the International Labor Conference controlled by the members from China, Japan, Brazil, Portugal, New Zealand, Belgium, and perhaps France and Italy decide that the scale of wages in the United States is too low. This might be made an excuse for increasing the cost of production in the United States, thus aiding the commercial rivals of this country in international trade. Suppose the recognition of unions be made an international policy by the labor conference, what would prevent the trades-unions from controlling the industries of the world? Thus the unions of half a dozen European and Asiatic countries might control industry and employment in the United States. Suppose the conference should decide upon the closed shop and recommend it to the different members [nations]. Where would the United States then stand as an industrial nation? What would become of the American right to work unless all workers joined unions? Suppose the right to collective strikes should be recommended as an international policy. Is the United States ready to legalize collective strikes? Is it prepared to legalize collective bargaining?

True, the conference of 128 delegates sitting at the seat of the league of nations under the contract can only "recommend"; but what follows the failure of any member [nation] to carry out the recommendation? Failure on the part of a member [nation] to obey the recommendation of the conference is followed by (1) publication of the failure, (2) an inquiry by a commission selected by the secretary general of the league of nations, (3) recommendations of "an economic character" against the defaulting member [nation], (4) appeal by any member [nation] to a court of international justice, followed by a decision indicating still further penalties of an economic character. Is there any doubt but what these economic penalties ultimately will be invoked against a "defaulting" member [nation]?

There appears to be no limit to the power of the proposed International Labor Conference within the broad field of industrial and labor problems. It is conceivable that the industrial supremacy of the United States, the hours of labor, the conditions of labor, the operation and management of industries, both great and small—of railroads, mines, etc.—ultimately might be controlled by the proposed International Labor Conference of 128 members (in which the United States would have only 4 votes) engineered by a governing board of 12, all of whom may be un-American, with its headquarters in Europe, probably at Geneva. It is conceivable that ultimately the control of America's domestic industries and transportation, so far as labor is concerned, might be transferred from Washington and the several State capitals to Geneva or the seat of the league of nations. The possibilities exist and the perils are apparent.

Furthermore, if the contemplated league of nations may use the "economic boycott," the International Labor Conference, an integral part of the league, may do likewise with equal effect. What is meant by an economic boycott? Refusal to trade, a blockade, cutting off supplies of raw material, food, coal, etc. Does America wish to be controlled by a labor conference of 128 men and a governing board of 12 men sitting in Europe? Is the United States prepared to surrender its industrial and economic rights to a coterie of men all but four un-American? Is the United States willing to jeopardize its fiscal and economic policy, its industrial independence, its supremacy? It is unthinkable.

It is argued that such a thing is impossible. Yet it is possible if the treaty of peace is ratified as it is with the provisions of the International Labor Conference intact. The treaty of peace is a contract. The creation of an International Labor Conference is a part of this contract, and the signing of the contract by the representatives of the United States makes binding upon the United States all the provisions, agreements, and undertakings recited therein. They can be enforced as much as any treaty can be enforced, and the United States always has lived and always will live up to its contracts. If the United States signs "on the dotted line," there is no escape from the consequences. Even the good effects of the American protective policy may be nullified.

The leading article in the April, 1919, number of the report of the United States Department of Labor, Bureau of Labor Statistics, is entitled "Control of labor conditions by international action." The article is by Leifur Magnusson, evidently a gentleman with a foreign ancestry and alien turn of mind. In this article, vouched for by the United States Department of Labor, it is learned that the Socialist Internationale is the present organized expression of the international socialist movement. It dates back to 1864, when Karl Marx organized the International Workingmen's Association of London. Thus the International Labor Conference, incorporated in the treaty of peace, distinctly is of socialist origin. The organization was revived in 1889 and held its last meeting in Copenhagen in 1919, where 33 nations were represented. This movement was followed by the International Trades Secretariat, and since 1913 the International Secretariat has been the central executive organ of the International Federation of Labor. Nearly all the members come from European countries and represent collective policies—that is, State capitalism or socialism. As an adjunct to it the International Association for Labor Legislation was formed in Paris in 1910 for the purpose of promoting treaties touching the movement of labor, emigration, equality of treatment of nationals and aliens, and uniform labor standards.

This is the organization which took advantage of the presence of the peace conference in Paris and succeeded in having attached to the treaty what is known as the International Labor Conference section. A program of purely European and socialistic origin was grafted upon a document designed to bring peace between the allied and associated powers on one hand and Germany on the other. To say the least, the process of the grafting was novel if not revolutionary. A commission on international labor legislation, headed by Mr. Samuel Gompers and comprising delegates from Great Britain, France, Italy, Japan, and Belgium, formulated a report and submitted a program, which was adopted by the peace conference and incorporated in the treaty of peace. Like the covenant of the league of nations, the labor conference is entirely foreign to a treaty of peace with Germany, to negotiate which the conference met at Versailles.

While the program outlined is innocent on its face, the possibilities are revealed, first, in the aims and objects of the European Internationale Socialist Organization—collectivism, destruction of capitalism and the wage system, and the public ownership of industries and utilities; second, in the language used in the labor conference section of the treaty defining the functions of the general conference and the governing board to be the consideration of "all subjects relating to the international adjustment of conditions of industrial life and labor." That is sufficiently comprehensive to meet the views of any socialist or internationalist. There is no question touching the production and distribution of wealth or the policies of nations in solving their own industrial and economic problems which can escape the consideration and "recommendation" of this "International Labor Conference" in which the United States will have 4 votes out of 128, and perhaps no vote at all in the governing board of 24.

Twenty-seven nations (or separate countries), together with four self-governing British colonies and India (not a self-governing colony), will be represented in the general conference. Ten will be European, 7 Asiatic, 7 North American, 6 South American, and 2 African. The British Empire, with her colonies and India, will be represented by 24 delegates, and the 26 other countries (including the United States) will be represented by 4 delegates each. The British Empire will have only 8 less than 25 per cent of the entire membership while the United States, with more at stake, with a larger industrial population, and with far greater industries, will have 3½ per cent of the entire membership. In voting power the United States will be on a par with Cuba, Guatemala, Honduras, Liberia, Nicaragua, Panama, Roumania, Haiti, Siam, Uruguay, the Croat-Slovene State, Czechoslovakia, and Hejaz.

The idea is preposterous! Think of Hejaz, Siam, Liberia, India, or even China and Japan, voting to determine what the industrial or economic policy of the United States shall be! Think what the power of Great Britain, with her colonies united on an imperial commercial and preferential tariff policy might be! Labor is a vital factor in the cost of production, and the cost of production in a large measure will control in the future commercial struggle of the world. Suppose Great Britain, France, and Italy, together with Japan, should form an anti-American commercial alliance and with their 36 votes in the international labor conference gain control and seek to force a labor program crippling the United States. With only 4 votes in the conference, what could the United States do? Nothing but submit to the consequences. Suppose the United States refused to carry out the program. An economic boycott would follow. Such possibilities are sufficient to warn patriotic Americans.

Yet it is argued that the aims of the organizations are to raise the labor standards of all other countries to the level of the American standard. Will China and Japan, or even Great Britain, France, and Italy, agree to this? By no means; for that would mean defeat of their plans for a resumption of domination in the trade of the world and the recapture of the markets of the world. In the struggle the tendency will not be to raise the low-standard countries, but to lower the high-standard countries. Water always runs down hill. No international labor conference can be sufficiently strong to embrace in its protecting scope the workmen and workwomen of the world. If American workmen and workwomen think they will improve their condition under international rather than national protection they have a serious disappointment in store for them.

Examination of the labor and industrial conditions of the 32 countries, including the colonies of Great Britain and India, faintly suggests the folly of attempting to protect labor conditions the world over by an international board and the impossibility of trying to raise and make uniform or even approximately uniform the standards of all.

Take the European countries in the proposed labor conference—even the best are low grade compared with the United States, while Greece, Poland, and Portugal are below comparison, and Roumania, the Croat-Slovene State, and Czechoslovakia are out of consideration. Take the Asiatic countries—Japan, China, Siam, India, and Hejaz are either cheap-labor countries or slave countries. Australia and New Zealand would do Great Britain's bidding. In North America Canada would follow Great Britain's lead, while the countries south to Panama are low-wage or practically peon countries. All the countries in South America are low-wage countries, mostly agricultural, and all more or less backward. Even in Brazil, one of the most advanced countries in South America, out of a population of 17,000,000 more than 80 per cent can neither read nor write. In this international hopper the tendency will be to drag down the high-grade countries, not lift up the low-grade countries. If the dreams of the international labor conference are to be realized even partially, the burden must rest on the high-grade countries. With its 4 votes, what can the United States do toward solving this tremendous problem?

It will be observed that Part XIII sets up an organization which is to be "permanent" in character. Indeed, article 387 says: "A permanent organization is hereby established for the promotion of the objects set forth in the preamble."

The object of this organization, then, is to deal with the numerous subjects to which I have just referred and which are embraced within the preamble. This organization by the terms of the treaty is required not only to take cognizance of all these domestic questions but to act in relation to them. A power outside of the States who are members of the league is set up and required to take jurisdiction of these important internal questions and to deal with them. Who can doubt but what the international organization will more and more strive for power and authority; and, backed by international socialists and communists, it will attack in time the authority of the States to deal with their internal affairs, and seek the destruction of national lines and the union of the laboring classes, if not all other elements of society, under the control and authority of this overshadowing international power. So powerful is this organization that it is to deny representation by members—that is, nations—of the league unless the delegates sent meet the approval of the organization. The seat of this international power will be for the present in Geneva, and from its officials and from the meetings of the representatives, four only of which will be from the United States, orders will emanate, decrees will be promulgated, and statutes enacted, which will affect the labor of the United States and the internal and national affairs of this Republic.

Among the functions of this international labor office are the collection and distribution of information on all subjects relating to the international adjustment of conditions relating to industrial life and labor, and particularly the examination of subjects which will be brought before the conference to the end that international conventions may be made and that special investigations may be ordered. It will deal with international disputes. It will edit and publish a periodical paper, which may be published in many languages, dealing with the problems of industry and employment; and it shall have "authority to do all things assigned to it by the conference." The distinguished Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] discussed article 396, to which I have just referred, and directed attention to the dangers which are involved in its provisions. He called attention to the enormous expenses that will follow from the establishment of a permanent labor bureau, the collection of information from all parts of the world relating particularly to the subjects within the jurisdiction of this international organization, and the "editing of a periodical in two or more languages to accommodate the needs and wishes of labor throughout the world." Not millions and tens of millions but hundreds of millions of dollars will probably be required to carry out the work of this organization.

Its mission is to emphasize class consciousness and to unite into one all-powerful organization, international in character, the laborers of the world. It will thus separate the people residing under the same flag and impress them with the view that this world organization with its capital and seat of power in Europe controls labor and is the beneficent and protecting power to which the laborer should go whenever he seeks the amelioration of his condition. It is manifest what a policy of this character would result in; it would divide the allegiance of the people and in time transfer from the Government under which they live their affections, their interests, and perhaps their loyalty to an alien, all-powerful world organization. If workmen feel the conditions of labor or any economic or industrial condition need reform, appeals will be made for correction not to the State and the Government under which they live but to this foreign, all-powerful Frankenstein. Even if conservative men should control this international organization and they should seek to restrain its activities within what might be called legitimate or proper bounds, in time with its world perspective and its world-wide authority they would extend its activities and magnify its operations. Ambitious men in the ranks of labor, even in this free land, are seeking to drive a wedge into society and organize labor for political power and to control the Government. Others more radical proclaim the union of workmen in all the world for the purpose of political control of all nations.

It has been estimated that this international creation provided for by Part XIII will require not thousands but tens of thousands of employees to collect information upon labor and all allied and connected subjects, publish and distribute newspapers among the hundreds of millions of laborers throughout the world, and to carry out the stupendous program of this world colossus. The members of the league will have to meet these enormous expenditures, and the people will be taxed for such purpose.

This international organization is to prepare conventions or treaties to be submitted to the various members of the league and to make recommendations for their guidance in dealing with their domestic and internal problems.

Article 408 provides that the members of the league are to make an annual report to the international labor office on measures which it has taken to give effect to the provisions of conventions to which it is a party, and these reports "shall be in such form and contain such particulars as the governing body—that is, of the international organization—may request." In other words, sovereign States are compelled to submit to an extraneous organization, an international body, in the form which it may prescribe, reports as to its conduct in dealing with conventions and recommendations prepared by such organization. If this world power makes a recommendation or if a convention has been accepted by the United States or any member of the league, upon any complaint being made to the international labor office by any "industrial association" of employers or of workers, such nation may immediately be brought to account. In other words, this international labor organization sitting at Geneva, upon complaint of some organization of laborers in Liberia or India or Japan that the United States has not carried out the recommendations or the terms of the convention submitted by the international organization and agreed to by the members of the league, may summon this Republic to make "statement on the subject as it may think fit," and if no "statement is made within a reasonable time," or if the statement submitted "is not deemed satisfactory to the governing body of the labor organization," it shall have the right to publish the defense of the United States and its reply thereto. And if Liberia or Japan or any other nation shall make a complaint to the international labor office that the United States is not observing a convention in accordance with its view, the governing body of the labor office shall have the right to communicate with our Nation and notify it to submit a statement in defense of its alleged misconduct, or if the governing body does not think it necessary it may apply for the appointment of a commission of inquiry to consider the complaint and to report thereon.

I might also add in passing that a delegate to the conference may make complaint against a nation, so that this Republic might be made a defendant before this international organization upon the complaint of some delegate sent to the conference from a labor union of Australia or Japan, or the farthest and most backward nation of the world. The commission of inquiry would consist of persons selected from other countries and might be from Asia or Africa or the islands of the sea. This commission of inquiry has power to sit and try the United States or any other nation, and to prepare a report embodying its findings on all questions of fact relating to the issue between the parties, and containing such recommendations as it may think proper as to the steps which should be taken to meet the complaint and the time within which they should be taken. The commission is also required "to indicate in its report the measures, if any, of an economic character against a defaulting Government which it considers to be appropriate, and which it considers other Governments would be justified in adopting." If a nation against whom findings are made refuses to accept the recommendations made in the report of the commission, the matter will be referred to the permanent court of international justice and its finding upon the question "shall be final." Its decision may result in an economic boycott against the defendant nation. It matters not that the question involved is domestic or that it involves constitutional questions. A foreign tribunal decides what this Nation shall do, regardless of the constitutions of the States of the Union or the Constitution of the United States. Its decisions may be at variance with our settled policies and in opposition to the adjudications of the Supreme Court of the United States. In discussing this part of the treaty the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN], in his speech delivered on the 11th instant, made the following statement:

> The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL], in discussing that question last Friday afternoon, reminded the Senator of a regulation that might be made by Congress, declared valid by the Supreme Court of the United States, and declared inapplicable, or no longer to apply to us, by the international labor conference. He then propounded the inquiry, Whom would we obey, our own Supreme Court mandate or the international labor conference?
> It is provided here that the finding of the permanent court of international justice shall be final, and in its last judgment on the question it may indicate in its order the character of the economic pressure which it considers appropriate to be applied to a defaulting Government. If that were applied to us, let us examine for a moment what it would do, what would be the necessary consequence if the international court should enforce one of its orders against us for a failure to obey some finding of the international labor conference.
> The Supreme Court might declare that the regulation was valid. It would be binding upon every citizen, official, and every State authority in the 48 States of the Union. It would be valid to all intents and purposes within our territorial limits. However, at some remote point in the world—Geneva or some place in Baluchistan—the international labor conference shortly afterwards holds its meeting. They find that the rule we have adopted, and which the Supreme Court has held valid in our country, is not in accordance with international justice.
> The angle at which the various nations of the world view it will be expressed by two-thirds majority. If two-thirds majority have been obtained, they will enact some other and different rule for the regulation of the same subject. Child labor is a good illustration. Child labor in the British East Indies or in any part of the warmer portion of Asia would require a vastly different standard from that of the northern Temperate Zone. The development of children, the age at which they reach maturity, is somewhat a question of latitude. Therefore the rule that would be applicable in our country would be a too high age limit in the Tropics or in any of the warmer portions of central Asia. It would not apply to portions of northern Africa, any of the French possessions, Algiers, or Egypt, or of the various countries where there is an earlier maturity of childhood.
> Therefore the conference may arrive at some different conclusion and impose some other international rule upon us, a different law than that we had provided for our own domestic affairs. Of course, they can not enforce it unless by war. That is a matter for us to decide to suit ourselves. But under these provisions economic retaliation is the weapon expressly provided. In the covenant of the league of nations one of the articles empowers the instruments of that league to create a permanent court of international justice. Evidently the men who framed these various articles knew what they were doing. They had a very comprehensive view of the entire mechanism, and it fits accurately one part to another.
> The permanent court of international justice referred to in articles 416, 417, and 418 is the same tribunal the creation of which is provided for in the covenant of the league of nations. Their decree, therefore, binds all the appropriate measures of economic retaliation the governments would be justified in adopting against any defaulting government. Article 419 goes still further:
> "In the event of any member failing to carry out within the time specified the recommendations, if any, contained in the report of the commission of inquiry, or in the decision of the permanent court of international justice, as the case may be, any other member may take against that member the measures of an economic character indicated in the report of the commission or in the decision of the court as appropriate to the case."
> So it is not only the joint action of all the members taking part in the conference, but any one of them may, on its own initiative, undertake to enforce economic retaliation against us. It may make burdensome port regulations; it may put on discriminative duties; it may lay an embargo upon the principal articles we export to their market; it may take any measure that, in the discretion of its government, it sees fit to adopt, and we are helpless as against one of the members of the international conference or against all of them acting jointly against us.

If the State of Texas or Massachusetts enacted labor laws, and complaint was made to this international tribunal, and it found that such laws were in violation of some accepted recommendation or convention, and the United States were put upon trial and adjudged to be in default, an economic boycott might be proclaimed against this Government, even though the States of Massachusetts or Texas had acted within the limits of their jurisdiction or power.

If time permitted further examples could be submitted showing the extent to which Part XIII interferes with the control by the United States and the States of the Union of their purely internal and domestic affairs. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], the senior Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS], the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED], and the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN] have submitted to the Senate able and exhaustive arguments dealing with the various provisions of Part XIII. The addresses of these eminent Senators so fully cover the subject that it is a work of supererogation for me to further discuss these provisions of the treaty.

In the consideration of the treaty by the American people attention has been directed almost exclusively to the provisions of Part I, relating to the covenant of the league. So absorbed have the people been in the overshadowing question as to whether this Nation should enter the league of nations that other important provisions of the treaty with Germany have been overlooked or ignored. Part XIII has scarcely arrested attention, and only a few individuals in our country have been attracted by its provisions. It has been my observation, however, that those who have carefully analyzed its provisions with a view to determining whether it was consistent with American ideals and the principles underlying this Government and with the interest of our social organism, and whether it was of advantage to the American people and to the Nation, have been filled with the most serious misgivings or have been firmly convinced that the creation of this international organization may endanger the peace of the world and prove a menace to this Republic.

The Senator from Wisconsin has strongly opposed Part XIII, and has pointed out in a convincing way the injury which is sure to result to American labor if the United States becomes a party to the international organization provided for in Part XIII. The standard of labor in the United States is superior to that in other lands. It is not my purpose to institute comparisons that would tend to disparage the peoples of other lands, but yet a discussion of this question compels the statement that the conditions prevailing in this Republic are so superior in character, measured by every standard, to those obtaining in other nations, that it would be unfortunate for the American workmen to be drawn into an international organization the control of which would be in the hands of European and Asiatic nations.

The purpose of this international organization will be, as indicated by the terms of Part XIII, and the declarations of the internationalists who procured its adoption as a part of the treaty, to secure uniformity of labor conditions throughout the world. It is absolutely impossible, as was so clearly demonstrated by the Senator from Wisconsin, to effectuate this plan without the reaction being unfavorable to the American workmen. It is preposterous to attempt uniformity of labor conditions with such varied climatic, physical, industrial, and racial conditions prevailing throughout the world. Labor and its interests are inseparable from capital; Persia, and Japan, and China, and other nations of the world lack capital. The conditions of labor in these countries, therefore, can not possibly be brought to the same standard as those existing in the United States or in those nations which have an abundance of capital. No international organization can deal with the labor conditions within the United States as the States and the Federal Government can deal with them. Any attempt by such an extranational organization or extraneous authority would disastrously affect the situation of labor in the United States. Any attempt to secure uniformity, to bring to the same level the conditions of labor throughout the world, will profoundly affect labor in all of its conditions and situations in the United States. No leveling process must be employed that may bring American labor down. If Part XIII becomes operative, we transfer to an alien organization the control of this vital internal question, and the American laborer will find the forum for redress across the seas and not within his own land and among his own people. The American laborer's interests are inseparably interwoven with the interests of the American people. Their welfare and prosperity is his concern. His interest as a part of our economic, social, and political organism is the interest of all others who live under the flag, and their interest and his interest will be best promoted if the questions provided for in Part XIII and which are to be dealt with by an alien and foreign authority are confided where the laws and Constitution of this country provide, namely, with the States of the Union and the Government of the United States. As I have stated, in the international concerns which the treaty provides for, the United States will have but 4 representatives, Great Britain 24, and the other signatories to the league 4 each. Thus an organization will be created consisting of 132 representatives, 4 only of which are from the United States. No matter how liberal and tolerant the representatives of other nations in this international organization may be, the superior condition of the American workmen, the power and wealth of this Government, of necessity, would create some resentment, or at any rate would provoke such intense sympathies for other countries as to lead to invidious legislation, if not discriminatory policies against the United States.

It is a matter of public history that Mr. Gompers, who presided over the commission that drafted Part XIII, felt that American labor would gain no advantage from its provisions. Mr. Gompers, in his address delivered at the thirty-ninth annual convention of the American Federation of Labor at Atlantic City, June 20, 1919, referred to the contest which took place at the conference, and stated that he found himself "continually depressed, though fighting on and on until the last moment." So unsatisfactory were the provisions of Part XIII that Mr. Gompers declared that "we could not be parties to the covenant as it then stood unless some provision should be made to safeguard the rights and interests of the American wage earners."

The only measure of protection obtained by Mr. Gompers was the declaration contained in article 405, "that in no case shall any member be asked or required, as a result of the adoption of any recommendation or draft convention by the conference, to lessen the protection afforded by its existing legislation to the workers concerned."

Mr. Gompers appreciated that any effort to secure uniformity of conditions for labor throughout the world would result in the lowering of American standards, and might call for a change in existing laws enacted by States of the United States in the interest of labor. He insisted that this leveling process, by which uniformity was to be secured, should not lessen the protection afforded by existing legislation.

Mr. President, the plan involved in Part XIII of setting up an international labor superpower is not new, and its genesis is not found at the Paris conference. For years a vigorous propaganda has been carried on by internationalists and extreme socialists for the destruction of what they call capitalistic governments and the overthrow of the existing political and industrial structures throughout the world. From time to time conferences have been held by representatives from various countries and from them have gone forth zealous advocates, whose proselyting efforts carried them into almost every land. An international convention was held at Berne, in Switzerland, in February of this year, and it announced a program which, in my opinion, if carried into effect, would destroy society and all Governments of the world. Its program was conveyed to the peace conference at Paris and its demands, in part at least, find expression in Part XIII of the pending treaty. Bolshevists, communists, socialists, and internationalists were members of the Berne conference, and the resolutions there adopted have become for the present the basis of the campaign which is being waged in all the world. Of course, their demands willl become more radical; concessions granted in Part XIII of the treaty will lead to further demands and to the enlargement of the power and authority which is sought for the international organization soon to be created. These are some of the demands of the Berne conference:

> The functions of the league (meaning the league of nations) shall include the establishment, development, and enforcements of an international labor charter.

Let me pause long enough to remark that this international communistic conference was dictating to the peace conference what provisions should be inserted in the peace treaty with respect to labor. The demand was made that an "international labor charter should be established and its provisions enforced."

The conference further declared:

> The limits which capitalism has reached are very different in the various countries. One of the dangers here involved is that industry and labor of the more progressive countries are injured by a system of sweated labor in the more backward countries. The need to establish an international standard of labor legislation—

Another resolution urged that the socialists of the whole world should "close their ranks and not deliver the revolutionary peoples into the hands of international reaction."

Only one interpretation can be placed upon this resolution, namely, that the revolutions, industrial and social, be continued, and that the socialists fight on for the overthrow of the so-called capitalistic system and the establishment of the internationalist form of international anarchy.

It was further declared:

> The Berne conference having taken into consideration the resolutions adopted by the international trade-union conferences of Leeds and Berne, and without prejudice to any more far-reaching resolutions which may be adopted by trade-unions, demands that the following minimum requirements, which are already carried out in part in some countries, shall be converted into a code of international law by the league of nations on the conclusion of peace.

It will be observed that a demand is again made that the league of nations shall execute the scheme of the internationalists, and that their requirements shall be converted into a code of international law.

The conference then declared what should constitute a day's and a week's work, and what conditions should obtain in respect to the service rendered by labor. A portion of the code of international law, which they demand shall be enacted, relates to the following matters, as indicated by the resolutions adopted:

> In all districts where there is home work, wage boards, representatives of employers and workers shall be instituted, with the duty of fixing legal rates of wages. The rates of wages shall be posted up in the work places. Immigrant workers shall enjoy the same rights as the workers of the country into which they immigrate as regards joining and taking part in the work of trade-unions, including the right to strike. Any interference with the exercise of the right of combination and association should be punished.

It is to be observed that the States and Nations are to be deprived of the power to control these questions, vital to their existence, and an international organization is to enact laws to govern labor and labor conditions and all related questions within the States which belong to the league of nations. Combinations may be formed in States, but this international tribunal will be omnipotent, and the State in the exercise of its police power may not interfere; nor may a State interfere with foreign workers, and it can not prohibit immigration, but may only restrict it temporarily where there is a period of economic depression, but even then the purpose must be to protect the foreign workers, as well as the nationals of the nation involved.

The resolutions "demand that the States shall convoke as speedily as possible an international conference, which must take effective measures against the reduction of the value of wages and assure their payment in money which has not depreciated in value." The States are also required to "insure all workers against industrial accidents, and a system of unemployment insurance shall be set up in every country."

The conference further demands that a special international code for the protection of seamen shall be established, and it "shall be prepared in collaboration with the seamen's unions."

The further demand was made that the peace treaty should contain provisions in order to further promote international labor regulations and that the signatories to the treaty should appoint a permanent commission—> consisting in equal parts of representatives of the States which are members of the league of nations and of the international trade-union federation. The commission shall prepare the ground for and convoke conferences of representatives of the contracting States, which shall be held every year to promote international labor legislation. One-half of the voting members of the conference shall consist of representatives of the organized workers of every country. The conferences shall have power to adopt binding resolutions within the scope of the powers conferred upon them.

An examination of Part XIII forces the conviction that the international Berne conference either drafted Part XIII or its influence and spirit controlled those who gave it form.

Mr. John De Kay, in his book called "The Spirit of the Internationale at Berne," discusses internationalism and the aims of the Berne conference. He boldly declares for internationalism and states:

> These great bodies (labor organizations) should, without delay, create a world parliament—a world parliament standing for the interests of the masses of labor in all lands and dedicated to a protection of the general social welfare without distinction as to race, nationality, or religion. Such a world parliament should meet three or four times each year in the capitals of various nations. It should be provided from the general funds with its own public buildings and expenses; it should elect its executive board of action and confide to such a board or cabinet the powers to carry out decisions, summon the parliament in the event of a crisis, and by the decisions of such a parliament the labor and socialism of the whole world should abide, and upon its mandates they should act.

He further declares:

> There is no time to be lost in the creation of this unique and only body through which exploitation and wars may be abolished. * * *
> This is not the time to foster revengeful measures against one nation or another or to inflict arrogance upon vanquished men whose despair will lead to a form of social upheaval which will cross all national boundaries. This is to-day only an eventuality, but it may soon be a reality. * * *
> As one who has associated with the plutocrats and who knows their arroganee and blindness and how reluctant they are to believe in anything except the omnipotence of their own powers, I feel that they will only act in any new or reasonable way under pressure of the most direct and irresistible sort. * * *

Gradually the feeling is gaining ground that the policy of negotiation is failing, and concurrently with this sentiment the ideas of constitutional action are passing from the minds of men. This is an ominous sign which he who runs may read. It bears a sinister inscription which must not be ignored.

Let there be no mistake as to what these words mean. If there is to be "no more war," it means complete disarmament for every nation. And if "all is possible" is not to be translated into universal violence, it means that those who now rule mankind through industrialism and governments must by conciliation and negotiation enable the toilers throughout the world to realize without delay their natural and legitimate demands. These are set forth with great moderation in the resolutions and speeches here published.

It will be well for the ones in whose hands the fate of mankind temporarily rests in Paris to take into full account the moderate demands of the patient men who were represented at Berne and who represent the class which is in the future to rule the world.

I commend these pages to the consideration of all who have any voice in the affairs of men, with the solemn warning that unless the message of the international at Berne is heeded without delay, there will be no escape from violence and dictatorships; and, contrary to official calculations, the violence will precede the dictatorships.

This calamity should and may still be averted on the lines I have indicated. If these are ignored, any physical force which can be employed will be no more potent than a man raising his hand to stay a hurricane, which unfortunately goes its way and carries everything before it.

These words are ominous and reveal what is back of some of the advocates of Part XIII of the treaty. It will be noted that Mr. De Kay calls the Berne demands "moderate," but they are the demands of those who "represent the class which is in the future to rule the world."

The solemn warning is further given "that unless the demands of the conference are heeded without delay, violence and dictatorship" will come to the world. That, of course, is the position of Lenin and Trotski and the Bolshevists—the position of Foster and Margolis and other radicals who are now affiliated with organized labor in this country and are attempting to use labor organizations for revolutionary purposes.

It fills one, who believes in law and order and in our form of government, with misgivings to turn from a perusal of the proceedings of the Berne conference to an examination of Part XIII and to the statements made by Mr. Clemenceau and others who participated in the peace conference. An exchange of notes occurred between the German delegates to the peace conference concerning international labor legislation. The German representatives in a note dated May 14 of this year, addressed to Clemenceau, complained that Part XIII did not sufficiently adhere to the plans of the Berne conference. Clemenceau, writing as president of the conference, under date of May 31, referred to the resolutions adopted by the Berne conference in February, and then added:

5. While the resolutions passed by the Berne conference, February, 1919, gave expression to the wishes of the workers and defined their aspirations for the future, the Washington conference provides the means of giving effect to such of these aspirations as can be embodied in legislation without delay, and the labor organization will give opportunities for progressive expression to others, in accordance with the guiding principles already mentioned. The labor commission, moreover, set up by the peace conference envisaged all the points mentioned in your letter as coming within the scope of the labor organization, including an international code of law for the protection of seamen, to be especially drawn up with the collaboration of the seamen's union (copy annexed).

6. It also adopted a resolution (copy annexed) in favor of the organization being given power as soon as possible to pass resolutions possessing the force of international law. International labor laws can not at present be made operative merely by resolutions passed at conferences. The workers of one country are not prepared to be bound in all matters by laws imposed on them by representatives of other countries; international conventions as provided for under the peace treaty are therefore at present more effective than international labor laws, for the infringement of which no penal sanctions can be applied.

I ought to add that the German note insisted that "the final decision in questions of labor law and labor protection belongs to the workers themselves."

The German note further states:

It was the intention of the German delegation to give occasion, even while the negotiations of peace are proceeding, to the legitimate representatives of the working people of all countries of casting their vote on this point and bringing into conformity the draft of the conditions of peace, the proposal of the German democratic government, and the resolutions of the international trade-union conference held at Berne from February 5 to February 9, 1919.

President Clemenceau, in his reply, went further and states:

It is not correct to say that the demands raised by the International Trade Union Congress at Berne are disregarded, inasmuch as the points raised in these resolutions, as well as all other relevant considerations, were discussed and carefully considered, and for the most part are embodied in the preamble of Part XIII or in the general principles which are accepted to guide the league of nations and the labor organization in the attainment of social justice.

He further states that the labor commission set up by the peace conference—envisaged all the points mentioned in your letter as coming within the scope of the labor organization, including an international code of law for the protection of seamen, to be especially drawn up with the collaboration of the seamen's union.

This further significant and important statement is made by Clemenceau:

It (referring to the peace conference) also adopted a resolution (copy annexed) in favor of the organization (meaning the labor organization provided by Part XIII) being given power as soon as possible to pass resolutions possessing the force of international law. International labor laws can not at present be made operative merely by resolutions passed at conferences. The workers of one country are not prepared to be found in all matters by laws imposed on them by representatives of other countries; international conventions as provided for under the peace treaty are therefore at present more effective than international labor laws, for the infringement of which no penal sanctions can be applied.

In Annex 2, accompanying the letter of Clemenceau, he states:

ANNEX 2. The commission expresses the hope that as soon as it may be possible an agreement will be arrived at between the high contracting parties with a view to endowing the international labor conference, under the auspices of the league of nations, with power to take, under conditions to be determined, resolutions possessing the force of international law.

No other conclusion is possible after reading the proceedings of the Berne conference, the correspondence between Clemenceau, speaking for the peace commissioners, and the representatives of Germany at the peace conference, and also Part XIII, but that it is the purpose to constitute the organization created by Part XIII an international force and authority for the control of the world's labor and to deprive States of the right to act in respect to vital domestic questions.

It seems incredible that the demands of the internationalists should have been acceded to and that this dangerous international superpower should have been set up. The promise has been made that this organization shall have power to enact resolutions and statutes having the force of international law. No nation possesses this power, but it is proposed to confer upon this organization, this supernational power, this extraordinary authority that it may by its decrees and regulations and orders and edicts control the labor of the world. This scheme calls for an international organization, world wide in authority, which will project itself into all States members of the league, determine what legislation shall be enacted in regard to labor and the multitudinous relations of labor to the State, and to the activities and industries of the State.

It requires no imagination to perceive the conflicts that will inevitably ensue between the States and this international authority concerning their respective jurisdictions. The most earnest advocates of the covenant of the league have insisted—and in that view I have concurred—that it was not intended that the league of nations should interfere in the domestic affairs of the State. President Wilson, ex-President Taft, and others who have urged the ratification of the treaty, including the covenant of the league of nations, have declared in effect that there must be no invasion of the internal and domestic affairs of our Nation.

Those who are defending the provisions of Part XIII do not contend that its provisions are repealed or controlled by any other provisions in the treaty, or will be repealed by the reservation adopted by a majority of the Senate, withholding from the authority of the league domestic questions of every character. It would seem, however, that there is a conflict between Part XIII and the reservation referred to. The control of labor is a domestic matter purely. The creation of an international organization to exercise the powers contained in Part XIII, if it asserts the authority given by such article, must inevitably lead to serious and deadly conflicts between the States and the international organization.

If the workingmen of the world are organized internationally and an international tribunal is set up endowed with the power which the internationalists will claim for the organization created by Part XIII, it is as certain as that night follows day that States, no matter how powerful, will in the end suffer devitalization and perhaps denationalization. The division of society into classes will become more pronounced and States and the world will soon be involved in internecine struggles, deadly and destructive, born of class hatreds and class consciousness. It is a fatal mistake to constantly emphasize that there are different classes within the State. There is no class welfare in this Republic. It is the public welfare for which this Republic was established.

There should not be a solidarity of manual workers; there must be a solidarity of all the people. Substantially all Americans are workers, and any movement which seeks to divide the people and to classify them and to provide organizations which emphasize division and promote class legislation will prove harmful and destructive of the Republic. It is unwise to foster the formation of groups in the commonwealth and to accentuate the differences between the groups and the necessity of special legislation to deal with each group. The farmer is interested in banks, in railroads, in the manufacturing plants of the country, and in legislation which deals with every part of the industrial or political organization. The same is true of the man who works in the factory, the shop, or in the mill. The interests of the banker, the railroad president, the investor, the farmer, the employee are mutual in everything that affects the prosperity of the people and the security of the Nation. I repeat, in this Republic we are one people—we rise or fall together. Whatever promotes the interest of one is advantageous to all. The political formula of equal and exact justice to all and special privileges to none should find expression and exemplification now as never before.

In this peace treaty there is no place for Part XIII. Its provisions are wholly extraneous. It is so incongruous as to arrest the attention of even those who are mentally moribund. The representatives of the various nations convened at Paris to negotiate a treaty with the Central Powers. As a part of that treaty and to execute its terms the representatives made provision for a league or instrumentality. It was hoped that by the cooperation of the signatories the causes of war might be diminished and the peace of the world more effectually assured. In my opinion the accomplishment of this purpose, so far as it was within the legitimate scope of a league of nations, did not call for the creation of another and a different organization, such as is provided for in Part XIII of the treaty.

With as much propriety an organization could have been created for the agricultural interests of the world or any other element found within the social structure. I repeat that it is a mistake to provide machinery and instrumentalities that tend to accentuate any division of society. The effort should be to unite and not divide and to impress upon all the people the important truth that they are indissolubly linked together.

Of course, the welfare and advancement of labor is desired by all. We not only desire the welfare of labor in the United States, but the American people look with the deepest interest in the progress and prosperity of labor in all parts of the world. But I am not willing, and the American people in my opinion are not willing, to transfer to any other nation or to any extranational organization the power to control the internal and domestic affairs of this Republic. Notwithstanding the altruistic and humanitarian impulses and influences which more and more unite races and nations, and notwithstanding the spirit of mercy and charity developed by the Christian faith, under which the peoples of the world are drawn into closer union and into more perfect integration, the American people believe that they can best serve the world by preserving this Republic in all its power and vigor. They believe that, under God, it has a mission in the world, and they are unwilling that it should become denationalized or devitalized. There is a field for international service, but there is a broad field for national service. This Republic is the crowning glory of the ages. The Constitution of the United States is the highest expression of political wisdom the world has ever possessed. This Republic has carried high the standard of civilization and of liberty, and in the future it will continue to bear aloft the standard of freedom and illumine the paths of the less fortunate peoples to the world.

A wicked and sinister internationalism is firing the temples of the past and savagely seeking the destruction of the great and priceless inheritance which the struggles and sacrifices of countless ages have bequeathed to the world. The unmistakable lessons of history are ignored, and, led by wild and distempered minds, masses of people are hurling themselves against the foundations and the pillars of the protecting superstructures under which they live. A debasing and destructive internationalism is destroying Russia and poisoning other peoples and nations. Strange cries are heard throughout the land, and the false and sinister voices are heard everywhere in violent denunciation of liberty and law and national spirit and national life. Our own Republic has been invaded by these enemies of humanity. They are in our industrial centers, and their poisonous propaganda penetrate all parts of our land. Lenin and Trotski have become the evangels of this destructive creed, and thousands of their followers are girdling the world, seeking the overthrow of nations and society. Neither life nor property under their creed is secure, and nothing short of world revolution will satisfy the mad ambitions of these deadly enemies of humanity. Their operations in our own Republic have brought partial paralysis to our economic life and incalculable suffering to the people. The many strikes which have been called in part resulted from the preachings and wicked activities of these internationalists. They have fastened themselves upon the organizations of labor and have in a subtle and secret manner intruded themselves into our social and industrial organisms. The disclosures of the activities of these internationalists in our own land during the past few months have made clear the purpose and designs of those who are seeking to undermine the national spirit and to break down national organization. Lenin has avowed over and over again his purposes and the purpose of his followers. Russia as a State is to be destroyed. The Russian people as such are to become effaced. The great Empire that stood as a mighty collossus upon the earth is to be leveled to the dust. There is to be no more Russia, no Russian spirit, no Russian consciousness, no national flag, no national spirit, or conscience, or soul. And so, too, all other nations are to be stricken down, and the peoples of the world are to be gathered into a protoplasmic, indistinguishable, unformed mass. All spiritual life is to be destroyed, all faith in an Omnipotent and Omnicient Being is to be eradicated. Humanity is to be thrust into one mould, and from it is to emerge beings without individualism or personality, without spirit or souls, but sodden, callous, materialistic forms of clay, devoid of patriotism or national spirit or the noble impulses which have promoted civilization. The picture is hideous. The realization of these wild and wicked plans would make of the world an inferno and of humanity a beastly, brutal brood, fit only for destruction and death.

The "dictatorship of the proletariat" has become a seductive phrase, and it is glibly mouthed in every corner of the world. These propagandists have attempted the overthrow of the Government of Portugal. They paralyzed the industrial and economic life of Argentina and produced a crisis that threatened the life of that splendid and progressive nation. Their poisonous efforts are directed against Italy, and they hope to plunge that great nation into revolution and anarchy. In France their agents are at work, hoping to prostrate that heroic people and bring to destruction a Republic that has suffered and endured and won eternal glory in the mighty struggle for the freedom of the world. Germany, trying to rise from the defeat which it so well deserved, was beset upon every side by these ravenous and cowardly elements. They were willing to bring additional suffering to their own country and to their own defeated and prostrate countrymen. Hungary, which was rising from the ashes of defeat and attempting to organize a government to meet the requirements of a civilized people, became the object of attack by these international anarchists. Bella Kulm was elevated to power and a Bolshevik government, with all its violence and oppression and beastiality and bloodshed, was superimposed upon the people. It was fortunate for Hungary and for Europe that the Roumanians entered Hungary and drove these assassins and despoilers from power.

And Great Britain has been the constant object of their assaults. The Bolshevists of Russia have spent enormous sums in propaganda for the corruption of the working classes of the British Isles. Even that sturdy and splendid Commonwealth to the north of us was invaded by these destructive agencies, and Winnipeg and other parts of Canada suffered from their revolutionary activities.

In yesterday's paper I find the following statement pointing to some of the efforts of the Russian internationalists in the recent strike which disturbed the people of Great Britain:

RAIL STRIKE SETTLEMENT DISAPPOINTS BOLSHEVIKI—RUSSIAN REDS HOPED BRITISH LABOR TROUBLE WOULD LEAD TO OPEN REVOLUTION.

[Correspondence of the Associated Press.]

LONDON, October 25.

The speedy and peaceful settlement of the British railway strike was a sore disappointment to Russian Bolsheviki. They hoped that it would develop into open revolution. That was shown by a wireless message that was transmitted from Petrograd "with compliments to the British railway men." It stated:

"We, the railway men of red Petrograd have heard the news of your general strike with joy and enthusiasm. You have broken the chains of civil peace. You have declared war on your Government. You must pass from a general strike to an armed rising. In order to improve your economic position you must first destroy the present imperialist order of things and substitute for it a government of workers and peasants. Do not allow the leaders of the old trade-union school to get at the head of the movement, as they will betray you at the last decisive moment. Victory is yours if you fight to the end.

"As to ourselves, we will fight until the whole world is covered with red flags. Down with the league of nations. Long live British soviet power."

Thousands of alien internationalists are infesting every part of our Nation. They are poisoning the minds of the people, attempting to spread discontent and to bring about a revolution. Scores of magazines and newspapers are boldly printed and circulated in which our form of government is denounced and a political revolution advocated. Direct action, force, violence, murder, spoliation, and all forms of terrorism are advocated by these enemies of law and order and of our Republic. They have penetrated the lines of union labor, and in many instances have controlled and now control branches of organized labor. Unfortunately, their wicked and deadly propaganda has influenced many workers and resulted in strikes which were groundless and which were intended to destroy the economic and political structure of our nation. These enemies of our country and of civilization do not seek amelioration of the condition of labor, but plan the overthrow of this Republic. It is they who teach internationalism, class consciousness, and who attempt to separate the so-called workingman and laborer from all other elements of society. They emphasize class distinctions, and seek to erect an impassable barrier between the workers and all other elements of our social organism.

A world organization is planned, but an organization which recognizes but one class, and which vests in the hands of labor all authority and power. It seeks the establishment of a supernation, an all-powerful omnipotent force which controls all peoples in all lands. Political institutions are to perish and national lines are to be obliterated.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. KING. I do.

Mr. REED. The Senator used the term "establish a supernation." He means superpower, does he not?

Mr. KING. Perhaps my expression was not accurate. Of course, the power or government which the internationalists would create would not, properly speaking, be a nation. However, they would seek to endow it with some of the functions of government, some of the powers and authority of a nation. They would have this world-wide power deal with the problems and concerns which nations deal with, only they would treat all nations and peoples as one nation and one people, with this international organization controlling all. In that sense I denominated it a "supernation."

Mr. REED. I think, myself, that it would be an anarchist organization.

Mr. KING. Perhaps the Senator is right. Of course, it could not long endure, if it were permitted to be formed. It would break into pieces because of its own weakness and inherent repulsions.

Mr. President, this Nation can best serve the world if it maintains its ideals and its national spirit and form. We have been preaching of late the right of self-determination, and have urged a recognition of racial and national aspirations. It is somewhat paradoxical that with these demands apparently so universally recognized there should be projected a scheme, contained in Part XIII of the treaty, which tends to the extinguishment of national lines and the destruction of national aspirations and racial ideals. We have rejoiced in the spread of democracy. We have felt that the cause of liberty was being advanced with the birth of republics, the territorial limits of which took into account ethnographical and geographical considerations. It has been a source of pleasure to see the Canadian people developing a strong national spirit, and we have rejoiced in the spirit of independence exhibited by the great State of Australia. This Republic has sympathized, particularly since the days of Clay and Webster, with the national aspirations of Greece and of Hungary, and the peace treaty has sought to afford adequate protection to new republics formed in part out of the Central Empires, and the territorial limits of which were fixed, so far as humanly possible, with respect to the racial and ethnic conditions of the people. Notwithstanding this feature of the treaty and its evident design to recognize the national spirit and to protect the States within the league, a force is created which opposes national integrity. With an obligation provided by article 10 of the covenant to preserve and respect the territorial integrity and political independence of all members of the league, an instrumentality is to be set up and a force and spirit created which must occasion the most serious concern to all who love liberty and seek the preservation of their governments. There is nothing inconsistent in the advocacy of a strong spirit of nationalism and a concert of nations for the prevention of war.

The many admirable features in the covenant of the league providing for arbitration and conciliation, for the examination of controversies between nations, for the reduction of arms, for the punishment of nations that unsheath the sword because of lust for conquest or prompted by mad ambition to subjugate other nations, are entirely compatible with a strong national spirit and vigorous but friendly rivalry in the political, industrial, and intellectual fields occupied by the nations of the world. As stated, the terms of the treaty creating the league seem to develop nationalism and to protect nationalism and the integrity of nations, the strong as well as the small and the weak; but Part XIII destroys that which the covenant builds. There must be no international colloidal mass. This hour demands a vigorous American spirit, an indestructible national spirit, and a genuine, sincere patriotism which calls for supreme sacrifices for the country's weal.

The internationalism which inspired Part XIII is antagonistic to that national spirit, that patriotic fervor which led this Nation, as well as other nations, through the shadows and darkness of the mighty conflict. The American people have met their domestic problems with courage and success. This Republic survived a great civil war and by devotion to the principles of liberty upon which it is founded it has become the standard bearer among all the nations of the world. It has dealt with national and international questions as successfully as it has met domestic and internal problems. It will deal in the future with all domestic questions. The American people know better than other people their internal concerns and needs and can provide whatever remedies any situation may require, and deal with its domestic problems, intricate or simple, far better than any international organization that the wit of man can devise.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I merely have a request to make which will take but a moment.

There has just returned to the United States an exceedingly important American mission which spent something more than a month in traveling through Asia Minor, and particularly through the much-discussed Armenian country. The mission was headed by Maj. Gen. James G. Harbord, whose name is well known, of course, to the Senate and to the country; and it may be said that he was accompanied upon his trip of investigation by some exceedingly able officers selected for the purpose. My information is that the report of the so-called Harbord Commission has been made and delivered, I think, to the State Department.

I have prepared a very short resolution, reading as follows:

Resolved, That the President be, and he is hereby, requested to send to the Senate, if not incompatible with the public interest, a copy of the report on Near Eastern conditions made by the mission headed by Maj. Gen. James G. Harbord and known as the "Harbord mission."

I am sure that if it is possible for the President to send this it will prove to be of tremendous interest to the Senate, especially while it has the treaty under consideration.

I therefore ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the resolution which I present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. There is no objection if it involves no debate.

The resolution (S. Res. 233) was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the President be, and he is hereby, requested to send to the Senate, if not incompatible with the public interest, a copy of the report on Near Eastern conditions made by the mission headed by Maj. Gen. James G. Harbord and known as the "Harbord mission."

Mr. MCCORMICK. Mr. President, as I sat listening to the nationalist anthem of the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] I felt that I had heard Saul singing among the prophets. The voice was the voice of Utah but the philosophy that of Idaho across the border. If my eyes had not undeceived me, my ears would have told me that it was not the junior Senator from Utah but the senior Senator from Idaho who was addressing the Senate upon the perils inherent in this covenant.

But, no; it was the Senator from Utah who, in contradiction of the chief proponent of this international panacea for the ills of mankind, argued, as he might have in a greater cause, with candor and directness. The reservation which he has presented has the incomparable virtue of being plain in what it purposes to do and of doing without equivocation that which it purposes. If the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] will permit me to say so, his reservation lacks either in efficiency or in candor.

I have risen to speak these few moments only that I might join my voice to that of the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] and the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] in support of a reservation which will guard not only the interests of the employer of labor in America and of labor in America but the American farmer, whose interest, more than that of any other American, is threatened by an international legislature in which he alone will not be represented, an international assembly where he alone will have no voice.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President, I am in favor of the substitute which has been offered by the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING]. I am in favor of that substitute because it does the job. I am sick and tired of conscience-salving, peculiarly worded reservations which have been adopted here, although I do not say that of the particular reservation of which this is the substitute at all. But I am weary of the indirection, which does not do the job but soothes perturbed and fearful and timid spirits.

Mr. President, I want no international banker control in this country. I want no international labor control in this country. I want no international imperialistic control in this country.

I want to preserve the promise of American life, preserve it in its pristine purity, because of all that it has done in the past and all of its promise for the future. I want no international control of America. I want to be just American again.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I sympathize very much with what has been said by the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] in regard to the dangers of internationalism and the Industrial Workers of the World, and especially foreign industrial workers, as the source of internationalism. Of course, we can not subscribe to Part XIII as it is; and if the Senator from Utah presented the only alternative, I should support the substitute offered by him. But, Mr. President, the substitute of the Senator from Utah is drastic. It reserves Part XIII from the act of ratification, and, according to the reservation—

> The United States declines to participate in any way in the said general conference or to participate in the election of the governing body of the international labor office constituted by said articles, and declines in any way to contribute or be bound to contribute to the expenditures of said general conference or international labor office.

Mr. President, the effect of the provisions of the substitute offered by the Senator from Utah is to close the doors against our participation in any international labor conference and forever to shut us out from any part in such conference.

There is another alternative, however. I do not believe that we should put ourselves in a position to be forever shut out of international labor conferences under the league of nations. And why? Because, Mr. President, it may be for the interest of American labor itself that on occasion we should participate in an international labor conference. Our counsel and advice, or the counsel and advice of our representatives at such a conference, may be of benefit not only to American labor but to labor throughout the world.

It may be doubtful, Mr. President, that such will be the case, and I grant, for the sake of the argument, that it may be. But granting that it is doubtful, we should not close the doors against the opportunity which America may have to benefit American labor and the cause of labor generally throughout the world.

The other alternative is the substitute offered by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER], which leaves it to the judgment of Congress to determine whether or not we shall on any occasion participate in the deliberations of the international labor conference. I believe we can trust Congress. I believe Congress, governed by the exigencies of the situation or of the case two years hence, or four years hence, or at any time when there is to be a meeting of the international labor conference, can determine whether or not America should participate in that conference.

So while, as I said, I am in sympathy with the general propositions laid down by the Senator from Utah, and in the dread we have of international labor influences, yet I do not think we can quite afford to say that we will not participate in any international labor conference. We can not afford to say it because American labor, although we are not represented, may be affected by the deliberations of that conference, and I think we ought to have an opportunity to be there and to be heard if the case should seem to invite it or require it.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I believe that American labor, if an opportunity were afforded to look into this provision of the document, would protest against it being retained in the treaty. I have had visits from several potential heads of branches of the American Federation of Labor, and they have represented to me that they were greatly alarmed at many of the provisions in this part of the treaty, and were time afforded and opportunity permitted doubtless there would be an overwhelming protest addressed to Congress against the retention of any trace of this provision.

I think both the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] and the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] are moving in the right direction, but neither of them goes quite far enough. American labor, which is superior to all other labor in the world and better paid, fails, as far as I have discovered from having talked with their leaders, to see any advantage that can come to American labor by any such scheme as this, and I regret very much that fuller opportunity has not been given to the American Federation of Labor to investigate and have an opportunity to be heard.

A kind of a partial indorsement was given by the labor people at a convention at Atlantic City, but since then, as in the case of many other indorsements, fuller opportunity has been given to investigate and to reflect, and I know several unions in the general federation who view with great alarm the operation of this provision, and I can not take the views of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] as indicating or reflecting the views of American labor or as holding forth any promise of advantage to American labor, as they view it, although he seems to view it otherwise.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, a few days ago I called the attention of the Senate to the territorial plunder of the Allies other than Great Britain which we engage to defend under the terms of the pending treaty. It was my purpose to bring to the attention of the Senate at this time Great Britain's share of the spoils of war, showing her territorial acquisitions, resulting in the control of trade routes, natural resources, and the domination of the commercial and trade centers of the world.

But, Mr. President, the limitations of debate imposed by the cloture rule make it impossible for me to present to the Senate the actual distribution of territory under the treaty which we are called upon to ratify, together with the protectorates, mandates, and other arrangements effected while we have been debating the true meaning of the league covenant.

Yesterday considerable time was spent in the Senate in discussing the disposition of the German colonies, with an entire and complete disregard of the fact that since this treaty was made and submitted by the President to the Senate, the German colonies have been disposed of by mandates, which Great Britain, through her control of the council and the assembly, will be able to perpetuate.

But, Mr. President, within the time limited for discussion here, I can not go into that matter fully.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield for a question only.

Mr. GRONNA. I had hoped that the Senator from Wisconsin would go into the phase of the subject to which he has referred. I listened to him very attentively the other day and with a great deal of interest and profit. I heard what he had to say with reference to the gains of France, Italy, Greece, and Roumania, and I was in hopes that he would go into a discussion of the territorial and commercial advantages secured by Great Britain as a result of the war. Will the Senator not be kind enough to do that?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, within the limits of the time permitted under the cloture rule, I can not do that in my own time. I had prepared to do that, but I must decline for the reason that in a choice between following out the distribution of territory and a discussion of the disastrous results—as I regard them—of giving to Great Britain control of the trade routes and of the natural resources of the world, I choose to limit my discussion to the latter and to omit the exposition of the very proposition which the Senator asks me now to discuss. I am compelled to do that under the cloture rule.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me to be recognized in my own time for the purpose of asking him a question that he may answer in my time?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. If I may be recognized to continue my discussion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If the Senator from Wisconsin yields the floor, the Senator from North Dakota will be recognized.

Mr. GRONNA. Am I recognized?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Dakota is recognized.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I think all of us are interested in knowing the facts with reference to the disposition of territory. We have heard stated in specific terms the reasons which impelled the Allies to enter this great war. In every instance, so far as I know, and I believe that I heard all the speeches delivered in this chamber, it was said by the representatives of the Allies that their entry into the war was made for one purpose only, that of freeing all the peoples of the earth from the military autocracy of Germany.

Before we finally dispose of a measure of such great importance as this treaty, I believe, sir, that we ought to know the facts, and I believe it is due the Allies that we should know what disposition has been made of the territory. The Senator from Wisconsin has just stated that he has given this very question constant study and thought, and I wish to ask the Senator to give us this information and to give it in my time.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. If I may be permitted to do so without encroaching upon my own time, I should be glad to answer the question of the Senator from North Dakota.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is somewhat embarrassed by the fact that during the major part of the debate I assume the permanent occupant of the chair will preside; but for the present the Chair is of the opinion that there may be a reasonable compliance with the suggestion of the Senator from North Dakota, and that the Senator from Wisconsin may respond to any question put to him by the Senator from North Dakota in the time of the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I am frank to say that I submitted that question to the Vice President. I desired to know whether I could lay the facts before the Senate of the United States. The Vice President said to me that if I was interrupted by a question, the answer to which I could not make within my own time, and I yielded the floor, which was taken by the Senator asking the question, then I might proceed to answer the question in his time.

The Senator from North Dakota propounds this question to me and I shall be glad to answer it in his time if the ruling of the Chair permits; otherwise not.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair has already ruled.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Then I proceed in his time to answer the question.

Mr. GRONNA. I very gladly yield to the Senator to answer the question.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, a few days ago I called the attention of the Senate to the territorial spoils of the Allies, other than Great Britain, which we engage to defend under the terms of the pending treaty. These territorial changes were principally upon the continent of Europe, but by this treaty our guaranties are to go beyond Europe. They are to extend to Asia, to Asia Minor, and to Africa. They are to extend into every corner of the earth where money can be made by exploiting weaker peoples and monopolizing the resources of their country.

With a view to portraying graphically the changes involved in this world settlement growing out of the war, I have caused to be prepared maps of Asia and Africa, including Asia Minor, and those are now before the Senate. The territory which formed a part of the British Empire before the war is colored red. The territory which falls to Great Britain as a result of the war is colored red with a black border.

It is at once obvious that with the exception of limited areas in Asia Minor which are divided between France and Italy and Greece, and excepting likewise the German islands in the northern Pacific, and Shantung, which go to Japan, all other territory outside of Europe which changes hands as a result of the war is acquired by Great Britain.

The Senate is urged to concur in this treaty and bind the American people by the most solemn obligation to respect and preserve the territorial integrity of Great Britain. It is my purpose therefore to present to the Senate and to the country, in so far as my limited time under the "gag" rule will permit the extent and character of Britain's share of the spoils under this treaty, the people bartered and chatteled, the menacing political problems that go with them, and the far-reaching economic effect of this vast territorial transfer to Great Britain upon her ultimate control of the trade routes and the commerce of the world, to all of which we are asked not only to consent, but also to guarantee and to defend.

BRITISH SPOILS IN AFRICA.

I direct the attention of the Senate first to the map of Africa. Before the war Great Britain was the predominant power in Africa. Her colonies, exclusive of Egypt and the Sudan, comprised an area two-thirds as large as the United States, of about 2,000,000 square miles, with a population of 30,000,000 of people.

Germany was Great Britain's principal competitor in Africa. Her colonies were in the aggregate about one-half as large as the British territory and about one-third as populous. In spite of her overwhelming predominance Great Britain's position in Africa was by no means satisfactory to British imperialists. German East Africa, if Senators will note the map, separated the British colonies in the east. German Southwest Africa cut off the Union of South Africa from the Atlantic Coast. The British colonies in the west were separated by Togo and Kamerun.

The status of British control in Egypt was likewise unsatisfactory to the ambitious men who dictated the policy of the British foreign office.

Beginning with the occupation of Egypt in 1882 Gladstone, Salisbury, and succeeding prime ministers gave unqualified pledges to Egypt, to the English people, and to the world that British troops would be withdrawn as soon as order was restored, that the "territorial integrity and existing political independence" of Egypt would be respected, and that under no circumstances would a protectorate be established over the country.

That is the pledge that England made through Gladstone to the Egyptian people and to the world; and yet the majority of the Senate yesterday voted in violation of that pledge to extend the protectorate of Great Britain over Egypt against the protest of 13,000,000 people.

Gladstone made the position of Great Britain clear on August 9, 1883, when he said:

> If one pledge can be more solemn and sacred than another, special sacredness in this case binds us to withdraw the British troops from Egypt.

Gladstone's promise was many times repeated, and Egypt was recognized down to the beginning of the war as an independent country under the suzerainty of Turkey, and the British occupation was understood to be temporary.

On December 18, 1914, four months after the outbreak of the war, Great Britain suddenly deposed the Khedive, appointed and established his successor on the throne, and announced that "the suzerainty of Turkey over Egypt is terminated," and "Egypt will henceforth constitute a British protectorate."

A wave of protest swept Egypt at this announcement, but the British foreign office was prepared for the emergency. A personal letter was sent by King George—now follow this step by step—to the native government, giving assurances that Great Britain would lend aid to "overcome all influences which are seeking to destroy the independence of Egypt."

Senators, is there anything left in kingly pledges? Are they also to be treated as "scraps of paper" and is the United States Senate to indorse and ratify their violation? You did it yesterday. Will you do it when the roll call comes after this document passes into the Senate for final ratification?

But, taking King George at his word, and relying also on other assurances, Egypt submitted to the protectorate, believing it was a temporary war measure. And, Mr. President, why should they not have believed it? They had the word of all the prime ministers from Gladstone down, and now came the royal pledge of George V, the present imperial head of the British Government.

Trusting that pledge, Egypt, during the four years of war, enlisted more than 1,000,000 men to fight in the British Army for the allied cause.

President Wilson's announcement of America's war aims in 1918 gave further assurance to the Egyptians, who saw in the acceptance by the Allies of the principle of self-determination, the restoration of Egypt's independence.

Mr. President, I shall not review here the sordid story of Egypt's betrayal at the peace conference.

How four men chosen by the Egyptian people to represent them at Paris were seized by the British authorities without warning, deported to Malta, and held in a military prison; how more than 1,000 unarmed natives were brutally shot down and killed by British machine guns on the streets of Alexandria and Cairo; how President Wilson refused to give the Egyptian envoys a hearing after they finally reached Paris, are facts too well known to all of us to require recital.

It is enough to say that the treaty of Versailles recognizes a permanent British protectorate over this unfortunate country. It makes Egypt, with her 13,000,000 inhabitants, all of one race, speaking the same language, and occupying 350,000 square miles of fertile territory, as much a part of the British Empire as India or her colonies in Africa. It gives to Great Britain, in addition, the immense area known as the Anglo-Egyptian Sudan, which is one-third as large as the United States. She acquires this domain, Mr. President, against the will of every one of its inhabitants, in violation of British pledges to Egypt and to the world, and in wanton disregard of the 14 points sponsored by the United States and specifically accepted and agreed to by Great Britain.

Mr. FRANCE (to Mr. LA FOLLETTE). Does the Senator desire that I shall ask for a quorum?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. No; I prefer not to interrupt my discussion. I merely want time. I am not speaking to the Senate; I am speaking to the country.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Yes.

Mr. HARRISON. Is the Senator still answering the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I am.

Mr. HARRISON. And in the time of the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I am; yes.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I make the point of order that that is not permissible under the cloture rule that was adopted.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. If that question is to be raised, this is the time to raise it.

Mr. HARRISON. I understand the Senator prefers that it be raised now rather than to let him utilize an hour's time of the Senato. from North Dakota?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. It is better to have it settled now.

Mr. HARRISON. The reason I raise the point, Mr. President, is that under the rule each Senator is allowed not more than one hour of time for discussion. The Senator from Wisconsin is now utilizing a part of the time of the Senator from North Dakota. He might utilize in that way the hour of time allowed to the Senator from North Dakota, and then his own hour in addition, which would give him two hours, and if he could make arrangement with some other Senator he might occupy additional time.

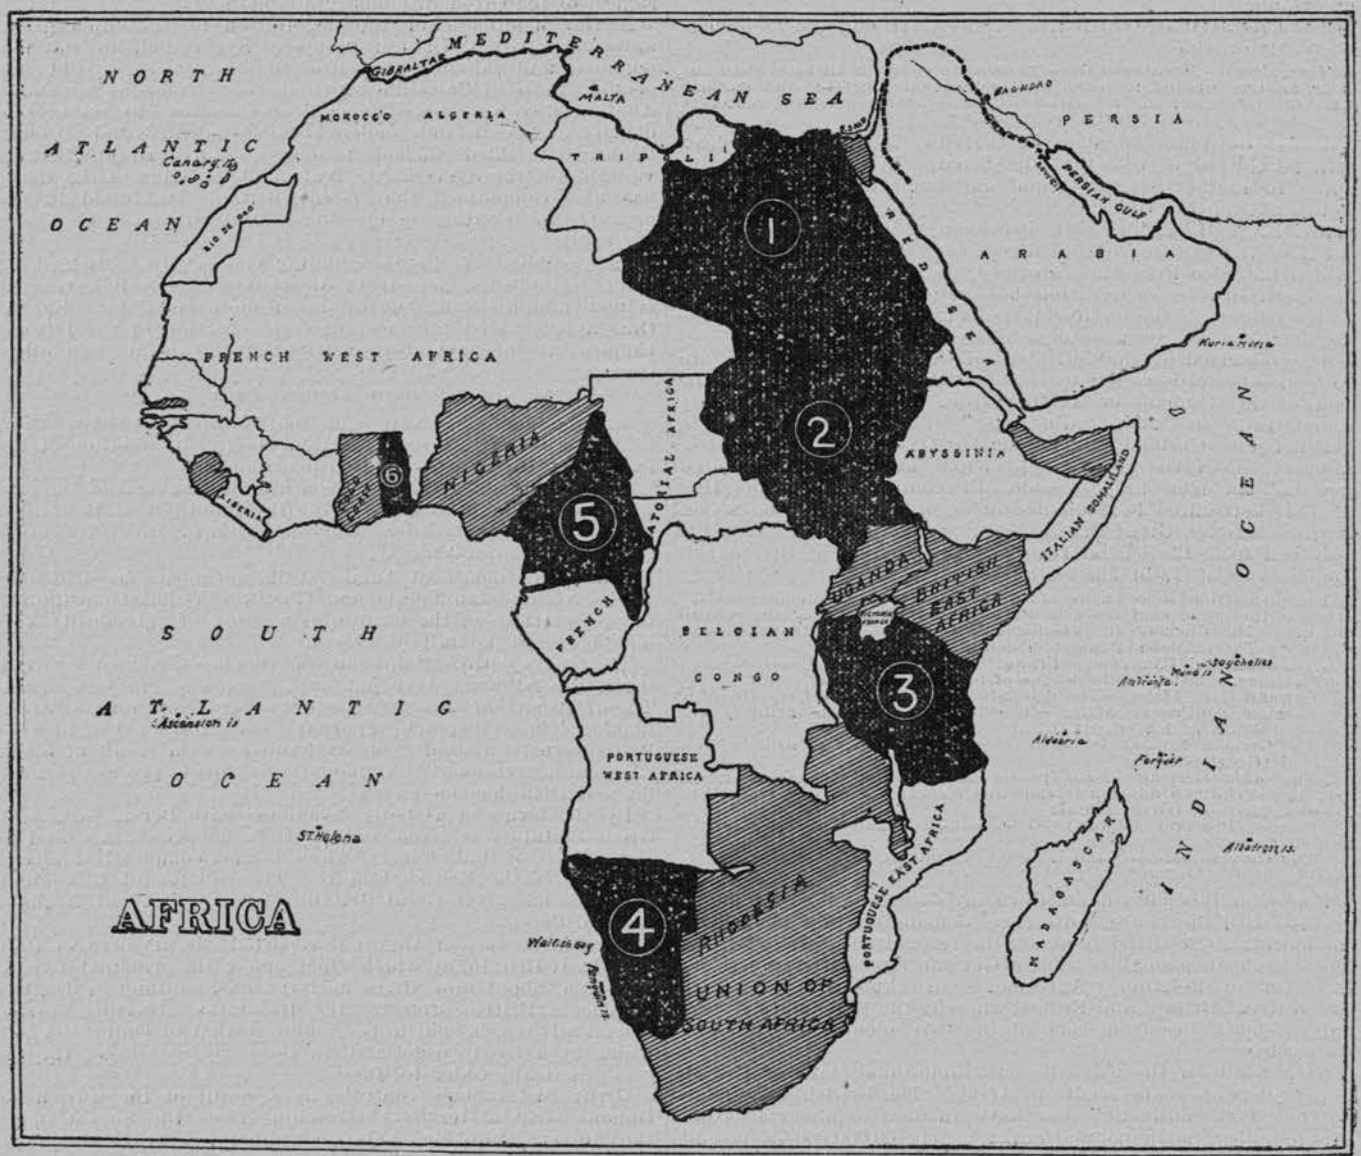
Mr. JONES of Washington. I rise to a point of order. Under the rule the point of order is not debatable.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I hope this is not coming out of my time.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The point of order is not debatable.

Mr. HARRISON. I am stating the point of order, which, I think, under the rules, I am allowed to do.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The Senator has already stated his point of order and is now arguing it.



BRITISH TERRITORY IN AFRICA.

Shaded portion—Territory held by Great Britain before the war. Solid black portion—Territory acquired by Great Britain as a result of the war.
① Egypt—Protectorate declared December 18, 1914. ② Sudan—Former dependency of Egypt. ③ German East Africa—Mandate under Great Britain.
④ German Southwest Africa—Mandate under Great Britain. ⑤ Kamerun, and ⑥ Togo—Mandates under Great Britain, with minor cessions to France.

NOTE: Great Britain now has a strip of territory stretching from Cairo to Cape Horn.
All areas represented by solid black are occupied at the present time by British troops and are being administered as parts of the Empire.
The Bagdad Railway (see map), connecting the Suez Canal with the Persian Gulf, is held by Great Britain.

Mr. HARRISON. I ask for a ruling. I make the point of order that a Senator can not utilize the time of another Senator in answering in this way.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I am answering a question of another Senator which he states he is willing shall be answered in his time. That is the real proposition, is it not?

Mr. HARRISON. That is it; but it is apparent to the whole Senate——

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Yes, I am not disguising anything here.

Mr. HARRISON. That the Senator is reading from a typewritten manuscript.

Mr. GRONNA. I rise to a question of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SUTHERLAND in the chair). The Senator will state it.

Mr. GRONNA. The Senator from Mississippi, of course, has a perfect right to make the point of order, but he has no right to argue it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SUTHERLAND being in the chair). The Chair will state to the Senator from Mississippi that the preceding occupant of the chair declined to pass on the point, preferring to let the Vice President himself do so, as the Senator from Wisconsin had stated that he had a ruling from the Vice President upon the subject. The Vice President now being out of the chair, the present occupant of the chair, if it is proper for him to make a ruling, will proceed to do so. The Chair would like to ask the Senator from Wisconsin at what time the Vice President ruled upon this question?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I did not state that the Vice President had ruled upon it. I talked with the Vice President in his place in order to ascertain whether, if interrupted, as I have been interrupted, it would be permissible under the cloture rule to discuss the matter in the time of a Senator interrupting me and questioning me.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Rule XXII, on page 26, is very clear. It provides:

> Thereafter no Senator shall be entitled to speak in all more than one hour on the pending measure, the amendments thereto, and motions affecting the same, and it shall be the duty of the presiding officer to keep the time of each Senator who speaks.

Under the plain language of the rule, the Presiding Officer will be obliged to rule that the Senator has not the right to speak in another Senator's time and that a Senator's time can not be extended in that way.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I bow to this enforcement of the cloture rule, in direct contradiction of the ruling which the Vice President informed me that he would make if the question were raised while he was presiding.

The balance of the territorial spoils in Africa, consisting of the German colonies, are also to go to Great Britain.

It is asserted by the defenders of this treaty that there are to be no annexations, but that all territories formerly under the rule of the Germans or the Turks are to be distributed under mandates to the "advanced nations."

But before Germany signed the treaty on June 28, 1919, renouncing in favor of the "principal allied and associated powers" her overseas possessions, the council of three met May 6, and distributed her colonies in accordance with the secret treaties between Great Britain, France, and Japan.

I read from the official report of the meeting of the council (published Oct. 18 in The Nation):

> The disposition to be made of the former German colonies was decided at the peace conference in Paris on May 6, 1919, by the council of three—Mr. Clemenceau, President Wilson, and Mr. Lloyd George. * * * The official statement in detail is as follows:
> "Togoland and Cameroon.—France and Great Britain shall make a joint recommendation to the league of nations as to their fate.
> "German East Africa.—The mandate shall be held by Great Britain.
> "German Southwest Africa.—The mandate shall be held by the Union of South Africa (Great Britain).
> "The German Samoan Islands.—The mandate shall be held by New Zealand (Great Britain).
> "The other German Pacific possessions south of the Equator, excluding the German Samoan Islands and Naura.—The mandate shall be held by Australia (Great Britain).
> "Naura (Pleasant Islands).—The mandate shall be given to the British Empire.
> "The German Pacific Islands north of the Equator.—The mandate shall be held by Japan."

Following this partition of Germany's colonies, Belgium filed a protest with the peace conference, demanding that her aid in conquering these districts should be recognized. Great Britain has since made a small cession of German East African territory in favor of Belgium. Agreements are known to exist between Great Britain and France whereby the latter is to receive only a small slice from each of the two colonies of Togo and Kamerun.

As a result of the war, the most ambitious plans of British imperialists are made secure in Africa. The British possessions on the "dark continent" now have an area of about 4,400,000 square miles and a population of nearly 60,000,000 of people. This area is about the size of Canada and Mexico combined and is capable of supporting as large a population as our own country.

Great Britain now has a continuous stretch of territory, linking the extremities of the continent, and the imperialist dream of a British railroad from the "Cape to Cairo" is realized as a result of this war, waged to protect the rights of the weak against the strong.

This is the vast Empire, Mr. President, which the United States is about to pledge her aid in maintaining on the continent of Africa, for the benefit of Great Britain.

BRITISH SPOILS IN TURKEY.

The dismemberment of the Ottoman Empire constitutes one of the most lurid chapters in the history of secret diplomacy and international double-dealing, and it is but fair to say that in this drama English diplomats have played the leading rôle.

The partition of Turkey has followed the lines originally laid down in the secret treaties.

By the Treaty of London, Italy was bribed to desert her allies and join the Entente by the promise of Adalia, on the Mediterranean. Greece was promised Trebizond, on the Black Sea, and Smyrna, one of the chief harbors on the Mediterranean. Russia was to be given Constantinople and Armenia as her share of the spoils and the balance of the territory, after 20,000,000 Turks had been limited to the district of Anatolia, with an area about the size of the State of Nebraska, was to be divided between France and Great Britain.

Following the Russian revolution, Great Britain and France negotiated a new treaty, the secret Sykes-Picot agreement of 1916. By its terms Great Britain recognized France's claims to the Syrian coast while Great Britain was to take over the richest of the Ottoman lands in Mesopotamia.

A few months after the negotiation of this underground agreement, Great Britain occupied Syria and, in the most populous and valuable portion of that region, set up the independent State of Palestine which she now claims as a mandate. Another slice was carved from France's sphere by the creation of Hedjaz as an independent State, under British tutelage. France has filed formal protests against Great Britain's violation of the Sykes-Picot treaty and the King of the Hedjaz has also complained that Great Britain has failed to keep promises of territory to his State. But Britain holds fast to her spoils.

In the midst of these conflicting claims, Great Britain has firmly established herself in Mesopotamia and Palestine and is now administering the affairs of both countries. She has thus appropriated the most desirable portion of the Ottoman Empire, at the same time setting her rivals at each other's throats.

BRITISH SPOILS IN ASIA.

Mr. President, if it be thought that the spoils of Great Britain in Africa and Asia Minor, satiated the greedy ambition of English diplomats, that assumption is erroneous.

While the Senate has been debating the fragment of the peace settlement, submitted to it by the President, Great Britain has negotiated three treaties which add important links to the British Empire in Asia.

During the month of August, 1919, within a period of a few weeks, Afghanistan, Persia, and Tibet were reduced substantially to protectorates of the Empire as a result of agreements which have been but partially disclosed.

The treaty with Afghanistan was concluded August 8. By its terms the Afghans were put on "probation" for six months. The aftermath of this agreement was seen November 4, when a London Times dispatch reported "six infantry brigades" of British troops marching on Afghanistan as a result of alleged "Afghan aggressions." Afghanistan is thus in process of becoming a British dependency.

By the terms of a treaty concluded with Persia, August 15, Great Britain was given control of the finances, army, and foreign affairs of that country, which is now completely under the influence of the British Empire. The collapse of Russian imperialism has given Great Britain a free hand in both Afghanistan and Persia.

News dispatches of August 18 reported a treaty between China and Great Britain, by which Tibet, one of the principal divisions of China, about nine times as large as Shantung or England, becomes a British protectorate. Its status, according to semi-official advices, is said to be similar to that of Outer Mongolia, which by a treaty negotiated in the early months of the war, was practically ceded to Russia.

Great Britain now controls, as a result of the war, a continuous strip of territory stretching from the Suez Canal to the Malay Peninsula. She has filled in every gap in her empire in Asia. Palestine, Mesopotamia, Persia, Afghanistan, India, Tibet, and the Straits Settlements are the links in a chain of British-controlled States which cover the southern third of Asia.

In China, Great Britain holds, in addition to Tibet, exploiting privileges along the valley of the Yangtze-Kiang River, and controls the port of this great waterway, Shanghai, a city of 1,000,000 population. When Germany seized Kiaochow in Shantung, Great Britain seized Wei-hai-Wei, and she still holds that port, threatening Japan's position in Shantung. Great Britain likewise controls Hongkong.

Mr. President, to sum up British territorial gains from the war: Great Britain has added to her Empire, either by annexation or by protectorates and mandates, a territory of 3,972,000 square miles—larger than continental Europe—with a population of more than 51,725,000 people, 90 per cent of whom are natives.

Great Britain stands to-day the dominant power in Asia and Africa, and, in Canada, holds dominion over more territory along our northern boundary than is represented in the combined area of the United States and Alaska.

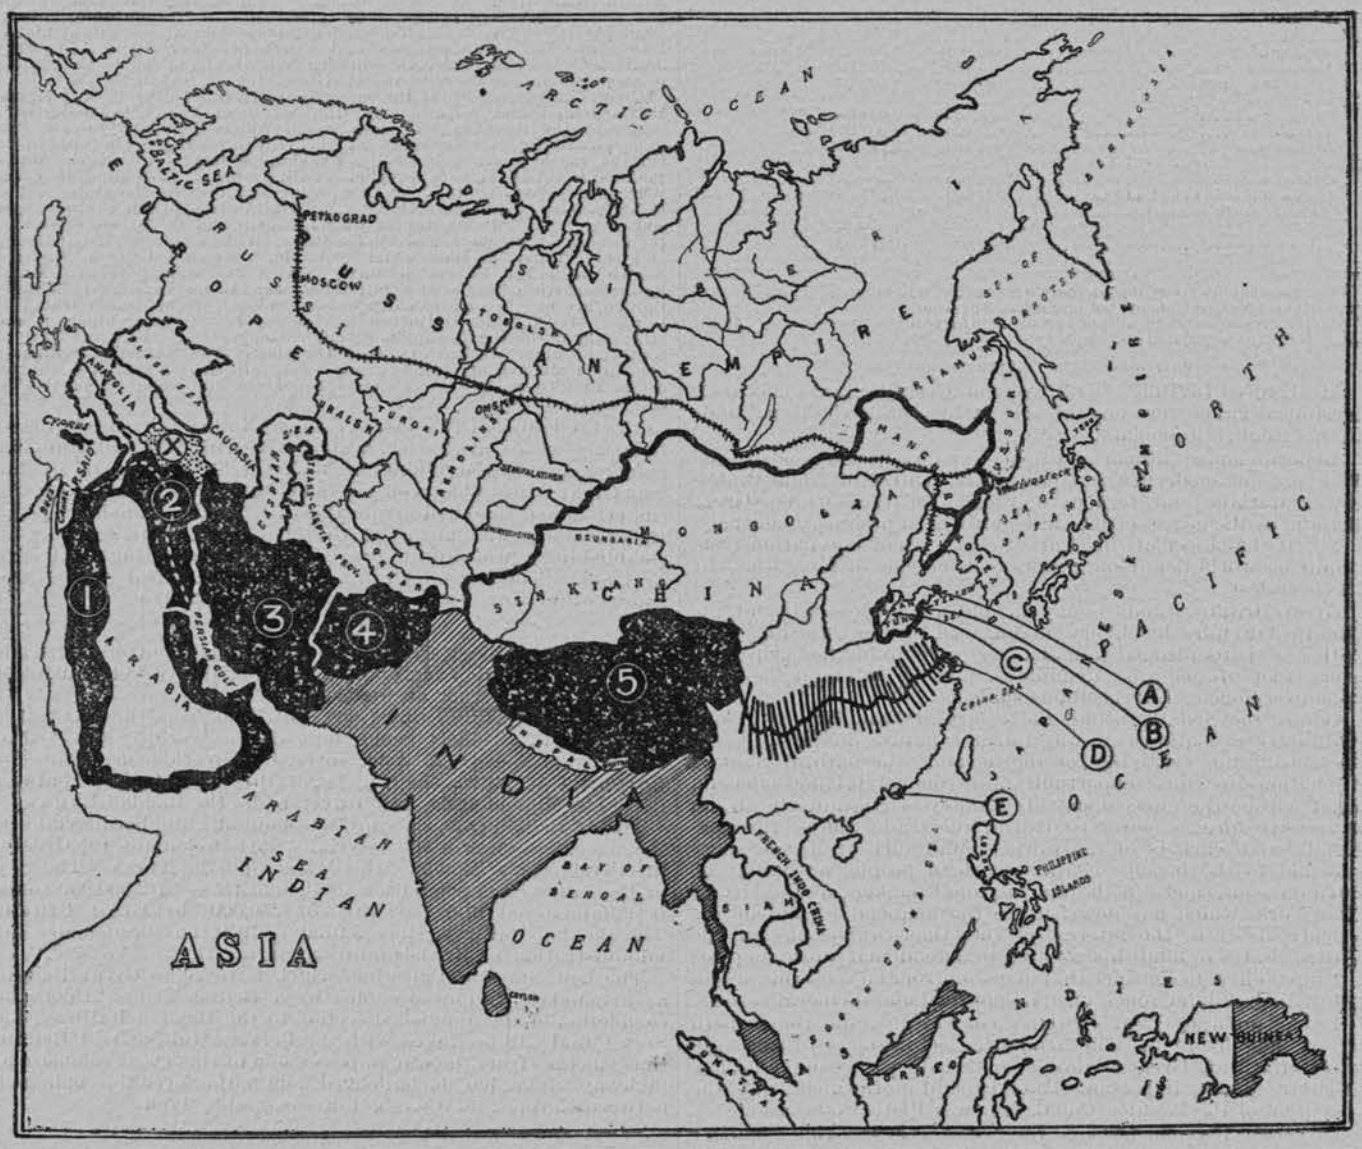
The aggregate area of the British Empire is one-fourth of the land surface of the globe, totaling 15,000,000 square miles, and her population of 475,000,000 souls represents one-fourth of the total population of the world.

The Government of the British Empire is imposed upon 400,000,000 subject peoples, against their will, by 65,000,000



BRITISH TERRITORY IN ASIA.

Shaded portion—Territory held by Great Britain before the war. Solid black portion—Territory acquired by Great Britain as a result of the war.

① Hedjaz—set up as a State by Great Britain and under her control. ② Mesopotamia—Mandate under Great Britain. ③ Persia, ④ Afghanistan, and ⑤ Tibet, became British dependencies under treaties negotiated in August, 1919.

X Armenia—Urged by Great Britain as a mandate under the United States. Armenia is a buffer State protecting Mesopotamia and the Bagdad Railway (held by Great Britain) against attack by land.

A. Wei-hai-Wei—Port in Shantung seized by Great Britain from China when Germany took Kiaochow.

B. Kiaochow—Port acquired by Japan, under treaty of Versailles, in accordance with secret agreements with Great Britain.

C. Shantung—Province of China, occupied by Japan under treaty of Versailles.

D. Shanghai—Chinese port through which Great Britain exploits valley of Yangtze-kiang River. (See map.)

E. Hongkong—Chinese port controlled by Great Britain.

NOTE: The heavy line north of Mongolia marks the boundary between China and Russia. The trans-Siberian railroad is indicated on the map.

people of the English-speaking race, over a territory nine times larger in extent than the Roman Empire at the height of its glory. It is the boundaries of this Empire which the United States, under the league of nations, will be obligated to defend against external aggression or internal disturbance which, in the opinion of the council, amounts even to a "threat of war" affecting the "peace of nations."

I ask leave to print in the RECORD certain data explanatory of the maps, and tables connected therewith, without taking the time of the Senate to read them, under the ruling of the chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there is no objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

British territorial gains.

	Area, in square miles.	Population.[1]	Control.
Africa:
Kamerun	300,000	3,540,000	Mandate.
German Southwest Africa	322,000	150,000	Do.
German East Africa	384,000	7,650,000	Do.
Togo	33,000	1,000,000	Do.
Egypt	350,000	13,000,000	Protectorate.
Sudan	1,000,000	3,400,000	Do.

[1] The populations given include only the native inhabitants. The European population is negligible, being not more than 1 per cent.

	Area in square miles.	Population.[1]	Control.
Ottoman Empire:
Mesopotamia	140,000	2,000,000	Mandate.
Palestine	10,000	700,000	Do.
Syria (one-fourth)	30,000	1,000,000	Do.
Asia:
Tibet	460,000	2,000,000	(?).
Persia	600,000	10,000,000	(?).
Afghanistan	245,000	6,385,000	(?).
Islands:
Cyprus	3,000	300,000	Annexed.
Kaiser Wilhelm Land and islands of Pacific south of Equator.	95,000	600,000	Annexed and mandates.
Total	3,972,000	51,725,000

[1] The populations given include only the native inhabitants. The European population is negligible, being not more than 1 per cent.

[2] Tibet, Persia, and Afghanistan are substantially British protectorates as the result of treaties negotiated in August, 1919.

BRITISH CONTROL OF TRADE ROUTES.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, Great Britain's enormous territorial gains were not the sole prize won at the peace table by the English diplomats.

Modern empires do not rest upon territorial possessions alone. The bases of modern world power are control of trade routes, raw materials, and foreign markets. Of these three, Great Britain, by the peace settlement is left with a practical monopoly.

Sir, if the object of this war was to prevent one nation from acquiring world dominion, and to end the rule of force, the war has been lost.

Great Britain stands to-day in undisputed possession of the mightiest Empire in history, maintained by the right of might, with her rivals pledged to assist her in retaining her grip upon every foot of her vast dominions, and in enforcing her law upon every one of her rebellious subjects.

Before the Senate ratifies the treaty of Versailles, it is our plain duty to inquire carefully into the nature of the peace we are setting up. Waiving for the moment, the natural right of all nations to equal opportunity for commercial development, what will be the effect upon this country of guaranteeing to an aggressive foreign power control of the trade routes, raw materials, and markets of the world? Will such an arrangement rebound to the benefit of the American people, or will it be advantageous solely to the international bankers of the city of New York, which has now become the financial capital of the world? Is it to the interest of the American people for the United States to bind this country to defend that world empire?

I intend first to consider that question from an economic standpoint. I shall later touch upon its political and its moral aspects.

I take up first Great Britain's control of trade routes both by sea and by land. The acknowledged mistress of the seas before the war, Great Britain's control of ocean routes is now absolute. Every important strategic point on the globe, with the exception of the Panama Canal, is now a British possession.

Of course it is not possible for Senators across this Chamber to see the map which hangs upon the west side of the main entrance, but it shows the naval stations of Great Britain as they were at the time we entered the war. None of them has been surrendered. By the arrangements made at Paris by the peace conference others have been added. This map was prepared, in the form in which I present it to the Senate, by the War College. It shows that the United States can not ship goods anywhere overseas without the sufferance of Great Britain. It shows an utter and an absolute and a total command of all the trade routes of the world by Great Britain. I say that that map does not truly represent the present condition, because it does not show the naval bases that Great Britain has acquired as a result of the war, but it ought to be enough to put Senators upon their guard and upon their inquiry. It ought to be enough to deter Senators from concurring in this treaty.

Asia embraces about half of the human race and is consequently the richest market for foreign trade. Here Great Britain's control of trade routes is most marked.

I can not stop, within the limited time that is now imposed upon me under the ruling of the Senator who occupies the chair [Mr. SUTHERLAND] to read, and therefore I ask permission to print without reading, in connection with my remarks, the comments of Mr. Herbert Adams Gibbons and other data upon the economic results of the deliberations of the peace conference.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there is no objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

It requires only a glance at the map to see that the British have succeeded in establishing themselves in places where they control the paths of the sea. Without the strongest navy in the world, their hold on southern Asia would be precarious. Mistress of the seas, Great Britain fears no rival. She commands: Europeans and Asiatics and Americans alike must obey. The commercial advantage of this thorough Asiatic extension of British eminent domain is incalculable. Lucky are the manufacturers and merchants born Britons—if they desire to trade any here. In southern Asia the handicap in their favor is greater than elsewhere. And that is saying a great deal!

Cyprus keeps guard over the eastern Mediterranean, Syria, and Egypt. Perim Island and Aden control the Strait of Beb-el-Mandeb at the outlet of the Red Sea. The islands of Adb-el-Keru and Sokotra, off Cape Guardafui, are sentinels at the entrance of the Gulf of Aden. On the southeastern side of the Arabian peninsula, the Kuria Muria Islands and Bay make a precious coaling station of a kind that the British were willing to fight to prevent France from obtaining. The Bahrein Islands dominate the Persian Gulf, with Koweit at the upper end of the gulf. Possession of the Laccadive and the Maldive Islands, the Chagos Archipelago, and Ceylon makes India secure. The Andaman and the Nicobar Islands watch over the western exit from Malacca Strait, while the Federated Malay States and Singapore give Great Britain control of Malacca Strait. Sarawak, Brunei, and British North Borneo are on the strategically important side of the Dutch island of Borneo. British North Borneo is close to the Sulu Archipelago and other islands of the Philippine group. Hongkong is the great port of southern China, Wei-hai-wei, near the end of the Shantung peninsula opposite Port Arthur, stands ready to dispute with Japan the control of the exit to the sea of the most important and populous portion of the Chinese Empire.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, in brief, by the terms of the peace we are asked to guarantee, Great Britain may train her guns upon every ton of shipping upon the high seas. Out of this war Great Britain has won the Island of Cyprus, controlling the eastern end of the Mediterranean Sea. She has transformed the Red Sea, a great highway to the east, into an English lake by establishing a protectorate over Egypt, and by setting up Hedjaz in Arabia. The Persian Gulf, as a result of the war, washes the shores of territory completely under British control.

THE BAGDAD RAILWAY.

But, Mr. President, the extension of British control over trade routes by sea is less remarkable than her newly won control of the highways of trade on the land.

The most striking gain of Great Britain from the war is the control of the "oldest trade route of the world"—the "royal road" from Europe to Asia, coveted by world conquerors for thousands of years, the valleys of the Tigris and Euphrates Rivers in Mesopotamia, now traversed by the Bagdad Railway.

To-day British troops occupy Mesopotamia, amidst the ruins of the ancient empires of the Assyrians, the Babylonians, the Greeks, the Persians, the Romans, the Arabs, and the Turks. The city of Bagdad, with a population in ancient times of 2,000,000 souls, is administered to-day—a city of 250,000—by Great Britain. The Bagdad Railway, since January, 1919, has been under the administration of British military authorities.

The new State of Palestine, which is to go to Great Britain as a mandate, is now occupied by a British army. Upon the completion of the unfinished section of the Bagdad Railway, the Suez Canal will be linked with the Persian Gulf. Great Britain thus emerges from the war in possession of this great commercial highway, giving her unchallenged domination over the commerce between Europe and Asia, both by sea and by land.

BRITISH NAVAL SUPREMACY.

Great Britain's control of the seas has been strengthened by another circumstance. The war has left Continental Europe without a great naval power. The German navy, which checked British supremacy, has been sunk. Russia's navy has been disorganized and crippled. Austria, with what was once a formidable naval force, is left by the Austrian treaty without an outlet to the sea. The net result of the war, so far as naval strength is concerned, is the elimination of all rivals of Great Britain. Even the combined navies of the United States and Japan would be greatly inferior to that of Great Britain.

What is true of naval strength is likewise true of the merchant marine. But I stop here for a moment to introduce the opinion of the greatest naval expert that the last generation produced as to the effect upon the commercial and industrial destiny of a people of the naval control of the seas.

Put any single nation in control of the seas, and I lay it down as a maxim that you have given to that nation the arbitrary power to control the commercial and industrial development of the world; and in support of that statement I offer the opinion of Admiral Mahan, universally accorded first position among the naval authorities of modern times. Listen to what he says in his great work on "Sea Power":

The world has long been accustomed to the idea of predominant naval power, coupling it with the name of Great Britain, and it has been noted that such power, when achieved, is commonly often associated with commercial and industrial predominance, the struggle for which is now in progress between Great Britain and Germany.

He wrote before the German war, and he wrote with an understanding as to what caused the World War which has occupied the stage of human events for the last four or five years. He understood it was not a question of civilization, but a question of industrial development and commercial control.

Such predominance—

That is, naval predominance—

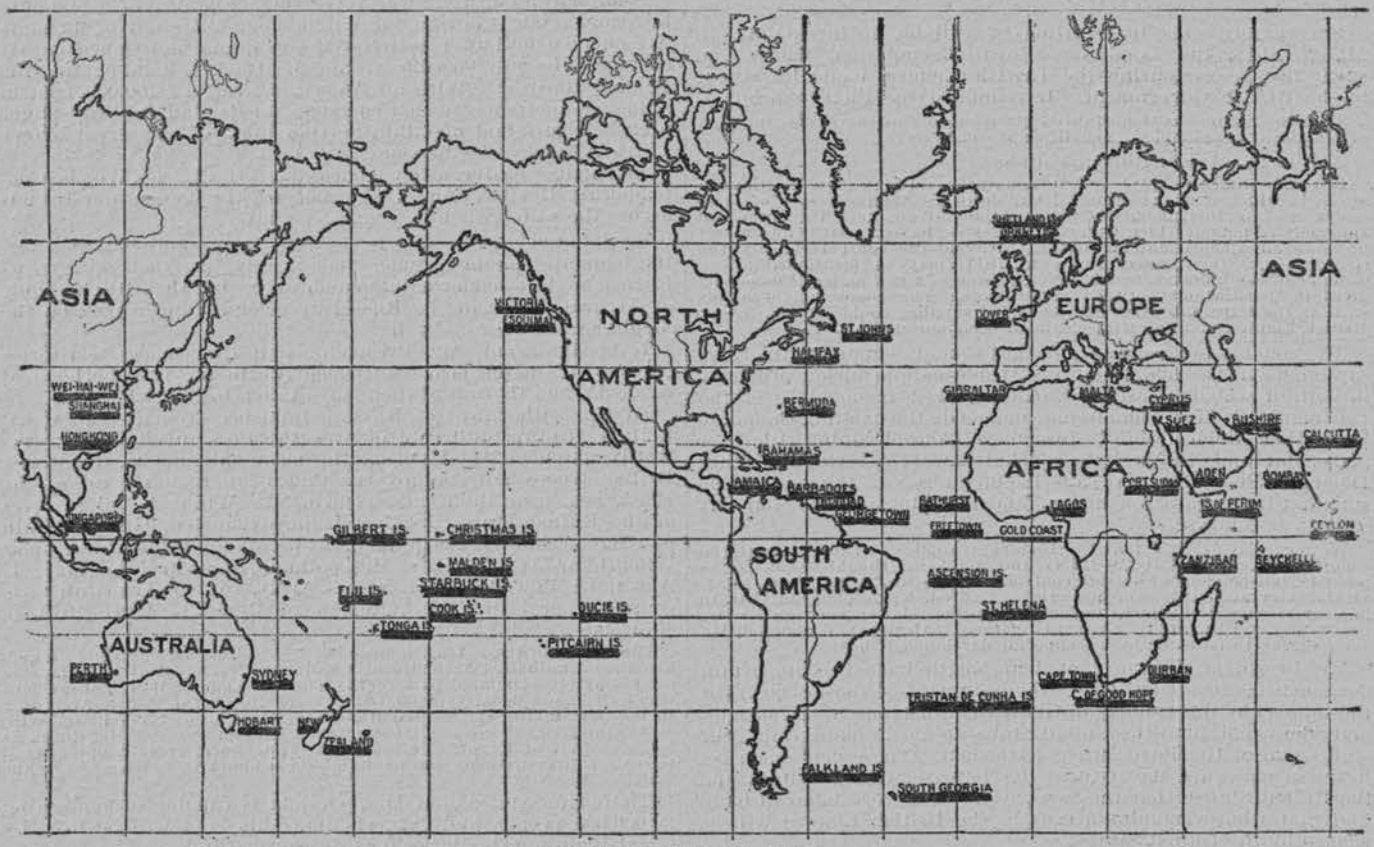
forces a nation to seek markets and, where possible, to control them to its own advantage by preponderant force, the ultimate expression of which is possession. * * * From this flow two results: The attempt to possess and the organization of force by which to maintain possession already achieved. * * * This statement is simply a specific formulation of the general necessity stated; it is an inevitable link in the chain of logical sequences—industry, markets, control, navy bases.

Given those, you have the domination of commercial power. Given those, to the extent that you can control the world, you can control the trade and commerce of the world.

Mr. President, the man in whose hands fate had placed the destinies of this Nation, without a question, without argument, without reservation, at once yielded, on the eve of the writing of the terms of the armistice, to the demands of Great Britain that the control of the seas should be reserved to her.

By this act he made good the boast of Lloyd-George in his speech at Glasgow, June 29, 1917, when he said: "Britain will rule the wave through the war and after the war."

After he had taken this country into the war on the ground that our rights on the sea had been interfered with, and that they must be maintained; that there must be open pathways on the sea; that the rights of neutrals on the sea were sacred; President Wilson sat down at the peace table and surrendered to Great Britain the absolute control of the seas. In God's name, is there to be found anywhere in the history of the nations of the world such a betrayal? And you who are supporting the confirmation of the pledges made in this treaty are indorsing



BRITISH CONTROL OF THE SEAS.

Underscored names indicate naval stations held in 1914 by Great Britain, giving her control of the trade routes of the world.

The map does not include British gains as a result of the war.

By the terms of the peace, German islands in the Pacific north of the Equator go to Japan, while German islands south of the Equator go to Great Britain. This division is in accordance with the secret treaties of the Allies, negotiated before the United States entered the war. The islands acquired by Great Britain and Japan lie between our western coast and the Philippines.

that action, and will be held to account for it some day by the American people.

I wanted, if possible, to save out of this discussion a few minutes to discuss some reservations that I have presented here that I think have something in them which, if they could be argued and debated and considered by the Senate—well, I do not know. I will withdraw that. I will not say that any discussion of them would appeal to some consciences and some minds here. Arrangements have been concluded. Argument does not count. Moral questions, national honor, vital interests, are all thrown into the discard and onto the dust heap, in order that we may be members of a league that makes us the tool of Great Britain.

You may foreclose debate here, you may pass your clotures and shut out discussion on this floor, but you can not stop debate before the American people. We have, it is true, measures pending here looking to that end. We have several of them. We have one reported from the Judiciary Committee that, construed by some of the courts, will stop criticism of administrations.

Mr. FRANCE. They will so construe it, too.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. It will be so construed by some of the courts. Some of the Federal courts have shown themselves to be the abject tools of the special interests. I say that and I mean it, and I am going to take the floor one of these days and review the decisions of that judge at Indianapolis who issued the injunction against the coal miners, an injunction that can not be sustained for a minute by any decisions of the courts or by any construction of the law.

BRITISH CONTROL OF RAW MATERIALS.

Mr. President, I have said that control of raw materials is one of the bases of modern world power. By the peace settlement, Great Britain acquires control over vast natural resources and unlimited supplies of raw materials.

Before the war England was not at a disadvantage in this respect.

She had Canada, with an area of 4,000,000 square miles, 30 per cent of which is suitable for agriculture, supplying wheat, oats, and other foodstuffs; with immense resources of coal and oil, both as yet untouched, and with rich deposits in nickel, zinc, lead, tin, copper, silver, and gold.

She had India, with 225,000,000 out of a total population of 315,000,000 engaged in agriculture, producing wheat, rice, tea for the English table, and wool, cotton, jute and other raw materials in huge quantities for the English factories.

She had Australia, with an area of 4,000,000 square miles, supporting only 5,000,000 people, importing to England great quantities of meat, wool, wheat, dairy products, copper, tin, lead, timber, and coal.

She had South Africa, with a monopoly on the diamond supply of the world, importing over $30,000,000 in stones to England in 1918, and supplying wool, coal, hides, and skins.

Now, Mr. President, can it be argued that it is conducive to the peace of the world and of the general welfare of the nations for one power to extend its control over the raw materials of the earth? Is it true that Great Britain follows a benevolent policy of sharing her advantages with other countries?

Fortunately, some information is available on this point. In March, 1918, the Dominions Royal Commission, which had spent five years touring the British Empire, made its report to the British Government. It reminded the English people—

That the Empire had substantially a monopoly of the world's product of certain most valuable commodities of commerce.

And it gave this significant advice:

It is not difficult * * * to imagine conditions even in times of peace, in which it might become desirable to use the possession of these assets as an instrument of commercial advantage. The practical monopoly of potash which Germany possesses, has enabled her to assert pressure on other countries in the past, and the controversy between Germany and the United States in 1911, may be mentioned as an example of the influence which the possession of a raw material monopoly gives in negotiations between two powers. The possession of assets such as the Canadian asbestos and nickel supplies could be used by the British Empire as a powerful means of economic defense.

The commission recommends that Canada supplant American capitalists in the manufacture of asbestos and nickel products, in both of which industries Canada holds a monopoly over the raw material. The commission commends the existing Canadian legislation which prohibits foreigners from obtaining title over petroleum lands in Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta, and other Dominion Provinces. On page 183 of the report, the commission sums up its "main conclusions and recommendations" on this subject as follows:

We regard it as vital that the Empire's supplies of raw material and commodities essential to its safety and well-being should be, as far as possible, independent of outside control. As the first step toward ascertaining how such independence can be secured, we recommend that an immediate survey should be undertaken of the relation between Empire production and Empire requirements of these materials and commodities, such survey to be made by an imperial development board.

Mr. President, I have quoted at length from this important document because I anticipate the argument of those who favor the support by this country of Great Britain's imperial ambitions, and who would bind the United States to aid in maintaining the status quo of the Paris peace settlement. These gentlemen believe, so close are the natural ties between Great Britain and the United States, that the two nations will work hand in hand and that whatever gains accrue to the British Empire will be shared by the United States.

Ah, Mr. President, that hope finds no support in the frank recommendations of this commission. Suggestions that monopolies of raw material may be used as "instruments of commercial advantage;" that they are valuable in "negotiations between two powers;" warnings to Canada that she must eliminate "foreign control" of her nickel ores, and recommendations that stringent regulations against foreign investments in petroleum, coal, iron, wood pulp, and other natural resources be enacted in every part of the realm—are these the words upon which we are to base our hope for future favors?

The gentlemen overlook the fact that the United States is now Great Britain's principal competitor in commerce, manufactures, and finance. They forget that the British foreign office, acting without restraint from Parliament and often without the knowledge of that body as to the policies it pursues, is eternally vigilant for the protection and aggrandizement of British trade interests throughout the world.

If there were not more vital political and moral considerations at stake, our selfish interests should restrain us from guaranteeing another nation's claim to the natural wealth of the earth. Monopoly does not breed generosity or regard for the rights of others. Monopolies are acquired, maintained and exploited for one object, and that object is self-aggrandizement.

WHY AN AMERICAN MANDATE IN ARMENIA IS DESIRED.

If any man is in doubt as to what the United States may expect under the peace settlement, he has only to look beneath the surface of the proposed mandate in Armenia. The American mission sent to Armenia has, it is true, reported against the acceptance of a mandate by this country. But Great Britain is determined to have us accept it, and I doubt not if we continue in our present course, in a few more months we shall find American soldiers in Armenia. It was only a few days ago that Lloyd-George, A. Bonar Law, and other leaders in the House of Commons expressed great impatience with this country for not immediately taking over the government of Armenia.

A competent American authority, Frank H. Simonds (Review of Reviews, September, 1919, p. 266), declares that the occupation of Armenia would—demand an army which at the outset could hardly be estimated at under 100,000, and might have to be double that size. We should find ourselves in the East forever in the presence of a Russian resumption of that press southward which was only interrupted by the revolution. Between the Cilician Gates and the Upper Euphrates we should stand in an area where British and French claims conflict, while about Constantinople we should find ourselves face to face with Russian, Bulgarian, and Hellenic aspirations.

Senators and citizens who favor the acceptance of a mandate in Armenia might devote a profitable hour to a study of the map. Armenia is the buffer between Mesopotamia and Caucasia. It obstructs the only possible avenue of attack by land against the Bagdad Railway. With an American army of 100,000 men in Armenia, the power which controls the Bagdad Railway might breathe easily and maintain her dominion of this great artery of trade for decades to come.

An English writer, a few months ago (H. Charles Woods, Contemporary Review, June, 1919) reflected the hope of our friends across the water when he suggested that—if America could be persuaded to undertake this responsibility—

the mandate should include, "not merely just such an area as Europe might consider a disencumbrance," but the little Republic of Ararat, bordering on Russia and Persia, and a port on the Mediterranean Sea as well.

It is significant, Mr. President, that the richest territories disposed of in the peace settlement lie in the neighborhood of Armenia, and that all of them have fallen to Great Britain.

By the withdrawal of Russian influence from Persia, Great Britain acquires full control over the Persian oil lands, practically untouched and among the most valuable in the world. British troops now occupy the Caucasian region, west of the Black Sea, near Baku, also rich in oil. While the oil reserves of the United States are fast being exhausted, Great Britain now has within her grasp the great petroleum fields of the globe.

South of Armenia lies Mesopotamia, described by Maj. T. Alexander Powell, United States Army, former American vice-consul general in Syria (Review of Reviews, April, 1919, p. 407), as—

The richest of these Asian lands. * * * This Mesopotamian region has almost unlimited agricultural possibilities. Though it is to-day the most sparsely populated part of the Turkish Empire, it was in ancient times the most densely populated part of the world. * * * According to the painstaking and conscientious investigation of Sir William Willcocks, the irrigable area of Mesopotamia is from two to three times as large as that of Egypt. Cotton, sugar cane, corn, cereals, opium, and tobacco will flourish on the banks of the Euphrates as they do in the valley of the Nile.

The writer states that Mesopotamia is capable of supporting 30,000,000 people, and suggests that this land will be used by Great Britain as an outlet for overcrowded India.

The new British dependencies in Africa are also rich in natural resources. Togo produces cotton, oil, rubber; Kamerun produces rubber, ivory, cocoa, palm oil, hard woods; Southwest Africa, cattle, sheep, and rich resources of iron, copper, tin, gold, and diamonds; East Africa, rubber, ivory, coffee, coal, iron, lead, copper.

BRITISH TARIFF POLICY.

I have shown, Mr. President, how Great Britain controls the raw materials of the world. I have sketched roughly her control of the trade routes by land and by sea. That she controls the markets of the world as the result of her vast political empire can hardly be questioned. I shall not take time to prove the obvious fact of her supremacy in Africa, Asia Minor, and Asia where the most profitable markets are to be found.

Now, Mr. President, if we are to guarantee to another nation a world monopoly of trade routes, raw material, and markets, the responsibility is upon the Senate to take into account the obvious results of that policy.

I recommend to Senators who have shown themselves zealous in the protection of American business interests a study of the tariff policy of Great Britain.

Since 1897 the system of "preferential tariffs" has been extended throughout the British Empire. To quote a British authority (J. Watson Grice, "The Resources of the Empire," p. 52):

In large measure the maintenance of the trade of the mother country with the dominions, and the steady expansion in the trading relations of each of the dominions with other portions of the Empire, reflected in the adjoining tables, have been assisted and encouraged by the preferential treatment which has been accorded by each of the dominions to certain products and manufactures of various parts of the British Empire.

The same authority notes that, under the revision of the Canadian customs tariff of 1907, with the enactment of a "preferential tariff," a "general tariff," and an "intermediate tariff," American goods "pay the general tariff rates on importation into the Dominion, and that from April, 1903, to February, 1919, German goods were subject to a surtax of one-third of the duties under the general tariff."

Since the close of the war, plans have been laid to revise the preferential tariffs of the British Empire and to heighten the "tariff wall" surrounding the colonies.

Before the war Germany was England's rival for foreign trade. The preferential tariffs of the British Empire were levied with that fact well in mind.

President Wilson, speaking at St. Louis, Mo., September 5, 1919, declared that the war itself was the result of the fierce competition between these two nations. He said on that occasion:

Why, my fellow citizens, is there any man here or any woman, let me say is there any child here, who does not know that the seed of war in the modern world is industrial and commercial rivalry? The real reason that the war we have just finished took place was that Germany was afraid her commercial rivals were going to get the better of her, and the reason why some nations went into the war against Germany was that they thought Germany would get the commercial advantage of them. The seed of the jealousy, the seed of the deep-seated hatred was hot, successful commercial and industrial rivalry. * * * This war, in its inception was a commercial and industrial war. It was not a political war.

Now, Mr. President, as a result of the war, the United States has succeeded Germany as England's commercial rival. She will inherit, as time passes, the same jealousy, the same "deep-seated hatred," that inevitably results, as Mr. Wilson says, from "commercial and industrial rivalry."

In revising her preferential tariffs, Great Britain will not overlook the fact that America is her chief commercial competitor. She will extend her tariff wall around her new dominions—as she extended it early in the war around the captured German colonies in Africa—and American goods will be excluded from the lands we are guaranteeing to Great Britain, just as American goods are being excluded to-day from German Southwest Africa, and other territories where, before the war, our goods entered upon an equal footing with the commerce of the world.

The Senate must reckon with this result of the peace settlement, as well as with the effect upon American commerce of giving Great Britain power to levy prohibitive shipping and freight rates on the great trade routes and in the great ports of entry over which she has recently extended her control.

BRITISH EXPLOITATION OF SUBJECT PEOPLES.

I have heard it stated in this Chamber that Great Britain is the one great colonizing nation in the world. In justification of her wide dominion, it has been argued that she is peculiarly fitted to administer the government of distant territories.

Senators who advance that doctrine ignore the fact that the day of colonization is past. There has been no effort—and there will be none—to colonize India, Egypt, or Mesopotamia, as Canada, Australia, and South Africa have been colonized. Out of a total population in India and her dependencies of 360,000,000, there are to be found only 170,000 Europeans and Americans, of whom two-thirds are British subjects. Great Britain holds these immense territories and administers the affairs of the native populations, not for purposes of colonization, but for the sole object of exploitation.

Under the pretense of altruism, with much talk of bestowing the blessings of Christianity and civilization upon the "backward peoples," the imperial nations of Europe have ruthlessly exploited the rich resources and vast populations of Africa and Asia.

The covenant of the league of nations provides that in the future this exploitation shall be carried on under the authority of a mandate. No provision is made whereby the dependent countries may safeguard their natural resources. It is not even provided that a "backward" nation may refuse a mandate which it knows is prompted by selfish interest.

A native Hindu, writing of the subjection of his race and of western domination of Asia has aptly described the conditions the treaty of peace will perpetuate:

There are four main incentives for the subjection of Asia: (1) Rich natural resources; (2) unlimited amounts of human material (cheap labor); (3) raw material for feeding the looms and factories of Manchester and Lancashire; (4) markets—a place on which to dump the cheap manufactured trash of Europe.

That is the analysis, Mr. President, of this keen eastern mind of the reasons why Asia is now held fast under foreign rule.

The writer now describes the real purpose of the governments maintained by foreign powers in Asia:

In return for the possession and exploitation of natural resources and human beings, the exploiting nation establishes and forces upon the unwilling, unarmed, and defenseless people a political despotism the chief aim of which is to render economic exploitation more efficient.

Under this system of political and economic exploitation, Asia has endured three centuries of torture. Countless millions have starved to death while food which they have grown has been shipped from their country; railroads and strategical harbors have been built for this purpose. Not only were railroads built with private British capital, but the British government in India guaranteed a profit to all investors, such money to come from the Indian revenues if the railroads did not pay for themselves.

Their industries have been destroyed that they might not compete with Manchester and Lancashire and that they might remain producers of raw materials; their self-governing, democratic village communities have been destroyed and authority centralized in one hand that exploitation might be more thorough; their schools have been destroyed and education denied them, save that which fitted them for subordinate clerical positions under European masters; opium and liquor have been forced upon them by cannons with a four-fold purpose; revenue, easier economic subjection, easier political subjection, racial and cultural destruction.

That is the system which is being forced to-day upon the unwilling races of Asia and Africa.

It may be said that this picture is overdrawn. It is my own belief that it tells the ugly truth of the white man's penetration in China, India, Egypt, and other defenseless countries.

I shall not review the results of that system. Wherever it has been imposed, it has brought famine, misery, and rebellion. The average income of a native worker in India to-day is less than $10 a year, and $1.50 of that amount is wrung from him annually in taxes levied by an alien government. The statement before the Foreign Relations Committee of the Senate that 6,000,000 natives died during the last three months of 1918 because of the "drawing of resources out of India, making it impossible for her to maintain an adequate food supply," has not been denied.

Wherever the British flag flies over a subject people to-day, revolution is brewing. Ireland is an armed camp. Three hundred and fifty millions of Indians are stirring. The Egyptians, betrayed into the passive acceptance of a protectorate, are in open revolt. Egypt was called by Napoleon "the most important country in the world." Bismarck referred to it as "the nerve center" of the British Empire. British ascendency in Persia, Afghanistan, and China meanwhile, depends upon the maintenance of her rule in India. If she should lose either India or Egypt, most of the subject peoples whom she exploits would gain their freedom.

LEAGUE FORMED TO PRESERVE STATUS QUO.

Mr. President, there is one agency to which Great Britain may look for aid in holding her rebellious subjects in check, and that agency is the league of nations.

I care not what reservations or amendments we attach to this covenant. In the final analysis it is an instrument for the preservation of the status quo. Like the Holy Alliance of 1815, it is couched in the language of idealism and peace. But, like the Holy Alliance, it will be used for the suppression of nationalities and for the prosecution of oppressive warfare.

This covenant closes the door in the face of every people striving for freedom. Not one of the races now held in bondage had a voice in the making of this instrument. Not one was granted an opportunity to be heard at Paris. This covenant was so cunningly conceived that the first act of revolution in India, Korea, Egypt, or Ireland will be interpreted as a "threat of war" and a disturbance of the "peace of nations." Patriots of India, Egypt, Ireland seeking external aid for their countries as Franklin sought aid in France for the struggling American colonies, and as Kossuth, Kosciuszko, De Valera, and many others have sought aid in the United States for the cause of human freedom, by the terms of this treaty become international outlaws. No ingenuity of interpretation of the articles of this document can remove from my mind the conviction that it destroys everywhere the right of asylum.

If we are to disregard every principle of our free institutions and every tradition of the past, there are yet other reasons why we should withhold our support from this new alliance.

We should not deceive ourselves into believing that there can be a permanent enforcement of the present system of exploitation in Asia. The civilization of these Asiatic countries is more venerable than our own. Asia's contribution to the world has been the principle of human brotherhood. Asia has produced the great moral teachers of history—Confucius, Buddha, Mohammed, Christ.

To these great teachers may be traced the nonresistance and pacifism of the Asiatic peoples.

The races of Asia have now suffered for three centuries under European exploitation. Off the east coast of China they see the smallest of the Asiatic nations, Japan, holding a place of power in the councils of the world. They know that Japan owes her present ascendancy to the military and naval strength which she built up in a decade. With this example before them, is it likely that the millions of Asia will continue long under foreign rule? China has already awakened under the stimulus of a revolution and the theft of Shantung. India is approaching revolt. Should the league of nations attempt to maintain indefinitely the status quo in Asia, the world will witness a more terrible war than the one from which we have emerged. It will be a continental war—a race war, in which the white races will be hopelessly outnumbered.

If we ratify the treaty with Germany we are leading this country farther into the shadow of that menace.

Mr. President, I do not speak of Great Britain's mighty Empire in a spirit of covetousness.

I do not covet for this country a position in the world which history has shown would make us the object of endless jealousies and hatreds, involve us in perpetual war, and lead to the extinction of our domestic liberty. I, for one, harbor no ambition to see this country start upon the path which has lured other nations to their ruin.

Mr. President, we can not, without sacrificing this Republic, maintain world dominion for ourselves. And, sir, we should not pledge ourselves to maintain it for another.

Where are Great Britain's boundaries likely to be assailed? Certainly not in Australia, Canada, South Africa, or New Zealand. These self-governing dominions—colonized and peopled by Englishmen—have given ample proof of their loyalty to the mother land and their Anglo-Saxon populations need no league of nations to guarantee the integrity of their territories.

It is the vast native populations, held in bondage for the enrichment of a small class of imperialist aliens—the millions of India, Egypt, and the Ottoman Empire—who are apt in the future to disturb the status quo created by this peace.

It is these peoples that the league of nations must hold in check. It is to maintain this part of her Empire that Great Britain must keep her mighty navy and burden the English people with taxes.

It is my conviction that the English people residing in the dominions and the British Isles would benefit most if this illicit portion of the Empire should crumble and fall away.

If the British Empire were limited to the dominions, with its government founded upon the consent of the governed, and hence requiring no guaranties from other nations, the peace of the world would rest upon a sounder basis.

Mr. President, I know the argument will be advanced here that the 400,000,000 unwilling subjects of the British Empire enjoy better government than they would enjoy if left to govern themselves.

Senators, that is an argument which, even if it were based on truth, should have no place in the American Congress. We owe our national existence to the courage of a handful of men who proclaimed to the world the self-evident truths that—

All men are created equal; that they are endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable rights; that among these are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness, that to secure these rights, governments are instituted among men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed.

A controversy arose in this country 60 years ago as to the application of those great principles. In that contest, Abraham Lincoln contended that the Declaration of Independence applied not alone to white men, or to the descendants of the English settlers in the colonies, but to all men, white and black, yellow and brown, and he declared that Declaration the "sheet anchor of American republicanism."

LINCOLN ON SUBJUGATION OF WEAKER PEOPLES.

When the arguments were advanced in this country for the enslavement of the Negro which are now advanced for denying the natives of India and of Egypt self-government, Lincoln replied (Chicago, Ill., July 10, 1858):

Those arguments that are made, that the inferior race are to be treated with as much allowance as they are capable of enjoying; that as much is to be done for them as their condition will allow. What are these arguments? They are the arguments that kings have made for enslaving the people in all ages of the world. You will find that all the arguments in favor of kingcraft were of this class; they always bestrode the necks of the people, not that they wanted to do it, but because the people were better off for being ridden. That is their argument, and this argument of the judge (Douglas) is the same old argument that says, You work, and I eat; you toil, and I will enjoy the fruits of it. Turn it whatever way you will, whether it come from the mouth of a king as an excuse for enslaving the people of his country, or from the mouth of men of one race as a reason for enslaving the men of another race, it is all the same old serpent.

In the same speech, Lincoln said:

Now, I ask you in all soberness, if all these things, if indulged in, if ratified, if confirmed and indorsed, if taught to our children, and repeated to them, do not tend to rub out the sentiment of liberty in the country, and to transform this Government into a Government of some other form?

In that same great contest, on another occasion (Edwardsville, Ill., Sept. 13, 1858), Lincoln said:

What constitutes the bulwark of our own liberty and independence? It is not our frowning battlements, our bristling seacoasts, our army and our navy. These are not our reliance against tyranny. All of these may be turned against us without making us weaker for the struggle. Our reliance is in the love of liberty which God has planted in us. Our defense is in the spirit which prizes liberty as the heritage of all men, in all lands everywhere. Destroy this spirit and you have planted the seeds of despotism at your own doors. Familiarize yourselves with the chains of bondage and you prepare your own limbs to wear them. Accustomed to trample on the rights of others, you have lost the genius of your own independence and become the fit subjects of the first cunning tyrant who rises among you.

Mr. President, when Abraham Lincoln contended for the right of self-government, as the heritage of "all men in all lands, everywhere," who can say that he would have excluded the people of Egypt, of India, and of Ireland?

These people do not ask that we send armies to Europe or Asia to aid them in gaining their freedom. They ask, simply, that we shall do nothing to hinder them in their struggle for independence from the power which once held sway over the American Colonies.

The hope expressed here, that by entering the league of nations we can best serve these subject races is, in my opinion, a forlorn hope.

If we were powerless to serve oppressed peoples at Paris, by what logic can it be argued that we shall be better able to serve them at Geneva?

At Paris our enemies, our Allies, and the neutral nations of the world had accepted the fourteen points which we were pledged to write into the peace.

How the representatives of the United States compromised those principles, how they set aside the doctrine of self-determination, how they abandoned "open covenants openly arrived at" for the secret treaties of the Allies, are now matters of history. Can it be hoped that at Geneva, with the confidence of the world blasted in the stability of our purposes and ourselves bound to a covenant which pledges our support for the status quo, we shall be a powerful advocate for Korea, India, Egypt, and Ireland?

Mr. President, when the American people were committed to this war, the great mass of them were led to believe that they were suffering and fighting for the destruction of arbitrary power, exercised by strong nations over weaker people—fighting to carry democracy to all parts of the world.

The war ended. We sacrificed a quarter of a million precious American lives, incurred a war-debt of thirty billions, disorganized industry, engendered class hatred in our social order, created a new crop of profiteering millionaires, overturned a German autocracy and built up a British autocracy infinitely stronger to rule the world, and we are now engaged in creating a league of nations to perpetuate its power and bind this Government to respect and preserve its extended boundaries.

Look at the map of the world as Great Britain's boundaries were fixed before the war! British possessions—widely scattered, outlying, detached, isolated—waiting to be united, bound together, and made secure!

Look at the map to-day, with British boundaries reaching out over the earth to embrace her spoils of war.

The map of the world has become the map of Great Britain. It is not the work of chance. On its face it is the written confession of the guilt of British imperialists for their full share in the years of diplomatic intrigue which inevitably embroiled the world in war.

How puny appear the ambitions of Germany compared to the imperial power now actually attained by Great Britain!

In spite of the protestation of Lloyd-George that England did not seek "one yard of territory," Great Britain has made capital of the sacrifices of the United States, of France, and of the English people, to bring a vast new territory under her flag, and British bankers and traders are preparing for a new era of exploitation.

I do not believe that the British Empire, in which the missing links were neatly fitted at the Paris conference, is an accident of events.

It is plainly the consummation of the long-considered and well-planned program of the imperialists who dominate the British foreign office, at the expense of the English people. To this source, in my opinion, may be traced many of the minor irritants which lead up to the war.

It was this force which built up in the United States by subtle propaganda hatred of Germany. It is this power which now seeks American support for a treaty visiting upon the German Republic a peace more crushing, more harsh and pitiless in its terms, than any peace threatened to be imposed upon the German Empire under the rule of the Kaiser and the Junker.

That this venomous and unreasoning hatred of Germany still persists in some parts of our country will not restrain me from raising my voice in protest against the crushing of the German Republic and the German people, who, according to the President's own statements, were not responsible for the war.

If we ratify the treaty of Versailles, after pledging ourselves to a peace based upon the fourteen points—which had been approved by the Allies and accepted in good faith by the Central Powers—we shall stand convicted before the world as a Nation without honor, and unworthy to be trusted to fulfill the pledges it has made.

Mr. KENYON. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. President. I would like to know if one Senator can give his time to another Senator. I would like to give the Senator from Wisconsin——

Mr. GRONNA. That has been decided.

Mr. KENYON. It has been decided?

Mr. GRONNA. Yes.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I would like to have the Senator complete that statement; he would like——

Mr. KENYON. I would like to give the Senator a part of my time.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I am indeed grateful there is one Senator who indicates that disposition.

Mr. GRONNA. Two.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Yes; there is one in addition to the Senator from North Dakota.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has ruled that according to his understanding of the rule that could not be done. But of course that decision is reviewable by the Senate.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I asked a question of the desk. Will the desk tell the Presiding Officer, and let me be informed how much time I have left?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. You have thirty minutes of your own time left.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Thirty minutes of my own time?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes, that is not taking out the time the Senator used of the time of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA].

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I want to reserve that thirty minutes to discuss certain reservations that I have offered here, and therefore I forego making additional argument that I think is in the interests not only of the material welfare of this country, but in the perpetuity of its free institutions.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the substitute offered by the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] for the reservation proposed by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER].

Mr. THOMAS. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The absence of a quorum is suggested. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Hale	McNary	Smith, Ga.
Ball	Harding	Moses	Smith, S. C.
Bankhead	Harris	Nelson	Smoot
Beckham	Harrison	New	Spencer
Borah	Henderson	Newberry	Stanley
Calder	Hitchcock	Norris	Sterling
Capper	Johnson, Calif.	Nugent	Sutherland
Chamberlain	Johnson, S. Dak.	Overman	Swanson
Colt	Jones, Wash.	Owen	Thomas
Cummins	Kellogg	Page	Townsend
Curtis	Kendrick	Penrose	Trammell
Dial	Kenyon	Phelan	Underwood
Dillingham	Keyes	Pittman	Wadsworth
Edge	King	Poindexter	Walsh, Mass.
Elkins	Kirby	Pomerene	Walsh, Mont.
Fernald	La Follette	Reed	Warren
Fletcher	Lenroot	Robinson	Watson
France	Lodge	Sheppard	Wolcott
Frelinghuysen	McCormick	Shields
Gay	McCumber	Simmons
Gronna	McKellar	Smith, Ariz.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-one Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, without interruption I should like to take five or six minutes to explain why I can not vote for the substitute offered by the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] nor for the original reservation offered by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER].

A good deal of emphasis has been laid on the fact that this is recognizing an international labor conference which may have an important effect on labor throughout the world. It makes no difference whether we recognize by this instrument an international labor conference or not. Such conferences have been held, and they will continue to be held, and will exert an influence on labor questions throughout the world. The only question is whether, by giving them Government recognition here and by providing Government participation, we will succeed in stabilizing labor conditions everywhere and in equalizing them in a reasonable way in the reasonable interest of labor.

Mr. President, under present conditions when labor holds an international conference all the members represent labor; they are labor delegates. Under the plan proposed in this treaty, one-half of the members attending the conference will be appointed by the Governments and will represent the general public, one-quarter only will represent labor, and one-quarter will represent employers, so that the result is apt to be more conservative and fairer and more in accordance with the welfare of society than to have one class only represented.

Mr. President, there is another thing. A governing body is created in addition to this conference which is to be held once a year. The governing body also consists one-half of representatives of the various nations, one-quarter of labor, and one-quarter of employers. So there again we have a responsible body more likely to reach reasonable decisions than if they were wholly belonging to one class.

Another thing I want to impress upon Senators is that the action of the conference is only advisory. It can not pass any resolution or enact any decree that binds anybody. All it can do is to recommend to the nations of the world, and there are only two methods in which those recommendations can be considered. First, the recommendation by the international labor conference can be put into the form of a treaty between the nations to which it refers. If that is ratified, then it binds them just the same as any other treaty is binding. Second, if not put into a treaty, it may be indrafted into the legislation of the various countries. In the United States that would require an act of Congress.

So there is no danger that the labor conditions of the United States will be governed by any international body. Always the question will remain a matter for Congress to decide or for the Senate to pass upon if it is in the form of a treaty to be ratified.

With these explanations, what objection can there be to this provision in the treaty? What possible objection is there to making an effort to stabilize labor conditions and equalize them throughout the world? We have complaints of pauper labor competition with the United States. The natural tendency will be to equalize, if this conference shall have their way, the eight-hour day not only in the United States but in other countries that have not adopted it, and with the conservative feature introduced by the representatives of the Governments, by the representatives of two classes, the employer and the employee, I can see no reason why the best results can not be secured.

I have heard it stated that nations were bound by this international labor conference. Let me read a single paragraph from article 405, which demonstrates absolutely that that statement is not true. It reads as follows, page 501:

> If on a recommendation no legislative or other action is taken to make a recommendation effective, or if the draft convention fails to obtain the consent of the authority or authorities within whose competence the matter lies, no further obligation shall rest upon the member.

In other words, a recommendation is made by the labor conference, and if the United States Senate does not ratify a treaty to take it into effect or if the Congress of the United States shall not enact a law to take it into effect, it does not bind the United States in any degree.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the substitute offered by the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], on which the yeas and nays have been requested.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CURTIS (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY], who is unavoidably detained from the Senate. I therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. KENDRICK (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

The roll call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 43, nays 48, as follows:

YEAS—43.

Ball	Gore	McLean	Sherman
Borah	Gronna	Moses	Shields
Brandegee	Harding	Myers	Smith, Ga.
Calder	Johnson, Calif.	New	Smoot
Cummins	Jones, Wash.	Newberry	Sutherland
Dial	Kenyon	Norris	Thomas
Dillingham	King	Page	Wadsworth
Elkins	Knox	Penrose	Walsh, Mass.
Fernald	La Follette	Phipps	Warren
France	Lodge	Poindexter	Watson
Frelinghuysen	McCormick	Reed

NAYS—48.

Ashurst	Chamberlain	Fletcher	Harrison
Bankhead	Colt	Gay	Henderson
Beckham	Culberson	Hale	Hitchcock
Capper	Edge	Harris	Johnson, S. Dak.

Jones, N. Mex.	Nelson	Robinson	Sterling
Kellogg	Nugent	Sheppard	Swanson
Keyes	Overman	Simmons	Townsend
Kirby	Owen	Smith, Ariz.	Trammell
Lenroot	Phelan	Smith, Md.	Underwood
McCumber	Pittman	Smith, S. C.	Walsh, Mont.
McKellar	Pomerene	Spencer	Williams
McNary	Ransdell	Stanley	Wolcott

NOT VOTING—4.

Curtis	Fall	Gerry	Kendrick

So Mr. KING's substitute was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question now recurs on the reservation offered by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER].

Mr. LODGE. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CURTIS (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as on the previous vote, I withhold my vote.

Mr. KENDRICK (when his name was called). Making the same announcement with reference to my pair with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL], I withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BECKHAM (after having voted in the negative). Has the senior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. SUTHERLAND] voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. BECKHAM. I have a pair with that Senator and I withdraw my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 54, nays 35, as follows:

YEAS—54.

Ball	Gore	McCormick	Reed
Borah	Gronna	McCumber	Shields
Brandegee	Hale	McLean	Smith, Ga.
Calder	Harding	McNary	Smoot
Capper	Johnson, Calif.	Moses	Spencer
Colt	Jones, Wash.	Myers	Sterling
Cummins	Kellogg	Nelson	Thomas
Dial	Kenyon	New	Townsend
Dillingham	Keyes	Newberry	Wadsworth
Edge	King	Norris	Walsh, Mass.
Elkins	Knox	Page	Warren
Fernald	La Follette	Penrose	Watson
France	Lenroot	Phipps
Frelinghuysen	Lodge	Poindexter

NAYS—35.

Ashurst	Hitchcock	Pittman	Smith, S. C.
Bankhead	Johnson, S. Dak.	Pomerene	Stanley
Chamberlain	Jones, N. Mex.	Ransdell	Swanson
Culberson	Kirby	Robinson	Trammell
Fletcher	McKellar	Sheppard	Underwood
Gay	Nugent	Sherman	Walsh, Mont.
Harris	Overman	Simmons	Williams
Harrison	Owen	Smith, Ariz.	Wolcott
Henderson	Phelan	Smith, Md.

NOT VOTING—6.

Beckham	Fall	Kendrick	Sutherland
Curtis	Gerry

So Mr. MCCUMBER's reservation was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills:

S. 3319. An act to provide for the reimbursement of the United States for motive power, cars, and other equipment ordered for railroads and systems of transportation under Federal control, and for other purposes; and

S. 3332. An act authorizing the board of county commissioners of the county of Hartford, in the State of Connecticut, to construct a bridge across the Connecticut River between Windsor Locks and East Windsor, at Warehouse Point, in said county and State.

The message also announced that the House agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9821) to amend "An act entitled 'An act relating to the Metropolitan police of the District of Columbia,' approved February 28, 1901," and for other purposes.

The message further announced that the House had passed the following bill and joint resolution, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 10453. An act to provide for the termination of Federal control of railroads and systems of transportation; to provide for the settlement of disputes between carriers and their employees; to further amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, as amended, and for other purposes; and

H. J. Res. 249. Joint resolution to continue the control of imports of dyes and coal-tar products.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (S. 425) to establish the Zion National Park in the State of Utah.

EMBARGO ON DYES AND COAL-TAR PRODUCTS.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, there is a joint resolution on the Vice President's table which came over from the other House about half an hour since. I do not think there will be any discussion of or objection to it, and I ask unanimous consent, as in legislative session, that the Chair may lay the joint resolution before the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I should like to know what the joint resolution proposes.

Mr. PENROSE. It is relative to dyestuffs and is similar to the joint resolution which was before the Senate the other afternoon.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I shall have to object to its consideration.

Mr. SIMMONS. I hope the Senator from Nebraska will not object. As amended, I think the joint resolution is wholly unobjectionable, and its passage, I think, is very important.

Mr. PENROSE. All objection to the joint resolution, I think, has been eliminated.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Can it be passed without debate?

Mr. SIMMONS. I think so.

Mr. PENROSE. I think there will be no debate, as all opposition to the joint resolution has been allayed.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. If there will be no debate, I withdraw my objection to the consideration of the joint resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There being no objection, the Chair lays before the Senate the joint resolution.

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 249) to continue the control of imports of dyes and coal-tar products was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That notwithstanding the prior termination of the present war, the provisions of the trading-with-the-enemy act, approved October 6, 1917, and of any proclamation of the President, issued in pursuance thereof, which prohibit or control the importation into the United States of dyes or other products derived directly or indirectly from coal tar are continued until January 15, 1920.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I only want to say that this joint resolution is identical, word for word, with the joint resolution which has been reported unanimously from the Committee on Finance of the Senate and to which every Senator has agreed. It simply gives two months' protection—whether adequate or not I do not know—until permanent legislation on the subject may be passed.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, all I desire to say is that I shall, if I can get an opportunity, vote "nay" upon this joint resolution. I shall not vote for a license system, even though I know that it is necessary to protect the dyestuffs industry.

There being no objection, the Senate as in Committee of the Whole proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, and read the third time.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator from Pennsylvania a question. There are several bills which are considered as emergency measures which have passed the House of Representatives relating to the tariff on particular items, such as magnesite, tungsten, and some other commodities. I desire to know what the disposition of the Committee on Finance is with reference to those measures?

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, the committee had a meeting some time ago and unanimously resolved that none of those bills should be taken up until the peace treaty shall have been disposed of. However, at the earnest request of people who were here in Washington and who desired to be heard in reference to some of these measures, a subcommittee of the Committee on Finance was appointed, which has been holding hearings and has completed them on zinc and tungsten.

Mr. JONES of Washington. What I desire to get at is, is it the disposition of the committee in the near future to take action upon these special bills that have passed the other House and to bring the matter before the Senate for consideration and action?

Mr. PENROSE. It is the purpose of the committee at the very earliest practicable moment to take up all these bills, including the one relating to magnesite, in a friendly spirit.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, the other evening I objected to the consideration of the joint resolution which was before the Senate in reference to this matter. The reason I did so was because of a telegram which I received and which reads as follows:

Grateful for your telegram. Very important for cotton-mill industry that foreign fast color dyes are admitted without further delay or hindrance. One cotton manufacturer has million and half dollars' shirting cloth requiring these dyes, unable to deliver without them; meanwhile many million dollars of these shirtings with fast dyes have been recently bought in England for importation to this country. Our print works has many thousand pieces held up for lack of fast colors. Will certainly lose its export trade in shirting unless permitted to secure dyes available to foreign competitors.

Mr. President, I have no objection to the resolution in the shape in which it is now presented, but I do want to vote to allow dyes to be imported into this country. I have had the matter up direct with the War Trade Board, and they have promised that they would allow such action. It is important to the cotton-mill industry that we get dyes immediately, and if they can not be manufactured in the United States they will have to be imported. Personally I wish this board could go out of existence and let the country get back to normal. I am perfectly willing to protect American industry to a reasonable extent, but if we can not manufacture dyes, then we should be allowed to import them as soon as possible.

Furthermore, I do not object to German importation, as some others do. If we expect Germany to get back on her feet, it will be necessary to begin to trade with her, and I want either that dyes be manufactured in this country or to have them imported right away in order to help the manufacturers of this country. Dyestuffs enter into the cost of clothing, and it is time that the price of clothing should come down.

I have no objection to the joint resolution being considered, but the reason I objected the other day was because of the statements in the telegram I have read and in a number of other messages I have received along the same line. Furthermore, I do not think that the board has been functioning as it should function.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the joint resolution pass?

The joint resolution was passed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 125) to continue the control of imports of dyes and coal-tar products will be taken from the calender and postponed indefinitely.

TREATY OF PEACE WITH GERMANY.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole and in open executive session, resumed the consideration of the treaty of peace with Germany.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I offer an additional reservation, which is No. 4 of the reservations which I filed and had read several days ago. I will ask the Secretary to read it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

That the United States understands and so construes the provisions of the covenant of the league of nations that when the case referred to the council or the assembly involves a dispute between one member of the league and another member whose self-governing dominions, colonies, or parts of empire are also represented in the body to which the case is referred, or involves a dispute between one member and any such dominion, colony, or part of empire, both the disputant members, including the dominion or principal country and all its said dominions, colonies, and parts of empire, are to be excluded from voting upon any phase of the dispute.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, if the Senators will turn to page 31 of the treaty of peace with Germany they will find the second amendment, known as the Moses amendment. That amendment was voted down, with the understanding that there would be a substitute or substitutes offered for it, so that we could meet the question of any country involved in a dispute having more votes than the other disputant member.

The amendment offered by the Senator from New Hampshire read as follows:

Whenever the case referred to the assembly involves a dispute between one member of the league and another member whose self-governing dominions or colonies or parts of empire are also represented in the assembly, neither the disputant members nor any of their said dominions, colonies, or parts of empire shall have a vote upon any phase of the question.

Mr. President, two objections were urged against this amendment. One was that it referred to cases in the assembly only, and it was claimed that a self-governing dominion might by some possibility become a member of the council, and that the amendment would not cover the council. While I believe that no self-governing dominion which is subject to some other member of the league could obtain a place in the council, I have taken care of that contingency by making the reservation include both the council and the assembly.

Another objection was that it referred to disputes only with the parent country itself and not to disputes with any of its dominions. Applying the case to Great Britain, for instance, it was held that if we might have a dispute with Great Britain the British Empire, under the amendment, would have but the one vote, but if our dispute was with Canada or Australia, then the rule would not apply. That contingency is taken care of in the latter portion of my reservation, which provides:

Both the disputant members, including the dominion or principal country and all its said dominions, colonies, and parts of empire, are to be excluded from voting upon any phase of the dispute.

I think that covers the question better than any other suggestion that has been presented thus far, as it covers both disputes with the dominant or parent country and with any one of its self-governing dominions, possessions, or parts of empire. I do not claim that it would cover those cases where there would be a dispute between two other members outside the British Empire, where any member of the assembly could have a vote. That should be taken care of by an entirely different reservation, which will be offered; and this, I desire to say, reaches only that one feature of the case.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I think the reservation offered by the Senator from North Dakota expresses what is the real meaning of the league covenant, and I see no objection to its adoption.

Mr. McCUMBER. I think it does.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President, I offer as a substitute the matter which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment, in the nature of a substitute, will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In lieu of the words proposed to be inserted by the Senator from North Dakota, as a separate reservation, it is proposed to insert the following:

The Senate of the United States advises and consents to the ratification of said treaty with the following reservations and conditions, anything in the covenant of the league of nations and the treaty to the contrary notwithstanding:

When any member of the league has or possesses self-governing dominions or colonies or parts of empire which are also members of the league the United States shall have representatives in the council and assembly and in any labor conference or organization under the league or treaty numerically equal to the aggregate number of representatives of such member of the league and its self-governing dominions and colonies and parts of empire in such council and assembly of the league and labor conference or organization under the league or treaty; and such representatives of the United States shall have the same powers and rights as the representatives of said member and its self-governing dominions or colonies or parts of empire; and upon all matters whatsoever, except where a party to a dispute, the United States shall have votes in the council and assembly and in any labor conference or organization under the league or treaty numerically equal to the aggregate vote to which any such member of the league and its self-governing dominions and colonies and parts of empire are entitled.

Whenever a case referred to the council or assembly involves a dispute between the United States and another member of the league whose self-governing dominions or colonies or parts of empire are also represented in the council or assembly, or between the United States and any dominion, colony, or part of any other member of the league, neither the disputant members nor any of their said dominions, colonies, or parts of empire shall have a vote upon any phase of the question.

Whenever the United States is a party to a dispute which is referred to the council or assembly, and can not, because a party, vote upon such dispute, any other member of the council or assembly having self-governing dominions or colonies or parts of empire also members, upon such dispute to which the United States is a party or upon any phase of the question, shall have and cast for itself and its self-governing dominions and colonies and parts of empire, all together, but one vote.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President, the substitute which I offer speaks for itself. It is the third attempt which I have made in this body to obtain equal representation and equal voting power for our country with Great Britain. There is yet another opportunity to present the question, I presume; and I conceive it to be my duty, feeling as I do, and feeling as I do in respect to the disproportionate voting power and disproportionate representation which we are about to give as Americans to Great Britain, whenever occasion shall arise hereafter, and whenever the opportunity shall be presented, to present again to the Senate exactly this reservation and again have the subject matter determined.

I seek by this reservation not to correct one evil arising out of the voting power under the league of nations, but to correct all of the evils which arise from giving Britain six times the voting power which is accorded to the United States under the league of nations. It has been my fond hope—shattered, it is true, in the presentations which heretofore have been made—that the Senate would respond to an effort made here to give to our country the same representation as Great Britain in this league. But whether that hope has been shattered in the days that are past, or whether it may be shattered in the day or two to come upon this discussion, I am going to continue in my effort to obtain what I think is justice to our country, and to remedy what I think is an injustice to our Republic.

I listened yesterday to the very delightful presentation made by the Senator from Massachusetts upon the question of a Nation's honor. I confess it touched me, and it affected me, Mr. President. I do not, of course, claim to have any more or any other or any greater patriotic activities or patriotic inclinations, predilections, or feelings than any other man in this body; but the Lord has made all of us in different mold, Mr. President, some of us perhaps emotional, some of us perhaps seeing awry in our desire to protect our country, some of us without the true vision in regard to this league of nations, which, as the map we have just witnessed demonstrates, gives to another country an overwhelming and an overweening power in this league. But seeing with that vision awry, seeing it as the Lord has given us to see, looking at this situation that confronts us as the poor faculties that we have enable us to look at it, there are some of us who think that the United States Senate ought to be engaged to-day not in doing what Lloyd-George said yesterday was the first duty of Great Britain to protect her own, but in protecting our own here in this land; and the object of this reservation I present to the Senate now is that all of those gentlemen who have been so earnest in saying to us that they want to remedy the wrong that has been done, but that they could not do it by amendment, may by reservation now remedy the wrong about which they have spoken in the past, and that they may have the opportunity by a reservation to justify not only their faith in their Nation, but their pride and their patriotism in their Nation.

I heard the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX] yesterday describe a treaty which he negotiated with England, a treaty wherein there were three representatives of Great Britain. How many of America? Three. Ah, Mr. President, the Senator from Pennsylvania was forgetful of that which we have learned in the last few days and the last few months in this assembly and his temerity ran riot. When he negotiated a treaty with Great Britain he dared take equal representation for his country with that powerful Empire! But, Mr. President, if at the time he negotiated that treaty he had come into the Senate of the United States and had said "I have negotiated this treaty, which shall determine certain questions with Great Britain, and in negotiating this treaty, my fellows, I have given to Great Britain six votes, to our country one vote," I suspect that there would not have been the halting hesitancy and the timid fear on the part of the Senate we now witness, but the United States Senate then would have said to him, "On what theory, sir, do you give to Great Britain, in determining questions which shall arise between Great Britain and this country, six times the power and six times the representation that you give to this country?" And I suspect, Mr. President, that if that had been done in the time that the Senator from Pennsylvania negotiated that treaty with Great Britain the Senate of the United States as one man would have risen and said, "Who is it on this earth that dares to say the United States of America is inferior and subordinate to any power and shall be granted, when it enters into a partnership or a treaty with any other power, only a sixth of the representation and a sixth of the voting power?" I suspect, Mr. President, that would have been the answer of the Senate of the United States in those days when the Senator from Pennsylvania negotiated his treaty with Great Britain.

To-day, Mr. President, we have fallen upon parlous times. To-day, Mr. President, although the words of Lloyd-George are echoing around the world even now, "Our first concern is our own," it is not, as it was in those days gone by, a matter of pride and of patriotism, a matter indeed to call for eulogy and encomium, to demand for our country equal voting power and equal representation; but to-day bow your heads, bend your backs; Great Britain, 6 votes in the league of nations; the United States, 1 vote in the league of nations. To-day the British Empire in the league of nations, 6 representatives, 18 representatives under one part of the covenant; the United States, 1 representative, or 3 representatives under a part of the covenant.

Under the labor provisions of that document the United States has 4 representatives, the Empire of Great Britain 24 representatives.

When, my friends, did we become so poor a nation that we were entitled to only one-sixth of the representation or the voting power of any nation on the face of the earth?

Oh, you may vote it down here if you will. You may say, if you want, as you have said heretofore, that Great Britain shall have six representatives and we have one; that Great Britain is entitled in our world partnership to six times the votes that we have and six times the representation. Say it if you will! I dare say to you that outside of this Chamber there are no Americans who say it, and, saving a very few, the only men in all this land to-day who insist that Great Britain shall have six times the power, six times the votes, and six times the representation of the United States of America are the Members of the United States Senate.

They may be right. They may, with a wider vision, see the greater power of Great Britain. They may, in an emotional internationalism, be perfectly clear that Great Britain in the league of nations should have six times our voting power and six times our representation. I admit they may be wholly right. But God has not given it to me to see that way. This yet is my country, and so far as my vote will permit it my country will never be inferior or subordinate to any other country on the face of the earth, whether it is Great Britain or whether it is any other power.

I know the time for appeal has passed. I realize that no argument that I might make would have the slightest effect upon this reservation. I realize that aught I might say concerning this disproportionate voting power and this disproportionate representation will fall doubtless upon deaf ears. But now, when the opportunity comes, to-morrow if it comes again, the next day, the next year, the next decade, whenever it comes, as I see this, I shall insist and demand that the United States of America stands on an equality with even Great Britain and shall have equal power with any nation.

Mr. TOWNSEND. May I ask the Senator a question in my time? I am in such hearty sympathy with the sentiments of the Senator from California that I am wondering if I understand the last paragraph of the Senator's reservation. I understand that he has never presented it before in that form?

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Not in that form. That is correct.

Mr. TOWNSEND. It provides, as I understand it, that whenever the United States has a dispute, any other country having self-governing colonies shall have but one vote.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Yes.

Mr. TOWNSEND. The Senator also provides, in the first part of his reservation, that the United States under all circumstances shall have as many votes on all questions as any other country. Would it not be possible under that last paragraph, where Great Britain, for instance, had a dispute to which the United States was not a party, for the United States to vote just as many votes as Great Britain would have had if she had not been a party?

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Do you mean if the United States is a party?

Mr. TOWNSEND. No; where the United States is not a party.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. We would have exactly the same votes that Great Britain would have under similar circumstances, neither having the right to vote in matters where they are disputants.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I have not made myself clear, I think.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Perhaps I did not follow the Senator.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Suppose Great Britain has six votes, the Senator provides that the United States shall have six votes.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Yes.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Where the United States is a party to a dispute and Great Britain is not, the Senator from California provides that Great Britain shall have but one vote.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Yes.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Suppose Great Britain is a party to the dispute but the United States it not, do you not permit the United States to have six votes?

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I think not.

Mr. TOWNSEND. It seems to me that is the clear meaning of the reservation.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. No; that is not the purpose. The purpose is to give us equal representation under similar circumstances.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I feel that that was the purpose, but I am afraid that the last paragraph does not mean that. That is new, and I have not seen it before.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. The last paragraph was drawn for the purpose of eliminating the possibility of Great Britain, in a matter where we had a dispute, casting six votes.

Mr. TOWNSEND. But the Senator wanted to give Great Britain the same advantage the United States would have if the circumstances were reversed?

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Yes.

Mr. TOWNSEND. The Senator did not want the United States to have six votes in case Great Britain was a party.

Mr. KNOX. From my reading of the reservation I should say it means that if Great Britain is a party to a dispute with another nation——

Mr. TOWNSEND. Not the United States.

Mr. KNOX. No; another nation, not the United States, the United States has six votes. If the United States has a dispute with another nation, and not Great Britain, Great Britain has six votes. So they are exactly on a parity.

Mr. TOWNSEND. That is exactly what it does not say. It says they shall have one vote. If the Senator will read the last line of the last paragraph, he will see that is exactly what it amounts to. The United States can have six votes in a dispute to which it is not a party but to which Great Britain is a party, but Great Britain can have but one vote in a case where the United States is one of the disputants and Great Britain is not. I could not believe the Senator wanted to have it that way.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. No; I do not think it is capable of that construction.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, if all the Senator stated with reference to the voting power of Great Britain were true, to which I do not agree, nevertheless the reservation which I have offered covers every possible dispute in which Great Britain is a party, whether it is a dispute with us or with anyone else, and she can have but one vote under this reservation.

In the other feature of the case, namely, where there would be a dispute between, say, Spain and Bulgaria, there is another reservation that is going to be offered under which the United States will not assume any obligation if Great Britain and all her dependencies exercise the right to cast more than one vote. So we cover it from every standpoint and protect not only the United States but protect every other country; whereas under the reservation offered by the Senator from California each of the other nations would, of course, demand an equal 6 votes; and if there were 40 of them there would be 240 votes to be cast. I think we will meet this question fairly, in a way that will meet every objection that has been made by the Senator from California, and at the same time we will not kick Canada or Australia out of the league of nations.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. We specifically do not kick Canada or the colonies of Great Britain out of the league by this reservation. We preserve our rights. In the reservation which has been offered by the Senator from North Dakota he never touches the question of representation at all, which is one of the important questions to be touched by any reservation in reference to the voting power or membership in the league. When the Senator says that we kick these colonies out of the league, he is utterly and absolutely in error, because we do nothing of the sort. Under the reservation we simply give equal representation to our country with the Empire of Great Britain; and I can not say that often enough.

Mr. COLT. Mr. President, what I have said before upon the former amendment of the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] I simply wish to repeat in a word, as it applies equally to his present reservation. Agreeing with all that the Senator has said on the question of inequality, this reservation, it seems to me, is absolutely impracticable and nonenforceable. There are 27 nations who have joined in this treaty. Great Britain has six votes, with her self-governing colonies and dominions. Under the Johnson reservation we have six votes. That leaves 25 nations with one vote each. Our instrument of ratification has to be submitted to all of these powers. We must view this covenant from the standpoint of an association of nations, not from the standpoint of Great Britain and the United States alone. It is inconceivable that the other great powers—France, Italy, Japan, and other nations—will enter into any covenant in which the United States has six votes, without any self-governing colonies or dominions. To my mind it means the destruction of the treaty and its nonacceptance by the other powers, because the other powers will never accept this reservation. It is impossible to apply this reservation to the covenant as it is now written without changing it in all of its parts, changing it fundamentally, from membership voting to some other kind of voting.

Therefore, I hold that this reservation practically is an impossible proposition—and we have to look at the proposition from that standpoint—because it will never be accepted by the other nations and could not be applied to the present covenant.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, continuing the remarks of the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT], the other nations will accept the league if Great Britain has six votes; but if the United States ventures to claim six votes the other nations will reject the league. Hence the United States must waive its rights in the interest of Great Britain and go into the league with its hands tied and with Great Britain the dominant power. And this we must do because if we do otherwise we might have to change the instrument or even send it back for ratification. The importance of having——

Mr. COLT. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. REED. In a moment. The importance of having this instrument is so much greater than the importance of the interests of the United States that we must sacrifice our country upon the altar of this treacherous scheme.

Mr. COLT. Mr. President, I intended to say, before I sat down, that I believe this inequality can only be cured by the reservation which has been offered by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT], the terms of which we all know.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I want to point in just a word to the great group of questions that are not covered by the reservation offered by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER], and I do not know that they are covered fully even by the reservation offered by the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON], but of that I am not certain.

The reservation offered by the Senator from North Dakota provides that in case of a dispute, when the case is referred to the council or the assembly, and the dispute is between one member of the league and another member whose self-governing dominions, colonies, and so forth—> are also represented in the body to which the case is referred, or involves a dispute between one member and any such dominion, colony, or part of empire, both the disputant members, including the dominion or principal country and all its said dominions, colonies, and parts of empire are to be excluded from voting upon any phase of the dispute.

As I understand that, it means that in case Great Britain is a party to a dispute, all of her dominions shall be excluded from voting in that dispute. That is the meaning, in a word, if I get it. If I am wrong, I wish the Senator would correct me.

Mr. McCUMBER. That is half the meaning.

Mr. REED. What is the other half?

Mr. McCUMBER. The other half is that if there is a dispute with any one of the colonies, it is a dispute with all.

Mr. REED. Let us see where that leads us.

Mr. McCUMBER. I stated that the other question of a dispute between nations, in which neither Great Britain nor any of her colonies is a party, is to be covered by a separate reservation.

Mr. REED. But that leaves us—if there be 10,000 disputes and Great Britain and her colonies are a party to only one dispute the rule would apply in that one dispute and her colonies could not vote in case Great Britain was concerned and Great Britain could not vote nor any of the colonies in case one of the colonies was concerned. But so far as this rule is concerned, in all other disputes all of the colonies would be represented and the Empire would be represented. The Senator says he proposes another reservation covering disputes between other nations. I have not seen that reservation, and while my time is very precious, I wish the Senator would refer me to it.

Mr. McCUMBER. It is the last one on page 4 of my proposed reservations, commencing with line 11.

Mr. JONES of Washington. If the Senator from Missouri will permit me, I will read it in my own time for him.

Mr. REED. Very well. I will sit down and yield the floor, if I can do that, and allow the Senator to read it.

Mr. JONES of Washington. It is No. 9, presented by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] as an amendment to the reservation intended to be proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT]. Substitute for the said proposed amendment the following:

> The United States reserves the right, upon the submission of any dispute to the council or the assembly, to object to any member and its self-governing dominions, dependencies, or possessions having in the aggregate more than one vote; and in case such objection is made the United States assumes no obligation to be bound by any election, finding, or decision in which such member and its said dominions, dependencies, and possessions have in the aggregate cast more than one vote.

Mr. REED. I thank the Senator. That reserves to us a right of objection, I think. I have heard the words for the first time, and my opinion is very hastily formed.

Now, what are you going to do with this sort of a case? We have a question come up that does not involve a dispute at all between two nations, but involves, first, an election of four new members of the council. When that election comes on the United States is interested in the election of certain members of the council and Great Britain is interested in electing certain other members of the council. Great Britain in that election will cast 6 votes against the single vote of the United States, and where is the man to say that is covered by these reservations? Yet that goes to the very organization of the body that is to control the world. That is one illustration; but, sir, there will come up a multitude of questions.

Suppose this body shall undertake now to settle the question of what are to be the ultimate destinies of this territory that has recently been taken over under mandatory? Suppose that it involves the whole east coast of Africa that Great Britain has recently taken? That is not a dispute between nations within the meaning of the reservation. When that question comes up for consideration the United States may believe that those countries should be permitted to set up a government of their own, or may believe that the mandate should be extended or that it should be limited. Great Britain may desire them for herself or may advocate any other policy contrary to the policy and wish of the United States. In that question, which involves a tremendous stretch of territory and may concern trade relations of a most vital character, Great Britain casts her 6 votes and the United States casts her 1 vote.

Again, the islands of the sea have been taken over and will ultimately become the controlling factors, first in the trade of the world and finally in the dominance of the seas in time of war. That question may come up for settlement. It is not a dispute between two nations within the meaning of this reservation. It is a question of world diplomacy and it concerns a matter that is within the authority and jurisdiction of the league by express language. Great Britain desires to obtain dominance and control over certain of those islands and to establish policies which will be beneficial to her. The United States has a view that is favorable to our country or more favorable to the world. When that question comes up Great Britain casts her 6 votes and the United States casts 1 vote.

Mr. President, you can not cure this by any such reservation. The reservation is a benefit as far as it goes, but it does not go far enough. It is mincing at a thing and we are playing mice beneath the great table of Great Britain, crawling about and trying to save a crumb here and a crumb there, instead of rising in the spirit of the past and demanding that we shall travel the highway of the future the equal of any other nation.

I should like to discuss this question, but time forbids. Enough is said when I conclude my remarks with the assertion that many prominent English statesmen and many prominent English publicists have admitted the injustice of Great Britain's position and have admitted that the States of the United States, the great States, might as well ask representation for themselves as Great Britain for her colonies, and with those admissions, and with the admission of one of the foremost English publicists, that the construction which I stated upon this treaty some months ago is correct and that it ought to be rectified in the interest of justice, we find the United States Senate still sitting here and, instead of adopting a drastic reservation as we were promised would be adopted when the amendment was defeated and defeated upon the express ground that a drastic reservation would be adopted, I am afraid that there will be an attempt to defeat the reservation of the Senator from California which does go far toward rectifying the evil.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President, I can very well understand an honest, legitimate, and conscientious difference of opinion upon almost any other feature of the treaty than the one that is raised by the reservation offered by the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON.] I am constrained to put my observations in the shortest space possible, because I want to reserve some time to discuss a reservation that I have myself offered. I think that the least important things that this reservation touches are contentious questions between the United States and Great Britain—or between the United States and any other power, for that matter—for, so far as disputes between the United States and Great Britain are concerned, neither the United States nor Great Britain, under the terms of this reservation, will be entitled to a vote.

But when you recall that the league of nations has jurisdiction over the earth and over all questions that affect the peace and welfare of the earth, you can imagine thousands of questions of a noncontentious character the policy involved in which may be of vital consequence to the United States; and the impropriety of having her sitting bound, with only 1 vote, with the greatest empire outside of ourselves with 6 votes, you are conceding a proposition that to me it seems impossible for any patriotic American citizen to consider with patience.

We do not have to be parties to a dispute to be vitally interested in that dispute. The principle that is involved may affect us more immediately, more directly, and more completely than the actual parties to what I might call the litigation. So I consider the great virtue of this reservation is that in questions of that character—and there will be hundreds of them where there are single ones of actual dispute between nations—it takes care of the interests, the rights, and the dignity of the United States.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, I have but a few minutes' time left of my allotment, and I would have preferred to have heard the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT]. However, I desire to say that my inclination has been to support the league of nations covenant; but I have long come to the conclusion that it will be necessary in this particular matter to vote for a reservation. I looked with favor upon the reservation proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin until he stated in an address the other day that it did not cover the ground, and that therefore he was obliged to support the reservation proposed by the junior Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON]. On investigating, then, the defect of the Lenroot amendment, which the Senator from Wisconsin himself can explain, I came to the conclusion that it would be necessary to support the amendment proposed by my colleague.

There is not only a question here of power, which has been ably discussed by Senators, but there is a question of prestige. Great Britain and the United States are commercial rivals, and I can well understand the smaller nations of the world, say, of South America, looking with awe and reverence and possibly giving preference in trade to the nation which in the assembly of the league would have six votes with which to assist them in any dispute in which they might be engaged. We can not afford to allow the prestige of the United States to fall in the eyes of the smaller nations of the world. So it is not only a question of power but it is a question of prestige.

I was also disposed to believe that Canada and Australia and New Zealand would be helpful to us in the settlement of many Pacific problems, and therefore I am glad that they are allowed to remain in the league under the amendment proposed by my colleague, and are not eliminated. That reservation simply provides that the United States shall have an equal number of votes with Great Britain. I would have much preferred to have seen Great Britain as an empire voting as a unit, consulting with her colonies, members of the league, to determine by such conference the manner in which the one vote of Great Britain and her colonies should be cast, but that is impracticable now, because it would involve an amendment. I say I looked with favor upon taking Australia and Canada and New Zealand into the league, because I thought they better understood our Pacific problems, if you please, than did the mother country. However, I have here a letter which shows a certain degree of bias, which is new to me, from the leading publicist of Australia, which was furnished to me in a private letter from a gentleman high in authority in the State of California, and therefore I do not give the name of the publicist. He says:

> The anti-American feeling is almost as bad here now as it was during the war. I think that the trouble lies in the fact that we are afraid of America commercially and financially and show it in the stupid manner usual to crowds. I now believe that the only thing likely to make Australians regard America with friendly eyes is trouble with Japan. This seems to me to be getting nearer and people here believe it also. They imagine though that it will be possible for Australia to remain neutral in a struggle between Japan and the United States, and rather welcome it, hoping that thereby both will be weakened and Great Britain will as a result win back the commercial and financial supremacy of the world. Imagine such hopes when the Asiatics are at our very doors!

That is merely a straw, though it comes from eminent authority, but it shows that the colonies will ally themselves with the mother country in seeking to recover the trade of the world; and it is only natural. Therefore we should not give them greater voting power; we should not facilitate them in destroying the American supremacy. It will be utterly idle and foolish to do so. As the Premier of Great Britain truly said yesterday, and which we all appreciate, a man's first duty is to his own country.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President, I shall detain the Senate but a moment. In a sentence I wish to answer, if I can, the distinguished Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT].

The objection of the Senator from Rhode Island to this reservation is that it is impracticable. It is impracticable, Mr. President, to give the United States six votes or six representatives, but it is entirely practicable to give Great Britain six votes or six representatives. It would be a terrible thing—oh, we can all see the evil consequences—if we, as well as Great Britain, had six votes and six representatives.

Then, again, for another reason, the Senator says it is impracticable. "Think of the other nations involved!" he exclaims. I heard it said here the other day in the Senate that it was an insult to France and to Japan and to Italy and to Spain for the United States to ask six votes or six representatives in the league of nations. That statement was made on the floor of the United States Senate. The argument of the Senator from Rhode Island is on a parity with it—that it is an insult to France and to Italy and to Japan for the United States to ask six votes. Good God, does not an American ever think that it is an insult to America to give Great Britain six votes and the United States but one? If we take six votes we insult France and Italy and Japan, it is asserted. If Great Britain takes six votes it is an honor we should appreciate!

Mr. President, as earnestly as I can, let me say to my brethren upon the other side that there is going to be adopted a reservation upon this question. That goes without saying, my friends. Therefore I ask you what kind of a reservation do you want? Do you want a reservation that does not give you equal voting power and equal representation; that has in it all the ills that are at present existent in the covenant; or do you want equal voting power and equal representation? There is going to be, I repeat—and I think I do not speak inadvisedly in prophesy—a reservation adopted. Now, what will you have? The question we are up against is just this—and I put it to you gentlemen on the other side—do you believe your country should have equal voting power and equal representation with Great Britain? No existing reservation preserves either equal voting power or gives equal representation to the United States. They may protect you subsequently by saying that ultimately you may repudiate the action; but the action will have been taken at the time of your repudiation, and it will have been taken by six representatives of Great Britain and one of ours. So I say, as the last word, the question is, Do you believe that your country should have the same voting power and the same representation as the Empire of Great Britain?

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, as I understand the parliamentary situation, the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] has offered a reservation, for which the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] has offered a substitute. I have not the time to discuss, nor do I think it is necessary to discuss, the subject matter in detail; it has been discussed heretofore, and we all understand it well, but the reservation of the Senator from North Dakota does not touch the vitals of this question at all. It only applies where there is a dispute submitted to the council. It reads:

The United States reserves the right, upon the submission of any dispute to the council or the assembly, to object to any member and its self-governing dominions, dependencies, or possessions having in the aggregate more than one vote, and in case such objection is made the United States assumes no obligation to be bound by any election, finding, or decision in which such member and its said dominions, dependencies, and possessions have in the aggregate cast more than one vote.

Mr. President, the most vital and important things which will be achieved under the league, if it is brought into existence, will not be in the way of settling disputes at all. Very few disputes will ever be submitted to the council; they will be settled before they rise to the dignity of being disputes, and especially will that be true if Great Britain is permitted to control the council and to control the assembly. A question will never arise to the dignity of a dispute if those who are in absolute control may shape the policies before the time for a dispute arises. For that reason this reservation does not touch the most important part of this question at all.

"The council shall consist of representatives of the" United States of America, of the British Empire, of France, of Italy, and of Japan, "together with representatives of four other members of the league. These four members of the league shall be elected by the assembly from time to time in its discretion."

The assembly elects the additional members of the league, and in the assembly, notwithstanding the reservation of the Senator from North Dakota, the 6 votes of Great Britain will remain and remain uncontrolled and undirected, and the power which will direct the governing body of this league will have in it a representation composed of one member from the United States and six from Great Britain. The Senator from North Dakota does not propose to change that at all. If you give the assembly control of the membership, the power to select and to elect the members of the council or the members who may constitute the council, it will be of very little service to the United States to have a reservation to the effect that disputes shall be protected by equal votes.

Furthermore, Mr. President, it will be observed that this is one of the clauses in which less than unanimous consent is necessary in order to elect. I also call attention to article 5, which provides:

All matters of procedure at meetings of the assembly or of the council, including the appointment of committees to investigate particular matters, shall be regulated by the assembly or by the council—and may be decided by a majority of the members of the league represented at the meeting.

By the body of delegates or by the executive council—

The Senator from North Dakota does not propose to remedy that; and yet the appointment, under article 5, of the investigating committees which will take up and consider and present either to the council or the assembly or to the world the vital questions coming before this body or any different bodies of the league may be controlled and directed by a mere majority vote, and of that majority Great Britain will have six and the United States one.

The fountain source of authority the Senator from North Dakota does not touch. He leaves Great Britain to direct the affairs of the league as completely with the reservation as she would without the reservation.

Mr. MCCUMBER. Mr. President, I think it fair to the Senate and to the Senator to say that the reservation which he read was not the reservation which I have offered at all.

Mr. BORAH. The reservation I read is the reservation which is in the printed leaflet as offered by the Senator from North Dakota. Has the Senator his reservation there?

Mr. MCCUMBER. It is a different one.

Mr. BORAH. Let me have it as it has been presented. I will read it, but I apprehend that it has not been improved in respect to matters of which I have spoken. [Reading:]

That the United States understands and so construes the provisions of the covenant of the league of nations that when the case referred to the council or the assembly involves a dispute between one member of the league and another member whose self-governing dominions, colonies, or parts of empire are also represented in the body to which the case is referred, or involves a dispute between one member and any such dominion, colony, or part of empire, both the disputant members, including the dominion or principal country and all its said dominions, colonies, and parts of empire, are to be excluded from voting upon any phase of the dispute.

That does not change the proposition one particle. The Senator's reservation depends for its life entirely upon the question of there being a dispute. He does not touch the question of electing the membership, of controlling the membership, either of the assembly or of the council or of the league. He leaves Great Britain absolutely to control both these bodies as completely as he did under the reservation which he first offered. Upon the point I make there is no difference in the two reservations in the practical working.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, the difficulty of the pending proposition is that it is not a reservation at all. It is an amendment. The distinguished Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] seems to be of the opinion that an amendment may be transformed into a reservation by changing its title; but the Senator from California about 10 days ago, when this same matter was up, made the statement that full equality between the British Empire and the United States could not be insured by any reservation, and he was correct, and that was why I voted for his amendment, because it did cover some things that could not be covered by any reservation. While this is denominated a "reservation," it is really an amendment; and I do not propose to inject into the series of reservations what is really an amendment, especially as the Senator from California will have another opportunity, when we go from the Committee of the Whole into the Senate, to offer this very proposition as an amendment.

I am sure that the distinction between reservations and amendments must be clear to the Senate. An amendment may have the effect of a reservation. Illustrative of that are most of what are known as the Fall amendments, the effect of which was wholly as reservations, because they merely took the United States out of that portion of the treaty. An illustration of an amendment was, for instance, inserting the word "China" for "Japan." Does the Senator from California say that we could properly accomplish by a reservation the transference of Shantung from Japan to China?

This so-called reservation is not a reservation at all, but is an amendment, because it increases the number of votes that the United States shall have under the treaty; it changes the terms of the treaty; it affects all of the parties to the treaty; while a reservation merely amounts to a ratification in part, and says that the United States by reservation does not agree to this part or that part or the other part of the treaty. No reservation, however, can properly in any way affect the terms of the treaty so far as granting to the United States additional rights is concerned or changing the rights of the parties. So that this so-called reservation has no business here, because it is not a reservation; and the Senator will have an opportunity before the day is over, I hope, to offer this very proposition as an amendment, where it belongs.

Upon the merits of the matter I am not going to say any more than this: I stated the other day that the Senator's amendment did cover some things that my reservation did not, and that, in my judgment, no reservation could cover, and also that it did not cover some things of the most vital interest to the United States that the reservation did cover. The pending amendment, denominated a reservation, does protect the United States, if adopted, in two classes of disputes, but it still leaves the United States unprotected in a third class of disputes. It protects the United States where the United States and the British Empire are parties; it protects the United States where the United States is a party to a dispute with some nation other than the British Empire, although, as the Senator from Michigan stated, even in that event it would give to the British Empire 1 vote, apparently, where the United States was a party, but would give to the United States 6 votes where the British Empire was a party. But take the case of a dispute between China and Japan, for instance, or between Bulgaria and Greece. Under this amendment of the Senator from California, the British Empire would have 6 votes, and the United States would still have 1 vote, and that defect is not cured; while the reservation that I shall offer, if this substitute is defeated, provides that—

The United States assumes no obligation to be bound by any decision, report, or finding of the council or assembly in which any member of the league and its self-governing dominions, colonies, or parts of empire in the aggregate have cast more than one vote, and assumes no obligation to be bound by any decision, report, or finding of the council or assembly arising out of any dispute between the United States and any member of the league if such member, or any self-governing dominion, colony, empire, or part of empire united with it politically has voted.

In other words, the United States will not be bound by anything done by this league of nations wherever the British Empire and all its colonies have cast in the aggregate more than one vote; nor will it be bound by anything that may be done, where we are parties to a dispute with them, where any of them have voted at all.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I shall support the reservation offered by the Senator from North Dakota. My reasons were stated at some length earlier in this discussion. I am not at all convinced that the disproportion of 6 votes to 1 will exist in this league if the treaty shall be adopted and the league become effective, as has been so frequently stated and reiterated upon this floor.

Mr. President, much of the apprehension voiced upon this floor with regard to the practical working of the league through the disproportion claimed rests upon the assumption of an irreconcilable antagonism between the interests of the British Empire and those of the United States and that such antagonism will be powerfully promoted, to our undoing, by this preponderant arrangement. In my judgment very few disputes will arise or differences obtain wherein the interests of the dominions of Great Britain or of the British Government itself will differ very materially from our own; and I am sure that as to all matters affecting the Western Hemisphere the interests and the policy of the Canadian Dominion and of New Zealand and Australia will be practically identical with ours. We can conceive of possible differences arising between the United States and some oriental power, but it is impossible to conceive that they should eventuate upon any other than issues which affect the whole Western Hemisphere in common with the Australasian Dominions. Let me add that if Great Britain were disposed to be captious she might with a consistency fully equal to our own point her finger at the fact that the United States could, if she would, control the votes of four of her own dependencies—for that is what they are—and by that means counterbalance any disproportion charged against her in the balance of the league.

Cuba is protected by the United States. Panama is an offspring of this country, and not a very creditable offspring at that. The Governments of Guatemala and Haiti rest upon the bayonets of the United States marines, whose withdrawal would be followed by their collapse. Now, I do not for a moment admit that the United States would even indirectly seek to utilize the influence that it thus possesses; but I can well understand how in this conflict between the nations the charge could be made, and justly made, that here, too, is a potential disproportion, the balance swinging in favor of the United States and against the other members of the league. If the Government of the United States or that of any of the other allied and associated powers were possessed of independent dominions, like those owing allegiance to the British Crown, there is no question but that the same representation would be given them. But, Mr. President, England is the only colonizing country so mindful of her own welfare and that of her dependencies as to give them that independent status which requires all nations to recognize their status as independent communities.

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a single question?

Mr. THOMAS. I would yield if I had the time, but under the circumstances I am obliged to decline.

Much has been said here, too, about England's supremacy upon the seas. She has it, and it is well for civilization in the recent crisis which it has confronted that she had and maintained that supremacy, for without the British fleet we to-day might be subject to the German Empire, and surely without it the Allies could not have held out against the fearful power of Germany until America came to the rescue and finally determined the struggle. In these times when we are so critical of our associates we should scarcely overlook the tremendous services to civilization and to the world which the great Empire of Great Britain furnished in that supreme moment of the world's history, when the liberties of mankind were trembling in the balance.

Nor should we overlook the equally important fact that the British fleet was for years the chief bulwark of the Monroe doctrine. England's approval of that policy was manifest at its announcement, through the period of its struggling growth toward adolescence, and in the days of its full fruition. She sometimes disregarded it when her own affairs were involved, which I do not defend, but she never challenged our right to exercise it.

Mr. President, let me say, before I resume my seat, that my experience in this open executive session has cured me completely of my former advocacy of them while considering treaties, for we have upon this floor openly and frequently spoken in terms of contempt and bitter criticism, sometimes of denunciation, of nearly all of the other great countries of the world; so flagrantly, Mr. President, that if conditions were reversed and the same practice had manifested itself toward us upon the floor of the House of Commons, or in the French Chamber of Deputies, or in the Japanese Parliament, this body would have been the first to have denounced and resented it.

Such conduct, Mr. President, is not becoming in a dignified body like this. It partakes little of that consideration which great and friendly nations should manifest toward each other. No good can come from it; much injury may result. It would have been far better, in my judgment, had our consideration of the treaty been behind closed doors. Our fathers were far wiser than we sometimes think. The safeguards which they erected for the due operation of the machinery of representative government are the best that could have been devised. Experience has nearly always demonstrated their efficiency, and we can not depart from them with safety or decorum.

I shall vote, Mr. President, for the reservation offered by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER]. It covers the situation fully, furnishes ample protection against any possible emergency that may arise, offends no one, and meets every contingency which may overtake the operation of the league.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President, I can not permit to remain unchallenged the remarks of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT]. He is wholly in error in his conception of the possibilities or the extent of the reservation which I have offered. He insisted that it did not cover a particular case that he related.

I will not go into details now because of the lack of time and opportunity. But I call to the attention of those who are interested in it, first, that in the very beginning of this reservation it contains the clause "anything in the covenant of the league of nations and the treaty to the contrary notwithstanding," and then follows our right to equal representation and voting power. Then, upon the second page, it provides as well:

Except when a party to a dispute, the United States shall have votes in the council and the assembly and in any labor conference or organization under the league or treaty numerically equal to the aggregate vote to which any such member of the league and its self-governing dominions and colonies or parts of empire are entitled.

Thus answering completely what was said by the Senator from Wisconsin concerning its ineffectiveness in the case that he illustrated.

I am not wholly able to understand the position of the Senator from Wisconsin. Perhaps that is a matter entirely of indifference. He made two speeches against two amendments that I offered, and he voted for the amendment in each instance. If I were able to construe the speech he has just made in opposition to the reservation and his vote were to be the same, I would not have any quarrel with him, nor would I, indeed, say aught more concerning it, because, after all, I take it that the vote that a Senator casts is the controlling factor and is the thing which is to be most desired in the case of an amendment so important as is this particular amendment.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, evidently the distinguished Senator from California, after he concluded his speech the other day, did me the honor of listening only to a very small portion of mine. Of that I do not complain. Therefore the Senator from California did not understand the argument that I made at that time, showing wherein the United States was not protected in the respect that he insisted it was protected, and also showing wherein his amendment did give the United States a voting power where reservations could not—and I plainly stated that I voted for it because of that fact—and I am surprised that the Senator from California should get up now, without either hearing the speech or reading it—and he could not have done either to have made the statement that he did—and make the statement that he has just now made.

I have been perfectly consistent, Mr. President, in voting for his amendment, and perfectly consistent in showing—as, I think, I showed to the satisfaction of the Senate—that his amendment did not protect the United States in important particulars. As a corroboration of that, since that speech was made the Senator from California himself has changed his amendment to meet one of the objections that I then made.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Is the Senator for or against the reservation now?

Mr. LENROOT. I am against this reservation; but I want to say to the Senator that if he will offer it in the Senate again, I will vote for it as an amendment, as I did before. But I do not propose with my vote to inject amendments into reservations, because they are not reservations.

Now, I want to say another word. The Senator from California asserts that I was entirely mistaken when I said that in one class of cases his amendment would not protect the United States. He read me the amendment wherein the United States is to have a vote equal to that of any other member having self-governing colonies. Does the Senator from California insist, then, that where the United States is a party to the dispute it shall vote?

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Of course not.

Mr. LENROOT. Of course not.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. The Senator from Wisconsin knows that full well. I have said it again and again and again and again.

Mr. LENROOT. Very well. But a little later, where the treaty says that the United States shall not vote because it is not one of the "other members of the league," the Senator from California then insists that we will vote.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Because we specifically provide in this reservation that we shall vote.

Mr. LENROOT. Only where we had a vote, because otherwise the Senator from California must have the United States voting where it is a party to the dispute.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. By no means. We are given the right to vote when not a party to the dispute, exactly as Great Britain is given the right to vote.

Mr. LENROOT. I am sorry the Senator from California can not see what I am sure every other Senator must see, that we are given an equal number of votes with Great Britain only where we are entitled to vote. Does the Senator concede that?

Mr. JOHNSON of California. The reservation gives us the right——

Mr. LENROOT. Does the Senator concede that?

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Oh, no, no.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I am speaking now in my own time——

Mr. JOHNSON of California. If the Senator is going to ask questions of me in his own way, he is going to get answers in my way.

Mr. LENROOT. Very well. I asked the Senator a courteous question. He may reply or not, as he chooses. The Senator must take the position either that the United States has a vote when it is a party to the dispute or it has no vote whenever the treaty says it shall have no vote. Which is the correct construction? In that case the United States has only 1 vote as a member of the council in the case of a dispute between Bulgaria and Greece.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President, I can only reiterate that under the terms of the reservation that is absolutely without foundation. The difficulty with the Senator is that—

> He could distinguish and divide
> A hair 'twixt south and southwest side—and he has been indulging in that kind of argument.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. Is it in order to divide a reservation, if the question is divisible?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks that if it is a divisible question, it can be divided.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I am so much in favor of the principles outlined by the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] that I wish to vote for the first part of his reservation; but I am satisfied that the last eight lines present a situation which is absolutely untenable. What we are trying to do is to put the United States on an equality with the most favored nation in the league. I think his reservation does that generally. But the last paragraph makes a provision whereby the United States will have a preference and an advantage over the most favored nation in the league under certain circumstances; that is, where the United States is a party and Great Britain is not, Great Britain has but 1 vote. But reverse it; if Great Britain is a party and the United States is not, then the United States may have 6 votes.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. No; it says the same number.

Mr. TOWNSEND. The same number as Great Britain is 6 votes. In order that we may vote for the first part of this reservation, I am asking for a vote on all the reservation except the last paragraph.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I referred a moment ago to a letter of a distinguished Englishman. I have it now, and I would like to read an extract from it. This is a copy of the letter. The name of the author of the letter is withheld, but it is sent to me in a letter by Judge John D. Lawson, formerly a Canadian, who was for many years the dean of the Missouri State University Law School, and who is a distinguished author of textbooks on various branches of the law. He states to me his reasons for not giving the name of the author of the letter, but says:

> The writer is a man of title, a former governor of an English colony, and an international lawyer and writer of distinction.

I now quote from that gentleman's letter:

> We in England have recognized that Canada, Australia, New Zealand, South Africa, and India are nations in partnership and not in subjection to England. I think America might do the same whilst claiming for herself 5 votes as representing the Eastern, Southern, Western, Middle Western, and the old mission States, or any other division you like to make, but don't, I entreat you, disfranchise Australia or Canada whilst giving Haiti a vote.

There is much more of the letter of great interest, in which he discusses the humiliation it would put upon Australia to be denied a vote while a vote is given to the inferior States of the world. I offer it because it shows the British view, at least the view of this one great Englishman, who recognizes the justice of America having a vote equal to the vote of the British Empire.

The other matter I want to put in is the statement of the editor of the London Daily News, which reads in part:

> Mr. Gardiner indorsed Senator REED'S contention that as the covenant is now drafted, in case of an Anglo-American dispute, Britain would be able to cast more votes than America.

In the rest of the article he admits the justice of that contention, and that the wrong ought to be rectified. I ask leave to put that in without read the entire article.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

LONDON, September 2.

Admitting that the present draft of the league of nations covenant now empowers the Empire to outvote the United States, A. G. Gardiner, editor of the London Daily News, to-day advocated an amendment stipulating expressly that when one section of Great Britain be involved in a matter, all other sections be prevented from voting.

Mr. Gardiner indorsed Senator REED'S contention that as the covenant is now drafted, in case of an Anglo-American dispute, Britain would be able to cast more votes than America.

The editor is one of the strongest of British proponents of the league of nations and has been a stanch supporter of President Wilson.

SAYS BRITAIN WOULD AGREE TO CHANGE.

"If asked to accept such an amendment I am sure the British people willingly would do so," Gardiner said. "The spirit of the covenant certainly contemplates the British Empire as a unit. But it forgets to specify this, probably because the omission never came to the attention of the peace conferees. Now that the issue has been raised, however, it will not be difficult to make the wording conform to the spirit and to eliminate America's cause for fear. Perhaps the wording could be changed without resubmitting the covenant to the nations concerned if Great Britain, as the interested party, would request the change.

"Although the intention of the conferees obviously was not to give the British Empire more votes than the United States, the text of the covenant justifies Senator REED'S assertion. He believes that in case of a dispute between the United States and one section of the Empire the other section would be sitting in judgment on the matter. Personally I think it is debatable how much the scale would be loaded. I readily understand the American concern in the matter and recognize it is a real objection which should be met; perhaps the best way would be to insert a ruling in the covenant specifically covering this exigency."

Mr. REED. So, Mr. President, I can only take a second of my time. Here is the English concession of the injustice of the position that Great Britain shall have six votes and we but one. It seems to me now that if a reservation is offered we ought to adopt the one which comes nearest giving us a complete equality.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I ask that a separate vote be had upon all the reservation except the last paragraph.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question then will be upon agreeing to the reservation offered by the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON], except the last paragraph.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I shall take only a moment to present my views on the proposed reservation. It is my opinion that Members of the Senate are almost of one mind and one purpose as far as making it plain that it is not the desire of the Senate that Great Britain and her independent colonies shall have any greater vote or any greater power in the assembly of the league of nations than the United States.

Two plans have been proposed by which we may accomplish our object of preventing Great Britain from having any such advantage—one that of the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON], in which he proposes that this Nation shall have six votes whenever Great Britain and her colonies exercise the right of casting such a number of votes. Naturally it appeals to every patriotic American who loves his country that this Nation should have the same privilege as Great Britain.

If I did not consider that this reservation was really an amendment to the text, because it prescribes entirely a new system of voting and gives different representation to this Nation, I should gladly support the reservation offered by the Senator from California. If it is an amendment to the text—and I believe it is—it would probably defeat the league of nations entirely; this I do not want to do. I think, also, that it would not be treating France, Italy, and other nations quite fairly to add an additional wrong by giving the United States six votes, the same number that Great Britain would have upon certain questions, unless they were given the same increase of votes.

Believing that this is unquestionably an amendment to the text, I propose to support the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT]. As I consider his reservation, it will absolutely protect the United States against any decision or any conclusion that may be rendered where Great Britain and her independent colonies exercise the right of more than one vote. This being true, with this kind of a reservation, the interests of the United States are absolutely safeguarded if at any time Great Britain should see proper, with her independent colonies, to act in a way detrimental and unfair to the interests of our Republic.

I prefer the reservation offered by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] to that offered by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER], because the reservation offered by the Senator from North Dakota only reaches to the extent of questions where there are disputes between the United States and Great Britain or some of her colonies. This would leave Great Britain to exercise her six votes upon a question of policy and upon other matters that may come up wherein the United States was not directly interested, and yet was interested in a general way as far as the question of policy might be concerned.

I feel that the reservation which will best protect the interests of the United States without adopting a textual amendment is the reservation offered by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT]. I propose to support his reservation and will therefore of necessity have to vote against the reservation offered by the Senator from California.

Unquestionably the treaty and the covenant of the league of nations is going to be adopted only with reservations. It is well established that the dream and the hope, if there could have been such, that it was going to be adopted without reservations has long since vanquished and is no longer even a faint hope by anyone. Therefore, if we are going to adopt, and we will adopt, some reservations, I am heartily in favor of adopting the reservation which will safeguard the American interests in all matters where Great Britain and her colonies may see proper from selfish or other reasons to cast their six votes to the detriment of our own country. I am heartily in favor of the league of nations, but do not believe in permitting America's interests to be put in peril. I am heartily in sympathy with the object and purpose of the reservation offered by Mr. LENROOT, which is as follows:

> The United States assumes no obligation to be bound by any election, decision, report, or finding of the council or assembly in which any member of the league and its self-governing dominions, colonies, or parts of empire, in the aggregate have cast more than one vote, and assumes no obligation to be bound by any decision, report, or finding of the council or assembly arising out of any dispute between the United States and any member of the league if such member, or any self-governing dominion, colony, empire, or part of empire united with it politically has voted.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, admiring as I do the high patriotic purpose of the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL] upon this vote to protect the interests and the influence of the United States in the decisions of the league of nations, I can not refrain from pointing out before the vote is taken, especially for the consideration of the Senator from Florida, that the reservation that has been proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT], which the Senator from Florida says will accomplish the purpose which he has in view of putting the United States upon an equality in the league of nations with any other power, does not have that effect and does not purport to have any such effect.

All that is provided by the reservation proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin is that in a vote in the assembly of the league of nations or in the council, where another power casts more votes than are cast by the United States, the United States shall not be bound by the decision. It does not provide that every other nation in the world is not bound by the decision. The reservation of the Senator from Wisconsin still leaves it so that in a dispute, for instance, between China and Japan, a dispute which affects the welfare of the entire world, perchance, and in which the United States and Great Britain are interested, Great Britain will cast 6 votes in the assembly and Great Britain will have 18 delegates in the assembly, whereas the United States will cast but 1 vote and have but 3 delegates.

So as to a dispute between any other two powers in the world, however great an interest the United States might have in the dispute, the United States not being a party to the dispute and Great Britain not being a party to the dispute, Great Britain will still have, in the influence which she will exert upon the politics and the diplomacy of the world, the advantage of six times as much power as the United States in the decision of the dispute.

Mr. LENROOT. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Certainly.

Mr. LENROOT. I wish to ask the Senator whether he realizes that the so-called Johnson reservation leads exactly to that same situation?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I disagree entirely with the Senator from Wisconsin in that construction of the Johnson reservation. I should like to see the last paragraph of the reservation of the Senator from California stricken out. The first section of the reservation of the Senator from California provides specifically that in the assembly and in the council the United States shall have an equal number of votes with any other power, thereby as plainly as it possibly can be done putting this country upon an equal footing with any other power.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the so-called reservation of the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] except the last paragraph.

Mr. MCCORMICK and Mr. BORAH called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. KENDRICK (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] to the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] and vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CURTIS (after having voted in the affirmative). Has the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY] voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. CURTIS. I have a pair with that Senator, and therefore withdraw my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 43, nays 46, as follows:

YEAS—43.

Ball	Gore	McLean	Sherman
Borah	Gronna	Moses	Shields
Brandegee	Harding	New	Smoot

Curtis	Fall

So the first part of the reservation of Mr. JOHNSON of California was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question now is on the concluding paragraph of the reservation of the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON].

Mr. JOHNSON of California. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. President. Does the vote now come merely upon the concluding paragraph of the reservation?

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is all.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. And not upon the entire reservation, including the concluding paragraph?

The VICE PRESIDENT. No. The reservation has been divided. Senators had a right to have it divided under the rules, and the vote now will be taken on the concluding paragraph of the reservation.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. So far as I personally have the power, I should not ask a vote upon the concluding paragraph at all.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator can withdraw it.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Then I withdraw it, with the right subsequently in the Senate again to present the entire reservation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator has that right anyway.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I shall avail myself of it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Then the reservation is withdrawn.

Mr. LENROOT. I offer the substitute for the reservation of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER], which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the substitute proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin.

The SECRETARY. In lieu of the reservation proposed by Mr. MCCUMBER it is proposed to insert the following:

The United States assumes no obligation to be bound by any decision, report, or finding of the council or assembly in which any member of the league and its self-governing dominions, colonies, or parts of empire in the aggregate have cast more than one vote, and assumes no obligation to be bound by any decision, report, or finding of the council or assembly arising out of any dispute between the United States and any member of the league if such member, or any self-governing dominion, colony, empire, or part of empire united with it politically has voted.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I discovered just about half an hour ago that there was an omission in the amendment as drawn by me of the word "election" after the word "any," and I ask unanimous consent that that word may be inserted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, if that consent is granted, I could ask that permission to correct all typographical errors of a similar sort should be granted on request.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I hope the Senator will ask that. It is only fair.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, will the Senator from Wisconsin please again state his request, so that I may understand what it is?

Mr. LENROOT. The amendment as originally drawn contained the word "election." I redrafted the amendment for another purpose, not intending to change that part, and have just discovered that the word "election" was omitted after the word "any."

The VICE PRESIDENT. In what line?

Mr. LENROOT. After the word "any," at the end of line 1.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The modification of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin will be stated by the Secretary.

The SECRETARY. At the end of line 1, after the word "any," it is proposed to insert the word "election."

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I believe I will withdraw my request, as there may be some other changes to which we might want to object. I have no objection in this case.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the modification of the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin by inserting the word "election"? The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, this reservation, if adopted, will relieve the United States of any obligation to be bound by any election, decision, report, or finding of the council or assembly in any case where any member having self-governing dominions or colonies shall have in the aggregate cast more than one vote. That is the first part of the reservation.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. LENROOT. I yield for a question.

Mr. THOMAS. Suppose that three of such votes should be upon one side and the remaining three upon the other side on the particular propositon or dispute, would the Senator's reservation cover that situation?

Mr. LENROOT. It would completely cover it. In any case where the British Empire, for instance, has cast more than one vote in the aggregate, we will not be bound by any decision in the matter.

Mr. THOMAS. Then, if three votes or more than three votes or any number of the six votes should be cast in favor of the interests of the United States in any dispute, we would still have to reject the decision?

Mr. LENROOT. We still would not be bound by it. The effect of it is simply that if the British Empire desires to have the United States bound by any action taken, it will refrain from casting in a particular instance more than one vote. That is all there is to it; and to that extent, if they wish to binds us, they can not cast more votes than we can cast.

Mr. KNOX. Is it optional upon the part of the United States under the reservation to be bound or are we simply automatically not bound?

Mr. LENROOT. We assume no obligation to be bound, and, of course, we would not be bound unless we expressly assumed the obligation later on. However, I am not going to take further time upon that part of it. I think it is very clear to every Member of the Senate that this reservation accomplishes, so far as protecting the United States is concerned, the full purpose of equality of voting however it may have been proposed.

The last part of the reservation takes care of the proposition of the pending reservation of the Senator from North Dakota providing that in no case where we are a party to a dispute involving any member of the British Empire shall we be bound by the decision if any members of the British Empire have voted at all.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, is the Senator's reservation in effect an amendment involving a change of the treaty?

Mr. LENROOT. It is not in the slightest degree; it merely withholds our consent or ratification to that part of the treaty which could bind us; that is all. We say we will not be bound; we do not assent to that part of the treaty which would otherwise bind us. It is merely a reservation. It has no feature of an amendment, but accomplishes, as I said a moment ago, the full protection of the United States in so far as this treaty would impose any obligation upon the United States through any election, report, finding, or decision of the council or the assembly.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question before he resumes his seat?

Mr. LENROOT. I have yielded the floor.

Mr. PHELAN. Not to embarrass the Senator, but to justify myself, I wish the Senator would state in what particular his reservation is deficient. I am aware, if the Senate is not aware, that in one case it does not apply at all where the United States might be interested.

Mr. LENROOT. I will be very glad to enlighten the Senator. Suppose a question arises under article 11, where the action is purely advisory and where no finding can be made that will bind anybody, in that case under this reservation we would not have six votes; the British Empire would; we would have one to their six—and that is why I voted for the reservation of the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON]—but in any case where the league is given power to bind the United States this reservation will protect us.

Mr. BORAH. In what case is the league given the power to bind the United States unless we voluntarily consent to be bound?

Mr. LENROOT. Under the arbitration and compulsory inquiry provisions.

Mr. BORAH. Exactly; but there we consent; we submit nothing to arbitration which we do not think should be submitted to arbitration.

Mr. LENROOT. But under the compulsory inquiry provisions we are compelled to submit everything that we do not reserve.

Mr. BORAH. Is that the only instance in which the Senator's reservation would operate?

Mr. LENROOT. It would also operate in the case of an election of new members to the council.

Mr. MCCORMICK. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Wisconsin if he is clear that the reservation reaches the appointment of committees?

Mr. LENROOT. Yes; it includes any decision.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Vote!

Mr. MCCUMBER. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. If the reservation of the Senator from Wisconsin should be substituted for the reservation proposed by me, would it still be open to amendment?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It must be amended before the substitution is made.

Mr. MCCUMBER. Before the substitution is made?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Yes.

Mr. MCCUMBER. Very well. Then, for the purpose of perfacting it, I offer an amendment to add at the end of the reservation proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin as a substitute the words "unless upon the submission of the matter to the council or assembly for decision, report, or finding the United States consents that the said dominions, colonies, or parts of empire may each have the right to cast a separate vote upon the said decision, report, or finding," and I shall include "election" also.

The purpose of that is perfectly clear. I can not see why there should be an objection to it.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. MCCUMBER. I have not much time. If the Senator desires to speak in my time, I only have a few minutes left.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. A parliamentary inquiry does not come out of the Senator's time.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I inquire whether the reservation tendered by the Senator from Wisconsin is subject to amendment. I made similar inquiry quite early in the proceedings, an amendment being tendered by the Senator from California, and I understood the Chair to rule that it would not be subject to amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair ruled at that time that it was not amendable by new matter, and it is not amendable now by new matter; but the Chair understands the Senator from North Dakota is proposing as an amendment an amendment which he has already proposed.

Mr. McCUMBER. And an amendment which has been printed and read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It has been read and printed.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. It does not occur to me that that changes the situation at all, Mr. President. A reservation which has already been presented, read, and printed can be offered as a separate reservation undoubtedly, but not as an amendment to a pending reservation, because the effect of it in connection with the reservation offered by the Senator from Wisconsin, for instance, may be entirely different from the effect of it if it stood alone.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It can be voted down.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, on the point of order suggested by the Senator from Montana, if I may be permitted to make an observation, I should like to say that it seems to me that the suggestion made by the Senator from Montana is correct, because if out of the mass of different reservations which have been proposed, each of which is complete in itself, any Senator is at liberty to extract a paragraph and then propose it to another reservation, it would become an entirely novel proposition which had not been submitted according to the rule.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair has not ruled that he can extract a paragraph.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Or a sentence; I mean anything which changes the reservation which was sent to the desk and printed in order to bring it within the cloture rule. If that can all be changed by different sentences extracted from different amendments, or parts of amendments, it seems to me that the provision of the cloture rule that they can not be amended is without force and violated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair has not so ruled.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I did not mean to intimate that the Chair had.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is ruling in this way: When the Senator from Montana made his inquiry it was with reference to an amendment which was not printed. The matter stands now substantially under the rule of striking out and inserting. The Senator from North Dakota has offered an amendment. The Senator from Wisconsin is practically moving to strike out the amendment of the Senator from North Dakota and to insert his own. Each, in accordance with the view of the Chair, is amendable by an amendment that has been heretofore presented and read to the Senate.

The Chair assumes that this is an entire amendment that the Senator from North Dakota is proposing to attach. If it is a part of an amendment, the Chair rules it out of order.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

Mr. McCUMBER. So as to make the matter clear, let me call attention to the fact that in submitting it for printing I stated that I would offer it as an amendment to the reservation offered by the Senator from Wisconsin. I say that so as to make it clear that I am not extracting, as the Senator states.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is clearly in order.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. In view of the statement made by the Senator from North Dakota, I withdraw any objection.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I want to take just a minute to state the reasons.

I have no particular objection to the way in which the Senator from Wisconsin has formulated his reservation. The objection, and the only objection, that I can urge to it is this: That it allows the United States to go into the conference, permit the matter to be tried out, take part in it, and, when it is finally decided, then the United States can say it will not be bound by it. Under this reservation the United States will not be bound unless, as I have stated here, upon the submission of the matter to the council or the assembly for decision, report, or finding, the United States has consented that these dominions and colonies may cast a vote. In other words, it is incumbent upon the United States, when the matter is submitted, and when she goes into the conference, to say whether she will be bound or whether she will not. She must say that at the time of its submission.

That is all this amendment does, and it simply places us in an honorable position.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. There was some confusion, and I did not quite understand the ruling of the Chair. Did the Chair rule that the Senator from North Dakota could offer this amendment now—that it was in order to offer it?

The VICE PRESIDENT. To the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin. The Senator from North Dakota gave notice that he would, and had it read and printed.

Mr. REED. That is the point I wanted to get at.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator gave notice that he would, and had it read and printed.

Mr. REED. If he did that, clearly he has the right to offer it now. I admit that.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, I ask that the Secretary may state the substitute as proposed to be amended.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the substitute as proposed to be amended.

The SECRETARY. At the end of the proposed substitute of the Senator from Wisconsin it is proposed to add the following words:

Unless upon the submission of the matter to the council or assembly for decision, report, or finding, the United States consents that the said dominions, colonies, or parts of empire may each have the right to cast a separate vote upon the said election, decision, report, or finding.

Mr. McCUMBER. I wish the Secretary would read it as it would stand amended.

The SECRETARY. So that, if amended, it would read:

The United States assumes no obligation to be bound by any election, decision, report, or finding of the council or assembly in which any member of the league and its self-governing dominions, colonies, or parts of empire, in the aggregate have cast more than one vote, and assumes no obligation to be bound by any decision, report, or finding of the council or assembly arising out of any dispute between the United States and any member of the league if such member, or any self-governing dominion, colony, empire, or part of empire united with it politically has voted, unless upon the submission of the matter to the council or assembly for decision, report, or finding, the United States consents that the said dominions, colonies, or parts of empire may each have the right to cast a separate vote upon the said election, decision, report, or finding.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, the addition which is moved appears to be part of an amendment offered, and not the whole amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is the whole amendment. The Senator gave notice of it.

Mr. LODGE. It is the whole amendment?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is the whole amendment. The Senator gave notice that he would offer it as an amendment to the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin and had it read.

Mr. LODGE. It is very destructive.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, the effect of that will be that when the representatives of the United States think it is advantageous that the several colonies shall cast separate votes they will consent. I do not see that it does any harm.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair has trouble enough in ruling on the rules of the Senate, without ruling upon what will happen in the league of nations. [Laughter.]

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, there is one provision in there about which the question of the Senator from California raised a doubt in my mind, when it refers to the consent of the United States, as to whether it means the consent of the Congress or the consent of the delegate of the United States at the conference.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, with the construction that the Senator from North Dakota has just given, it seems very clear that his amendment ought to be voted down. We ought not to leave the question of obligating the United States upon this inequality of voting to the decision of the representative of the United States upon the council or in the assembly.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, do I understand that the Senator from North Dakota has so construed his amendment?

Mr. McCUMBER. No. Of course, we would have to act through the delegate, but I expected that the United States, of course, would have to instruct the delegate.

Mr. WADSWORTH. May I ask the Senator from North Dakota what agency of the United States is to instruct the delegate?

Mr. McCUMBER. We have otherwise provided in our reservations for the appointment of all agencies, and fixing their powers. If we have any power to act it will have to be through the United States Congress.

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. President, the reservation of the Senator from North Dakota carries out his consistent purpose, manifest during the course of this debate, to confer upon Great Britain, her self-governing colonies, and the subject and abject Empire of India, each a vote, in the aggregate six times the vote of the United States. The amendment, if it should carry, will absolutely defeat the purpose of the reservation presented by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT].

There is not very much to be said for the reservation of the Senator from Wisconsin. It serves only to protect us from the consequences of our humiliating self-immolation in this Chamber. We are Senators of the United States, not of Italy or of France or of the new-born German Republic. We are Senators of the United States, sitting in Washington, and not of the Dominion of Canada, sitting in Ottawa, not of the Upper Chamber, sitting in Westminster, although to read or to hear our debates sometimes one almost might be deceived upon that point.

Let us at least protect the people of the United States from the consequences of the surrender of their interests by their delegates at Paris. Even if we do that, the question involved in the representation in the assembly, if we enter the league, will not down. We can not put it to rest in this Chamber any more than the Senators by the Missouri compromise could put to rest the question of slavery. We can not be parties to an injustice to the American people, parties to their humiliation, and expect that they will assent to the surrender of their interests to which the Senate consents in this Chamber.

Ah, we may vote to-day in the Senate to surrender the equal rights of America in the assembly of the league if we join in that league, but we can not thus settle the question. The issue will remain moot in the great cities and in the country towns, upon the farms, in the valleys, and on the hillsides, in offices and factories, wherever there are assembled Americans who cherish the honor and the prestige of America. The issue will remain in this country as slavery remained an issue. We are not going to escape it on this floor. We shall meet it at home, in our constituencies, wherever we go. Our action here will serve not to bring accord between the two great English-speaking peoples, but to bring discord between them.

As a member of the Canadian House of Commons, 20 years a member of that body, and 16 years a minister of the Crown, said, "The logic is with the people of the United States. New York is more important to the Union than Canada to the British Empire." So he spoke, not I. Wherever men have discussed this issue voices have been raised—in the French Chamber at Paris, in London, in Westminster, in Ottawa—against this unequal representation. As long as men have tongues in the United States, as long as they believe that the greatest of Republics should have an equal voice with the greatest of Empires, this issue will live. It will either be settled by the British Empire as an act of grace conferring upon the people of the United States the equal suffrages which their own Senators denied them, or the people of the United States, if they are coerced into membership into this league, will seize justice for themselves through their representatives chosen at a future election.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the reservation offered by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER] as a substitute for the reservation offered by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT].

Mr. McCUMBER. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. KENDRICK (when his name was called). Making the same announcement of the transfer of my pair as before, I vote "nay."

The roll call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 3, nays 86, as follows:

YEAS—3.

So Mr. McCUMBER's substitute for the reservation offered by Mr. LENROOT was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question now is on the reservation of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT].

Mr. JONES of Washington. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. KENDRICK (when his name was called). Making the same announcement of the transfer of my pair as before, I vote "nay."

The roll call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 55, nays 38, as follows:

NOT VOTING—2.

Culberson	Fall

So Mr. LENROOT's amendment, in the nature of a substitute, was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the reservation as amended.

The reservation as amended was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Are there further reservations?

Mr. PHELAN. I offer the following reservation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read it.

The SECRETARY. Add as a new reservation the following:

Inasmuch as the "14 points," so called, as declared by the President of the United States, were accepted as the basis of peace by all the chief belligerent nations, the sole reservation being the interpretation on the part of Great Britain of the clause relating to the freedom of the seas, the United States reserves the right to interpret the covenant of the league and the treaty of peace in harmony with the principles laid down by the said "14 points," and that it does not consider itself bound to any line of conduct, military or financial, in conflict therewith.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I rise to a point of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state his point of order.

Mr. THOMAS. Yesterday we voted upon a similar reservation offered by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN]. The point of order I make is that the Senate has already disposed of the subject.

Mr. PHELAN. The reservation offered by the Senator from Oklahoma, if the Chair will permit me, was of a similar character; but I claim the right to offer a reservation under the rule, which reservation has been read to the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The reservation offered by the Senator from Oklahoma upon yesterday had to do with the question of self-determination of nations. This one, proposed by the Senator from California, seems to have to do with the self-determination of the United States. The Chair overrules the point of order. The question is on agreeing to the reservation proposed by the Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN].

Mr. McCORMICK. I wish merely to remark that this reservation seems to me to be a profession of virtue when there is none left in it.

Mr. BORAH and Mr. ASHURST. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. KENDRICK (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before, with reference to my pair with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] and its transfer, I vote "nay."

The roll call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 12, nays 79—as follows:

YEAS—12.

Borah	Gronna	McLean	Penrose
Brandegee	Johnson, Calif.	Norris	Phelan

NOT VOTING—4.

Culberson	Fall	Myers	Stanley

So Mr. PHELAN'S reservation was rejected.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President, I offer the following reservation, proposed on November 6 and read at that time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the proposed reservation.

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate of the United States unreservedly advises and consents to the ratification of this treaty in so far as it provides for the creation of a status of peace between the United States and Germany.

Resolved further, That the Senate of the United States advises and consents to the ratification of this treaty, reserving to the United States the fullest and most complete liberty of action in respect to any report, decision, recommendation, action, advice, or proposals of the league of nations or its executive council or any labor conference provided for in the treaty, and also the sole right to determine its own relations and duties and course of action toward such league or toward any member thereof, or toward any other nation in respect to any question, matter, or thing that may arise while a member of such league, anything in the covenants or constitution of such league or the treaty of Versailles to the contrary notwithstanding, and also reserves to itself the unconditional right to withdraw from membership in such league and to withdraw from membership in any body, board, commission, committee, or organization whatever set up in any part of the treaty for the purpose of aiding its execution or otherwise, effecting by such withdrawal as complete a release of any further obligations and duties under such treaty as if the United States had never been a party thereto. It is also

Resolved further, That the validity of this ratification depends upon the affirmative act of the principal allied powers named in the treaty of peace with Germany approving these reservations and certifying said approval to the United States within 60 days after the deposit of the resolution of ratification by the United States.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President, at the time I presented this reservation—and it was read to the Senate on the 6th of November—I made an explanation of its purpose and advanced some arguments in its support. I desire to-day, however, to make a few additional observations, the substance of which has convinced me that this reservation is the way out of the complex situation in which we find ourselves.

The reservation I have proposed accomplishes the two purposes for which every peace treaty is framed. First, and in this case most importantly, it establishes a status of peace between the United States and Germany. It is now more than a year since actual hostilities between the United States and its enemies ceased and we have not yet placed on our statute books any law nor have we made a treaty which declares the state of war to be at an end. It has been assumed from this fact that we still have a status of war and the Government has in many matters gone forward on the theory that a state of war still exists. As my present thought runs I am inclined to take issue with this position and to assert that a war actually ends with the formal cessation of hostilities; that the constitutional Commander in Chief has the constitutional power to bring actual hostilities to a close, because he has the power to accept the surrender of the armies of the enemy under terms which he lays down and which may make wholly impossible the further conduct of hostilities; that in the present war the Commander in Chief did end these hostilities by his participation in the making of the armistice of November 11, 1918, and the amendments and supplements thereto; that since that time we have had in law as well as in fact a status of peace; and that the only thing which now remains to be done in connection with this war is to provide for the indemnities to be paid by the vanquished and to adjust the future peace-time relationships of the opposing parties. In this view the treaty is obviously merely confirmatory of the peace status which already exists.

But it is not necessary at this time to amplify this phase of the question which I leave for further discussion should it, as it well may, become pertinent to a situation which hereafter may arise, because if this treaty be ratified by us under this reservation it will bring us peace if and when the necessary number of other powers ratify it. As to the eventualities which may arise in connection with ratification of this treaty I have already expressed my views before this body. This resolution, therefore, will, so far as any action which this body can take, bring to us peace—the desideratum which has been held before us as justifying an unqualified acceptance of this treaty as it was written with all its manifest imperfections and iniquities.

In the second place, this reservation gives us a reasonable and tolerable participation in the matter of indemnities and postwar adjustment and relationships. It is not necessary for me at this time to recapitulate the many-times explained enormities of this treaty from the standpoint of a wise American policy. These have been repeatedly pointed out before this body, and it is now evident that a majority of the Senate regard the written treaty provisions as hostile or threatening to American interest and American institutions. The only question remaining is as to how best to protect ourselves against the invidious tendencies of the treaty provisions?

The crux of the objections to this treaty may, I think, be expressed in a very few words: The treaty makes us coparticipants and coresponsibles in matters which are none of our business; and this statement would have been sufficient at any time before there stalked into our political life the theory that men and nations were no longer to be free, but were to be subject in their civil, political, financial, and to some extent religious lives, to the views or whims of other persons and other peoples who might be alien in race, tradition, civilization, government, and religion. I may remark in passing that, owing to a curious quirk of the human intellect, we on this side of the Chamber find ourselves faced with a demand to subject this Nation to the most complete world autocracy which all history has produced, the demand being made by those on the other side of the Chamber, who have heretofore posed as standing for the purest democracy and for the maximum of local self-government. Strange to say, while the whole course of action for the last 50 years of that section of our country which is chiefly represented by gentlemen on the other side has been based and justified on the announced principle of the right of local self-government, yet we to-day on this side of the Chamber are, curiously enough, having to preserve to them the only principle which would permit them to handle their local problems as they have done for the last half century. In saying this I wish to be understood as neither condoning nor approving the course of action to which such gentlemen are committed and for which they stand.

Inasmuch, therefore, as this treaty in all parts, other than that which merely brings us peace, concerns matters which are not our business, the second and third paragraphs of my resolution have been framed with a view to permitting us to exercise the maximum beneficent influence which we may possess in the councils of the world, of allowing to us the fullest opportunity to cooperate with the other nations of the world in the support of any course of action which we shall regard as just, but as imposing upon us no obligations whatsoever to go forward in reference to matters which we regard as improper or unjust. Surely, sir, this is the full participation which this people and this Government ought to undertake. This is all that gentlemen on the other side ought to ask that we undertake. Give the freest range to the wildest dreams of the fanatic dreamer, and he ought not to wish, if he be a patriot, for more than the opportunity to participate and to exercise our influence in the councils of the world for right, justice, and human liberty.

This reservation will fully accomplish this. It will permit us to sit as part and parcel of every committee, of every commission, of every organization which the treaty creates, or for which it provides. Our voice could be heard on every subject affecting the peace of the world. Ratify this treaty with this reservation and we shall exercise the full influence which this treaty gives to us if ratified unreservedly. Nay; I understate this position, because if we shall ratify this treaty without any reservation whatever, we shall be bound by positive undertaking and good faith to support the determinations made by the various treaty organizations, in most cases by majority votes, whether we liked such determination or not. Under such an obligation it would be a matter of much less moment to the other conferring powers whether or not we approved of their conclusions, since whether we did or did not approve we would be bound to support them. But by retaining for ourselves, as this reservation proposes, complete liberty of action as to any determination, decision, or conclusion, which any of these organizations may reach, a liberty of action which would permit us to stand on the right side, even as against a majority of those who compose the conferring powers, I assure you they will consider well and pause long before they reach a decision or lay out a course of action with which we do not agree. And I say to you, gentlemen, on the other side, if what you are seeking is honest power and strength in the world, a ratification of this treaty under this resolution gives you a thousandfold more power and strength than you would have under an unqualified ratification. Indeed, it will give to you the greatest world power you could possess, except you jettison this whole treaty and leave us free in the future, as in the past, to do the right, as God, working on the conscience of the people of this country, gives us the power to see the right.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the reservation proposed by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX].

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Pennsylvania if he would object to a division of the question, so that we could first vote on the first paragraph? That presents a clear-cut issue as to whether or not we shall ratify the pending treaty so far it concludes a peace with Germany.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I rise to a point of order. I make the point of order that the resolution of ratification proposed by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX] is not now in order. The rule of the Senate plainly requires that the Senate shall proceed to a determination of all amendments and reservations, and that thereafter a resolution of ratification shall be framed and be considered in the Senate. It is not competent in Committee of the Whole, while reservations are pending, to vote for a resolution of ratification. The matter submitted by the Senator from Pennsylvania is on its face a qualified resolution of ratification and, under the rules of the Senate, is not now in order.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President, the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] is entirely mistaken. This is not a resolution of ratification. The RECORD of November 6 shows that the Senator from Pennsylvania rose and made this statement:

> Mr. KNOX. Mr. President, with the consent of the Senator from Wisconsin, I should like to send to the desk a brief, simple, and general reservation to America's ratification of the treaty of Versailles and its league of nations, which I propose to the pending treaty; and I ask the indulgence of the Senate for 5 or 10 minutes in order to explain the purpose of the reservation.
> Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield to the Senator for that purpose.
> Mr. KNOX. I ask to have the proposed reservation read.
> The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

How that can be called a resolution of ratification I can not imagine.

Replying to the suggestion made by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE], I will say that I have not the slightest objection to a division of the question involved in the reservation.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I call attention to the alleged reservation as presented by the Senator from Pennsylvania. It is true that it reads:

> Reservation intended to be proposed by Mr. KNOX to the reservations proposed as a part of the resolution of ratification of the treaty of peace with Germany, viz:
> Resolved, That the Senate of the United States unreservedly advises and consents to the ratification of this treaty in so far as it provides for the creation of a status of peace between the United States and Germany.

Further resolutions in the nature of reservations follow.

The point I make is that the Senator from Pennsylvania can not abrogate the plain rule of the Senate which fixes our procedure, and, by designating a resolution of ratification a reservation, escape the effect of the rule which gives the Senate the right to vote upon the various amendments and reservations presented before it undertakes to determine the question of ratification.

If this resolution, or reservation, or whatever it may be termed, be adopted, it will have the effect of being a substitute for the pending resolutions, reservations, and amendments. It is plainly, in legal effect, a qualified resolution of ratification and is not in order under the rule. It will require a two-thirds vote for its adoption.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I do not take the view of this matter that the Senator from Arkansas takes. Many of these reservations state, and it is a recognized form in which to offer a reservation to say that "the Senate advises and consents to the ratification of the treaty with the following understandings." I have looked up a good many of them as contained in Malloy's Treaties and Conventions, and that is the common form of expression, and I notice that several of those now pending are worded in similar form.

For instance, I read from the one offered by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], which is right on our desks now, and it provides:

> The Senate of the United States of America advises and consents to the ratification of said treaty with the following reservations.

And so forth.

The fact that the Senator's reservation contains the word "resolved" is immaterial, but the Senator can modify his own reservation by striking that out in each case if he desires to do so. Then it will read:

> That the Senate unreservedly advises and consents—

Which is the exact language contained in many former treaties, and in several pending reservations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is of the opinion that the reservation now before the Senate is in proper form and overrules the point of order.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, in view of the statement of the Senator from Pennsylvania, that he does not object to a severance of these reservations, I ask that the question be divided, and that the first paragraph be submitted to the Senate first. I ask that it be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the first paragraph.

The Secretary read as follows:

> Resolved, That the Senate of the United States unreservedly advises and consents to the ratification of this treaty in so far as it provides for the creation of a status of peace between the United States and Germany.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I would find myself quite unable to determine just exactly what provisions of the treaty would be in force and what would not be in force if this resolution of ratification were adopted. For instance, I would be utterly unable to say whether the Shantung provision is in force and effect or is not.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is of the opinion that the reservation is not susceptible of division. The question will be upon the reservation offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. FRANCE. I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. May we have the whole question stated?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair calls first for the seconding of the demand for the yeas and nays. Is it seconded?

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the reservation proposed by the Senator from Pennsylvania.

The Secretary read as follows:

> Resolved, That the Senate of the United States unreservedly advises and consents to the ratification of this treaty in so far as it provides for the creation of a status of peace between the United States and Germany.
> Resolved further, That the Senate of the United States advises and consents to the ratification of this treaty, reserving to the United Sates the fullest and most complete liberty of action in respect to any report, decision, recommendation, action, advice, or proposals of the league of nations or its executive council or any labor conference provided for in the treaty, and also the sole right to determine its own relations and duties and course of action toward such league or toward any member thereof or toward any other nation in respect to any question, matter, or thing that may arise while a member of such league, anything in the covenants or constitution of such league or the treaty of Versailles to the contrary notwithstanding, and also reserves to itself the unconditional right to withdraw from membership in such league and to withdraw from membership in any body, board, commission, committee, or organization whatever set up in any part of the treaty for the purpose of aiding its execution or otherwise, effecting by such withdrawal as complete a release of any further obligations and duties under such treaty as if the United States had never been a party thereto. It is also > Resolved further, That the validity of this ratification depends upon the affirmative act of the principal allied powers named in the treaty of peace with Germany, approving these reservations and certifying said approval to the United States within 60 days after the deposit of the resolution of ratification by the United States.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I ask for a division of this reservation, based upon the rule which says that—

> If the question in debate contains several propositions, any Senator may have the same divided.

And it seems to me that clearly this reservation, under two separate resolves, contains two separate propositions. One is that the United States ratifies the treaty so far as it creates a status of peace. Then it further resolves an entirely different thing.

I simply wanted to call the attention of the Chair to that rule, which will be found on page 22, Rule XVIII, and ask the Chair, if he had ruled inadvertently upon the matter, or without looking at the rule, if he would not reconsider his ruling.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, it seems to me that it is too late when the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The Chair has ruled otherwise, and I have the floor.

Mr. SWANSON. The yeas and nays have been ordered. Business has intervened.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. That does not make any difference.

Mr. SWANSON. I raise the point of order that there can not be any debate on questions of order.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I am not debating, unless the Chair wants to hear me.

Mr. SWANSON. The rule says that—

> Points of order, including questions of relevancy and appeals from the decision of the Presiding Officer, shall be decided without debate.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. It is all within the discretion of the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The point of order is sustained. The question is on the reservation proposed by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX], on which the yeas and nays have been requested and ordered. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CURTIS (when Mr. FALL's name was called). I have been requested to announce the unavoidable absence of the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL]. He is paired with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. KENDRICK]. If present, the Senator from New Mexico would vote "yea."

Mr. KENDRICK (when his name was called). I make the same announcement as to the transfer of my pair as before, and will let this announcement stand for the day. I vote "nay."

Mr. McLEAN (when his name was called). In the absence of the senior Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS] I withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. MYERS. Has the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. McLEAN] voted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That Senator has not voted.

Mr. MYERS. As I have a pair with the Senator from Connecticut, I withhold my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 30, nays 61, as follows:

YEAS—30.

So Mr. KNOX's reservation was rejected.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President, I desire to give notice that I will ask for a vote in the Senate on this reservation.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I propose the reservation I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read it.

The SECRETARY. Add as a new reservation the following:

The representative of the United States on the council of the league of nations shall not give his consent to any proposal under any provisions of the covenant of the league of nations which may involve the use of the military or naval forces of the United States until such proposal shall be submitted to the Congress and the Congress shall authorize him to give his consent thereto.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, there is nothing in the covenant that prevents our representative on the council giving his consent to any decision that may be asked of the council or giving his assent or joining in any decision upon any question or dispute under the consideration of the council. I have heard it stated on this floor many times by Senators that our armies and our navies would not or should not be sent abroad to engage in any foreign war without the consent of Congress. I believe that is the sentiment of the Congress. I believe the sentiment of the people of this country is that they are not willing that our armies shall be sent abroad without the consent of Congress.

Mr. President, I do not want this country to be placed in a position where other nations can point to us and say, "You have failed to meet an obligation that your representative has consented to."

Under article 10, as it is submitted to us, for instance, it is provided that the council shall advise upon the means to carry into effect any obligation that we have assumed. If that stands as it is, and a question comes up before the council involving the matter of compelling peace between two countries across the seas, and our representative on that council should agree to a plan submitted by the other members of the council that would involve the use of the troops of the United States, then we would be in a position of having consented through our representative on the council to the use of our troops across the sea. He could not legally bind us, I grant that, but, Mr. President, if a nation can ever be morally bound to do a thing that its representative can not legally bind a nation to do, this country would be bound to conform to the recmmendation of the council after its representative had given his consent. If we refused to do it, our associates could very justly charge us with dishonor.

I do not want our country to be put in that position. I do not want us to be placed so that the finger of dishonor can be pointed at us by any of the other countries of the world, because I am satisfied of this, Mr. President, that the people of this country and that the Congress of the United States would never consent to the sending of our armies across the sea to engage in a controversy or war that did not affect our safety and security and in which we had no direct interest. To meet that situation, Mr. President, I want this provision put in the resolution of ratification, so that the countries of the world will know that our representative upon the council can not bind us to use our armies until first he has been authorized to do so by the Congress.

It may be said that all the countries are presumed to know our form of Government and the Constitution upon which it rests; and yet they do not know it; they do not appreciate it. They did not appreciate it while this treaty was being framed. You see in the press every day expressions of surprise that the Senate is not approving the action of our peace delegation at Versailles. They thought that when our peace delegation signed this treaty this country was bound, that the act was complete, that the ratification by the Senate was a sort of a matter of form. A great many of them thought that. But they have had their eyes opened, and they will have their eyes opened further in this respect. But what are they doing? They are charging us with running away from obligations that we have not yet incurred. They are charging us with forsaking and not fulfilling a covenant that we have not yet made, but which they thought we had made. So, Mr. President, unless we put in a reservation of this kind, when our delegate sits on the council with the representatives from the other countries they will think that he sits there with the same power that they have—to bind their countries when they act.

When the representative on the council of the British Empire gives his consent to a decision of the council it binds the British Empire. When the representative of France on the council gives his consent to any decision of the council, it binds France. They would naturally expect our representative to have the same power and his act the same effect. Our representative, however, can not bind this country, legally or morally, to send its armies into war. While we would not be legally bound, yet if he did give his consent and there was introduced in Congress a resolution declaring war or to raise armies, what would be the strongest argument in favor of its passing? Not the merits of the controversy, but that we had been committed by our representative to this line of conduct and that it would be dishonorable for us not to fulfill the obligation that he had consented to. One of the most potent arguments for this treaty now is that it has been approved by our representatives; that we should stand by the President.

So, Mr. President, the sole purpose of this reservation is to advise our associates in this league of nations that when we consent to the ratification of this covenant, we declare that our representative on the council can not give his consent to any proposition that involves the use of our armed forces without first submitting it to Congress and getting its consent.

I have heard the leader of the minority more times than one state on this floor that Congress ought to provide that our representative should not give his consent without the consent of Congress, and that we can so provide by law. I think we can. I introduced a bill two or three months ago providing that our representative on the council should not do it. It seems to me that the fair and honorable course for us to take is, when we ratify this treaty, to put that provision, at any rate, in the resolution of ratification.

It may be said that reservation 8 takes care of it. Under reservation 8 it is expressly provided that the powers and duties of our representative in the council shall be fixed by law. That would take care of it in a way. Yet that law is subject to change as administrations come and go, it is subject to repeal as Congress may change. It has not the permanent character of a reservation in a resolution of ratification, and instead of leaving it to future legislation, instead of leaving it to future action by Congress, it does seem to me that the fair, just, and honorable course if that is what we believe—and I am sure that is the sentiment of the Senate and the sentiment of the people—is for us, in ratifying this treaty, to notify our associates that our representative on the council can not agree to any decision involving the use of our armies or navies until the proposition has first been submitted to Congress and had its assent. This makes our position clear. It avoids misunderstanding. It will promote peace.

I trust that the reservation will be agreed to.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, the Senator has quoted me. I certainly do not want it understood that I have ever stated that this is a matter which we should enter into an agreement about with a foreign country or any number of foreign countries.

Mr. JONES of Washington. No, Mr. President; I said the Senator had said we should enact legislation.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. That is the only proper way to do it. It is purely a domestic question. The power which we shall give our representative is entirely domestic, and ought to be covered by legislation only. We should not undertake to enter into any contract with the other nations as to what his powers should be. It ought to be always in our hands for us to restrict or increase his powers as may be deemed proper at the time.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, it seems to me that the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] is correct. We have provided by a reservation, known as reservation No. 8, that Congress will provide by law for the appointment of our representatives, and will fix their powers and duties, and from time to time Congress ought to have that power. It is something that we ought not to put in a treaty with any foreign country.

Furthermore, under the third reservation the military forces can not be used without the consent of Congress. I do not think that the reservation should be adopted or that it is proper.

Mr. JONES of Washington. This reservation does not make any contract between us and these other countries. It simply declares to them what our policy is toward our representative. It simply declares to them what permanent restrictions we make upon our member of the council——

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President——

Mr. JONES of Washington. And notifies them that while this treaty is in effect that representative can not give his consent to any such proposition without action by Congress.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The Senator says there is no contract, but it is stated in the very first reservation that they do not go into effect until accepted by the other parties.

Mr. JONES of Washington. When they are accepted they simply accept our declaration that this limitation is placed upon our representative in the council.

Furthermore, it is not so much a question as to what future Congresses may do, as the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG] suggests, referring to the proposition in section 8. It is a question of what this Congress, that is ratifying the treaty, wants to say with reference to the representative upon the council which it is helping to create. What do we say about it? Do we want this representative to give his consent to the council involving the use of our Armies and Navies? We may get no legislation, or the legislation we may be able to get defining the powers of this representative may not take away from him his discretion. What do we want to do in ratifying this treaty? I want it declared in the resolution of ratification that our representative on the council can not give his consent to any such decision.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the reservation offered by the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES].

Mr. JONES of Washington. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. UNDERWOOD (when Mr. BANKHEAD's name was called). I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. BANKHEAD] is absent and is paired with the junior Senator from Vermont [Mr. PAGE]. I ask that this announcement may stand for the balance of the day.

Mr. CALDER (when his name was called). On this vote I am paired with the junior Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST]. If at liberty to vote, I would vote "yea."

Mr. CURTIS (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS]. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. MOSES (when his name was called). During the temporary and necessary absence of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. KIRBY] I have a pair with that Senator. In his absence I withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I would vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. OVERMAN. I was requested to announce that my colleague [Mr. SIMMONS] is absent on account of illness in his family. He is paired with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS]. If my colleague were present he would vote "nay." I ask that this announcement may stand for the day.

The result was announced—yeas 34, nays 50, as follows:

So the reservation of Mr. JONES of Washington was rejected.

Mr. GORE. I desire to offer the reservation which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the proposed reservation.

The SECRETARY. Add as a separate reservation the following:

No. —. Nothing contained in this treaty or covenant shall be so construed as to require the United States of America to depart from its traditional policy of not intruding upon, interfering with, or entangling itself in the political questions or policy or internal administration of any foreign State; nor shall anything contained in the said treaty or covenant be construed to imply a relinquishment by the United States of America of its traditional attitude toward purely American questions.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. May I inquire if the proposed reservation has been duly read heretofore?

Mr. GORE. Yes; on Saturday last.

Mr. President, I wish to say merely a word concerning the genesis and history of this reservation. It is not a new thing under the sun, although it will be a new thing in the diplomatic history of this country if it should be rejected by the Senate. It is a landmark in the diplomatic history of the United States. It is a literal transcript from the understanding attached by the American representatives to the first Hague conference. I have made a change of only a single word. In lieu of the word "convention" in that understanding I have substituted the words "treaty or covenant." This understanding was proposed by the American delegates and was attached to the first Hague convention as a definition and a preservation of the traditional policy of the United States.

It is also a literal transcript from the understanding proposed by the American delegates and attached to the second Hague convention. There is a variation of only a single word.

I should like to remind Senators that the two Hague conventions looked to the encouragement of international peace and to the avoidance of international war. Those conventions, however, appealed to the moral sense of mankind and invoked only moral forces for the execution of their decrees. Those conventions did not involve the use of armed forces or military intervention in quarrels between nations, and yet the American representatives at those two historic conferences felt obliged, out of an abundance of caution, to submit those understandings and to subscribe to those conventions only after these understandings and these conditions had been attached.

How much more important now, when we contemplate entering into a league of nations which involves an appeal to arms, a resort to military force, and a resort to the economic boycott! It seems to me that we ought to emulate those illustrious examples, and we ought in this reservation to preserve our traditional policy and reassert our resolution not to meddle and intermeddle in the quarrels of Europe that do not concern either the rights, the interests, or the honor of this Republic.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I believe it is generally recognized as a part of the history of the transactions to which the Senator from Oklahoma refers that the expressions found in this reservation are intended as a reservation of the Monroe doctrine. I make the point of order that the subject is covered by reservation No. 6.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I do not think the point of order should be sustained; but, in any event, it can only apply to the last half of the reservation. I ask a separation of the question and ask that the first part be read. I think the Senator from Montana will then see a distinction between the first provision of the reservation and the Monroe doctrine as wide as the universe.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

No. —. Nothing contained in this treaty or covenant shall be so construed as to require the United States of America to depart from its traditional policy of not intruding upon, interfering with, or entangling itself in the political questions or policy or internal administration of any foreign State.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I offer the part of the reservation which has just been read as a separate reservation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oklahoma ask for a separate vote on it?

Mr. GORE. Yes, sir.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, unless the rules prohibit him, the Senator from Oklahoma undoubtedly may modify his resolution in any way he sees fit.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. GORE. I ask for the yeas and nays on the reservation.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. THOMAS. Before the roll is called, I desire to inquire whether the vote is to be taken upon the first part of the reservation?

The VICE PRESIDENT. No; it is to be upon the entire reservation.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from Maine [Mr. FERNALD]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. MOSES (when his name was called). My temporary pair with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. KIRBY] still holds good. I therefore withhold my vote. If permitted to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. SMITH of Maryland (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM]. In his absence I withhold my vote. If I were privileged to vote, I should vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. WATSON (after having voted in the affirmative). Has the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. WOLCOTT] voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. WATSON. Having a pair with that Senator, in his absence I withdraw my vote.

Mr. CURTIS. I have a pair with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS], and therefore withhold my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 28, nays 50, as follows:

So the reservation proposed by Mr. GORE was rejected.

Mr. FRANCE. I offer a reservation, which I ask may be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

The SECRETARY. At the close of reservation 2 it is proposed to add the following:

Provided, That the United States shall have the privilege of nominating at any time any nonmember nation of the world for membership in the league of nations and the privilege of offering at any time any amendment to the league covenant, and in case unfavorable action shall be taken by the league, resulting in a failure to elect to membership the nation so nominated or a rejection of the proposed amendment, the United States reserves the right to withdraw immediately without condition or notice.

Mr. FRANCE. Mr. President, the proposed reservation speaks for itself. I do not ask for the yeas and nays upon it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is upon the reservation proposed by the Senator from Maryland.

The reservation was rejected.

Mr. FRANCE. I offer another reservation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The reservation proposed by the Senator from Maryland will be read.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add at the proper place the following:

Except that, in accordance with the principles declared in article 22, that the tutelage of the peoples which are no longer under the sovereignty of the States which formerly governed them and which are not yet able to stand by themselves should be intrusted to the advanced nations who can best undertake this responsibility, the principal allied and associated powers shall renounce in favor of the United States all their rights and titles to the colonies and territories in Africa formerly held by Germany and transferred by Germany to said principal allied and associated powers under articles 119 to 127, inclusive, and the United States shall act as mandatory of such territories to the end that the inhabitants of these colonies and territories may be civilized, educated, and fitted for self-determination, and to the further end that the United States shall closely cooperate with Great Britain, France, and Belgium and with such other powers as have interests in Africa in a permanent, progressive, and upbuilding policy for the development of all of the peoples and resources of Africa, and further that the ratification of this treaty by the United States shall be only on condition that the principal allied and associated powers take such action as is herein provided by the renunciation of such rights and titles to the United States.

Mr. FRANCE. Mr. President, I have already discussed this reservation, so I shall not delay the Senate by any further remarks upon it. I should be pleased, however, to have a yea-and-nay vote upon it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the reservation offered by the Senator from Maryland, on which the yeas and nays are requested.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CURTIS (when his name was called). I make the same announcement as before with regard to my pair and withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota (when his name was called). Making the same announcement that I made a while ago, I withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. MOSES (when his name was called). Repeating the announcement of my pair with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. KIRBY], in his absence I withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. LODGE. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. WATSON. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. WOLCOTT]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 3, nays 71, as follows:

YEAS—3.

Ball	France	Sherman

So Mr. FRANCE's reservation was rejected.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I offer a reservation, upon which I do not ask the yeas and nays.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The reservation will be stated.

The Secretary read as follows:

The United States holds that the principles covered by the letter of the Secretary of State of November 5, 1918, as the conditions upon which the armistice was based, are binding and the covenant of the league must be interpreted in accordance with those principles.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on that reservation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is the request seconded? [A pause.] It is not seconded.

Mr. PENROSE. I should like to have the reservation read again.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the reservation again.

The Secretary again stated the proposed reservation.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, as I understand that reservation, it involves the "14 points," and upon it I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. PENROSE. Out of respect to the points?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Out of respect to the disappearing points.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is the request seconded? [A pause.] It is not seconded by one-fifth of those present. The question is on the reservation offered by the Senator from Oklahoma.

The reservation was rejected.

Mr. OWEN. I reserve the right to reoffer in the Senate the reservations which I have heretofore offered in Committee of the Whole.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Are there further reservations?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I offer the reservation which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The reservation will be stated.

The Secretary read as follows:

Paragraph —. The United States hereby gives notice that it will withdraw from the league of nations at the end of two years from the date of the exchange of ratifications of this treaty unless by the end of that period—

(1) The sovereignty of China shall have been fully restored over and in Shantung.

(2) The relations of Ireland to the British Empire shall have been adjusted satisfactorily to the people of Ireland.

(3) The independence of Egypt shall be recognized and that country set up as a free, independent, and sovereign State.

(4) Each member of the league shall have abolished through the duly constituted authority the policy of maintaining its regular military and naval forces in time of peace by conscription.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, just a word.

I think these four grounds on which we give notice of withdrawal unless they are complied with are in accord with the sentiment and the fundamental principles of our people and this Government, and we ought not to continue associated with countries that are not in harmony with them.

The first ground for withdrawal is unless the sovereignty of China shall have been fully restored over and in Shantung. We have not had a single word on this floor justifying the action with reference to Shantung. Everybody denounces it. Everybody condemns it. We have adopted a rather strong reservation with reference to it—that is, we have withheld our consent—but that does not accomplish anything. In my judgment, if we advise these people that unless Shantung is restored in two years we will withdraw from the league of nations, that restoration will take place. Furthermore, Japan has promised to do it. This will not hurt her pride. We give her two years in which to fulfill that promise; I believe she will do it.

The second ground for withdrawal is, unless the relations of Ireland to the British Empire shall have been adjusted satisfactorily to the people of Ireland.

If there are any people that are entitled to their independence, it is the Irish people. They have been fighting for it since for more than a century. They have shown their capacity in every walk and position of life, in every civilized country on the face of the earth, and upon every important battle field in the history of the world during the last hundred years. They are certainly entitled to their independence. The Senate, by almost a unanimous vote, expressed its sentiment along these lines some time ago. Now, we give the British Empire two years in which to make a satisfactory adjustment of their relations with the Irish people. If they do not do it, we ought not to stay associated with a country that will not give people like the Irish their independence.

The third ground is, unless the independence of Egypt shall be recognized and that country set up as a free, independent, and sovereign State.

When this war began, Egypt was an independent country, nominally under the suzerainty of Turkey. When Turkey entered the war, Egypt became, under international law, a free and independent country, and joined the Allies in the war. England declared a protectorate over Egypt; but, relying upon the justice that they thought England would afford to them these people understood, and they had a right to understand, that this was simply temporary, and that when the war ended they would be granted their independence. I have been informed that a million Egyptians went to the battle front in this Great War. They fought bravely.

I see it reliably reported that Gen. Allenby stated in a speech that the Egyptians were largely responsible for his success in Palestine against the Turks.

Mr. President, Egypt is a people of 13,000,000 souls, with 350,000 square miles of territory, whose history runs back many thousand years, a people who ought to be independent, a people who had a right to expect their independence at the close of this war, a people who had a right to expect to be treated as an independent country. The English representatives since 1882 have declared over and over again that their occupation of Egypt was simply temporary; that they were not intending to interfere with the sovereignty of Egypt or its independence.

Mr. President, that country ought to be independent. It is occupied now by English forces, and the civilized world would probably be shocked if it knew what was taking place there—the very things that almost always take place where an alien army is occupying a country. It does not make any difference how civilized the country may be from which these armies come; they are reliably charged of being guilty of outrages that would bring the blush of shame to the cheeks of civilized people.

Mr. POMERENE. I hope the Senator does not mean to have that remark apply to American troops when they were abroad.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, my recollection is that we had very serious charges made even against American troops while they were occupying the Philippines. It would not be true of American troops generally, and I hope never, but when you gather together thousands of men you will find some among them, even though they may all profess to be preachers of the gospel, who will not act just right under all circumstances. You take thousands of soldiers and put them over an alien people against that people's will and you will have trouble and outrages.

Here is what the British troops are doing in Egypt.

Mr. WILLIAMS. What is the Senator reading from?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I am reading from a statement made by the Egyptian representatives, based upon affidavits submitted by their people. I do not vouch, of course, for the truth of it, but the affidavits are made under the solemn obligations of an oath, by people who are vouched for as Egyptians of high standing and position, as respectable and responsible; and I have seen no denial from any representative of the English Government.

(a) On March 30, an armored train, transporting several hundred British soldiers, stopped above the village of Chobak. A certain number of soldiers penetrated the village, pillaging everything that was within their reach without encountering the slightest resistance. They attacked the honor of women. A husband who wished to interfere was immediately shot. Soon the soldiers spread themselves throughout the village and committed the most shameful excesses upon the women. Woe to her who wished to defend herself; she was immediately struck down. Woe to the man who wished to intervene; he underwent the same fate. After the village was burned, 144 houses were destroyed. There remains standing of this village only 56 houses. Twenty-one people were killed and 12 wounded. Some underwent a refined martyrdom. The soldiers buried the assistant mayor, his son, brother, and two other persons up to their waists and cut them up with their bayonets until they were dead.

I have examined the affidavits upon which this statement is based, and they bear it out. As I say, I do not vouch for the truth of it. I am sure it does not show the general character of British soldiers or of the British Army. But it is, in my judgment, Mr. President, what we may expect when an alien army is occupying territory against the will of the native or local people, and trying to control and govern them against their will.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I suppose, as a matter of fact, of course that the Senator is not acquainted with any of the people who made the affidavits?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Oh, no; not personally.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senator is prepared, then, on the printed affidavits of interested parties, purporting to come from respectable people, to believe of Scotchmen and Englishmen and Welshmen and Irishmen, who constitute the British Army, a villainous thing like that?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I do not know whether these were Scotchmen; I do not know whether these were Irishmen——

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senator said the British Army.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The British Army, Mr. President, is composed of people from almost every part of the world. It was a part of the British Army, under control of British officers, under the dominion of the British Government, exercising the authority of the British Government.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If it was not an army of Britons, it may have been an army of native Egyptians, for all the Senator knows.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I do not know their nationality. It is charged they were commanded by British officers and they were a part of the British Army. But, Mr. President, the affidavits show that they were not Egyptians. But, as I say, I do not vouch for the truth of it. The Senator has absolutely no proof that that is not true.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I never heard of it.

Mr. JONES of Washington. And these people are vouched for by people who are honorable people.

Mr. WILLIAMS. But when an incredible thing is stated, I never heard that it was incumbent upon one to prove the negative.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Undisputed affidavits of respectable people certainly make a prima facie case. Of course, there are a lot of things that I have never seen but which I know exist. There are a lot of people whom I have not seen but whom I know to be honorable and respectable people. There are a lot of people with whom I am not personally acquainted but of whom I have heard and whom I know to be honorable and respectable. These affidavits go into detail with such specific statements that there is certainly some foundation for the charges made.

But, Mr. President, as I said a moment ago, and the Senator from Mississippi knows that it is true, we must expect things like that where an alien army, an alien force, is occupying a country against the will of the people. It is against such occupation and control that I protest.

So, Mr. President, I would like to give England two years within which to withdraw her protectorate from Egypt, take her troops away, and let these people go the way they want to go and ought to go, and live the life they want to live, and which their history shows they are entitled to live.

Here is a matter that is of very vital importance to us:

Each member of the league shall have abolished through the duly constituted authority the policy of maintaining its regular military and naval forces in time of peace by conscription.

Conscription in time of peace is a policy that is contrary to the history and traditions of this country. I voted for conscription at the beginning of this war. I thought it was the wise thing to do. I still think we did the wise thing. But I do not believe in conscription as a permanent policy in time of peace for the maintenance of an army. I believe that policy does more to promote war among people and among nations than any other policy that nations have followed, and I believe this country could have done more for world peace if our representatives at the peace table had insisted that as a part of the disarmament policy there should be an express provision put in abolishing the policy of conscription for maintaining naval or military forces in time of peace than by insisting upon any other one thing. That, in my judgment, would have done more to insure peace among the nations of the earth than anything else. It means more to the homes of the land, to the fathers and mothers of the land; more to labor and to every class of people than any other policy. It would mean much to them to know that in time of peace no government on the face of the earth could reach out its strong arm and take of its boys and its manhood to maintain an armed military force. If the dread of conscription were lifted from the hearts and homes of the world as the result of this peace, men and women would, indeed, feel that this war had not been in vain. Mr. President, this reservation should be adopted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the reservation offered by the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES].

The reservation was rejected.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I did not ask for a yea-and-nay vote, for it would have involved calling for a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Are there further reservations to be offered as in Committee of the Whole?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ball	Grenna	Lenroot	Ransdell
Borah	Hale	Lodge	Robinson
Brandegee	Harding	McCumber	Sheppard
Capper	Harris	McKellar	Smith, Md.
Chamberlain	Harrison	McNary	Smoot
Colt	Henderson	Moses	Spencer
Curtis	Hitchcock	Myers	Sterling
Dial	Johnson, Calif.	New	Sutherland
Dillingham	Johnson, S. Dak.	Newberry	Trammell
Edge	Jones, N. Mex.	Norris	Wadsworth
Elkins	Jones, Wash.	Nugent	Walsh, Mass.
Fernald	Kellogg	Owen	Walsh, Mont.
Fletcher	Kendrick	Penrose	Warren
France	Kenyon	Phelan	Watson
Frelinghuysen	Keyes	Phipps	Williams
Gay	Kirby	Pittman
Gerry	Knox	Poindexter
Gore	La Follette	Pomerene

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-eight Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present. Are there any further reservations to be offered as in Committee of the Whole?

I. INSURING TO ALL PEOPLES THE RIGHT OF SELF-GOVERNMENT.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I offer the reservation numbered 1 in the printed leaflet of reservations proposed by me.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the proposed reservation.

The Secretary read as follows:

1. That nothing contained in article 11 of the league covenant, or any other provision thereof, shall be construed to deny to the people of Ireland, India, Egypt, Korea, or to any other people living under a Government which, as to such people, does not derive its powers from the consent of the governed, the right of revolution, or the right to alter or abolish such government, and to institute a new government, laying its foundations in such principles and organizing its powers in such form as to them shall seem most likely to effect their safety and happiness.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, in discussing this reservation, I wish to quote briefly from the addresses of President Wilson, made on his recent western trip.

At St. Louis, Mo., September 5, 1919, the President declared that—every man who sat at that board (at Paris) held that the right of revolution was sacred and must not be interfered with. Any kind of a row can happen inside and it is nobody's right to interfere.

Again, at Pueblo, Colo., September 25, 1919, the President said:

There was not a man at that table who did not admit the sacredness of the right of self-determination, the sacredness of the right of any body of people to say that they would not continue to live under the Government they were then living under, and under article 11 of the covenant they are given a place to say whether they will live under it or not.

Now, Mr. President, I find myself in complete agreement with our Chief Executive in his avowal that the right of revolution is sacred.

But in his easy confidence that articles 10 and 11 amply protect that right, I am unable to share. I therefore offer this reservation, which protects in explicit terms the right which the President admits and which he professes he is anxious to protect. Certainly no man, sincere in his attachment to that right, can vote against such a safeguarding reservation.

In order to keep strictly within the time to which I have limited myself on each one of my proposed reservations I will simply say that article 11 of the covenant undoubtedly would be construed to bind the members of the league to suppress rebellion or revolution wherever rebellion or revolution may occur.

It provides that "any war" or even any "threat of war"—which, of course, includes rebellious and civil wars anywhere in the world—is the business of the league, and that the league shall take any action that may be deemed wise to preserve the peace; that is, to suppress the rebellion or put down the revolution.

Article 10 covers the whole field of wars of aggression and wars of nations against nations, so there can be no doubt that article 11 is intended and will be construed to bind us to aid Great Britain or any other imperialistic country to beat her unwilling subjects into submission.

The reservation proposed adopts the language of the Declaration of Independence, and simply prevents the United States from being obligated to help Great Britain put down rebellion in Ireland, in India, or Egypt, or elsewhere, or to help Japan or any other country engaged in exploiting weaker or less warlike people.

I want it clear upon the record that a vote against this reservation is a vote to line up the United States with the autocratic Governments of the world against the oppressed peoples of the world. It is a vote for a policy that would have doomed our Revolutionary War to failure and would have condemned George Washington and his associates as traitors and held the people of this country forever as vassals of Great Britain. It is in the final analysis a vote against the fundamental principle of the Declaration of Independence—the sacred right of revolution contended for by Jefferson and Lincoln. On this reservation I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CURTIS (when his name was called). Again making announcement of my pair with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] I withhold my vote.

Mr. GERRY (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND]. In his absence, I withhold my vote.

Mr. WATSON (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. WOLCOTT]. In his absence I withhold my vote. If I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CURTIS. I desire to announce that the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] is paired with the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. SMITH of Georgia (after having voted in the negative). I had risen to withdraw my vote. I find that the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], with whom I have a pair, has not voted. I therefore withdraw my vote.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I have a pair with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. ROBINSON. I have a pair with the senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] and vote "nay."

Mr. CURTIS. I wish to announce that the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PAGE] is paired with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], and that the Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER] is paired with the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST].

The result was announced—yeas 24, nays 49, as follows:

YEAS—24.

Ball	France	La Follette	Penrose
Borah	Frelinghuysen	McCormick	Phipps
Brandegee	Gore	Moses	Reed
Capper	Gronna	New	Shields
Elkins	Johnson, Calif.	Newberry	Wadsworth
Fernald	Jones, Wash.	Norris	Walsh, Mass.

NAYS—49.

Beckham	Johnson, S. Dak.	Nugent	Stanley
Colt	Jones, N. Mex.	Owen	Sterling
Dial	Kellogg	Pittman	Sutherland
Dillingham	Kendrick	Poindexter	Swanson
Edge	Kenyon	Pomerene	Thomas
Fletcher	Keyes	Ransdell	Trammell
Gay	King	Robinson	Underwood
Hale	Kirby	Sheppard	Walsh, Mont.
Harding	Lenroot	Smith, Ariz.	Warren
Harris	McCumber	Smith, Md.	Williams
Harrison	McKellar	Smith, S. C.
Henderson	McNary	Smoot
Hitchcock	Myers	Spencer

NOT VOTING—22.

Ashurst	Curtis	Nelson	Smith, Ga.
Bankhead	Fall	Overman	Townsend
Calder	Gerry	Page	Watson
Chamberlain	Knox	Phelan	Wolcott
Culberson	Lodge	Sherman
Cummins	McLean	Simmons

So Mr. LA FOLLETTE's reservation was rejected.

II. ABOLISHING CONSCRIPTION.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, before I offer the next reservation I want to submit for about three or four minutes some brief observations, which, in order to bring myself within a limited compass and not to waste my time, I have reduced to writing.

Do we really want a league of nations that shall insure an enduring peace? If we do, let us have done with fine spun sophistries and get down to bedrock fundamentals. Let us have no more diplomatic evasion; no more rhetorical flimflam. Let us dig down through the mass of falsehood under which the war makers have buried the real cause of all war, pluck it forth, and destroy it forever.

The formula is simple because it is born of truth.

Embody in the international agreement to be entered into, those terms which the experience of mankind proves will prevent future war.

Exact from each contracting nation binding covenants, with proper guarantees, to—

First. Abolish enforced military service.

Second. Declare or make no war, except to repel actual invasion of territory, without first submitting the question of war, or no war, to a vote of the qualified electors of the country.

If you want real peace that is the way to get it. If you want an enduring peace you can assure it by putting into the league of nations covenant those provisions. If this really was a war for democracy—and nobody now seriously asserts that it was—let us by our votes redeem our promises by taking the war-making power out of the hands of the rulers in all countries and putting it into the hands of the people in all countries.

We do not need to restrain the peoples of different countries from making war upon each other. We do need to restrain the ruling class of every country from inciting or compelling its people to war upon those of some other country. That is the cause of all war.

Put this matter into the hands of the people and they will speedily take care of the question of disarmament, both on land and on sea. They have no profits to make and no ambitions to further by the maintenance of a large army in time of peace. On the contrary, since the people must pay the bills for the Military Establishment they have every reason to see it reduced to the minimum even in time of peace. In time of war they have learned by bitter experience that theirs is the blood and treasure which is sacrificed, while the more favored classes reap the profits and the honors. The people, therefore, readily see what "statesmen" and "diplomats" apparently can not discern, namely, that if any country in the league of nations has an army or a navy substantially superior to that of the other countries, then the league of nations might better not exist, for it will make for war and not for peace. The people of this country can also be trusted to see so plain a thing as that we are concerned less about the size of the standing army that any European country may maintain than we are concerned about the size of the navy that any European country may maintain. That is the more important question.

The navy of one country of the league of nations—which, of course, to be effective must include all the great nations of the world—does not need to overmatch or, indeed, equal the combined strength of the other navies in order to make a mockery of the league. It only needs to be powerful enough so that, in combination with the navy of one or possibly two other countries, whose interests may be identical or similar in the case of any particular controversy, it can bid defiance to the combined naval strength of the remaining members of the league. A nation with a navy thus superior would bend every other nation in the league to its will. It would be immune to those restrictions which would be enforced against a weaker country, since the resistance of the latter, either alone or in combination, would not be feared. It would simply be the bully of the high seas. The naval supremacy of one nation of the league spells defeat for the entire plan.

The representatives of the United States at the peace conference surrendered without a protest to Great Britain that supreme privilege of having the Navy that should dominate the seven seas. It was the boast of Lloyd-George, made in June, 1917, shortly after we had entered the war, in his Glasgow speech, that Great Britain would rule the waves during the war and after the war; and Woodrow Wilson, without so much as an audible protest, surrendered to Great Britain the right to dominate the seas.

The right to dominate the seas is the right to dominate commerce, the right to dominate trade routes, the right to be master of the industrial and commercial world. That has been given away by the self-chosen representative of the people of the United States at the peace conference, and the Senate is about to ratify, cringingly and abjectly, the work of that representative.

Mr. President, the remedy is plain, if we desire to have a remedy for this sort of thing and to apply it. No nation must be permitted to maintain either an army or a navy so formidable that either alone or in combination with other countries likely to be united with it in interest will it be able to become a menace to the naval or military strength of the league.

I have reservations yet to be voted upon here which will, if adopted, save the United States from committing itself to the surrender to Great Britain and the other powers of the right to maintain naval and military establishments that will permit them to dominate the world. The reservation I now propose requires disarmament both upon the land and upon the high seas.

Shall we forget that we gave to the world as the moving reason for our going into the Great War the interference with our rights upon the high seas? Has any Senator in this Chamber, has any citizen of this country forgotten the rhetorical fulminations that emanated from Woodrow Wilson about the sacredness of our rights upon the seas—open pathways of commerce; the right to pursue our commerce peacefully and without interruption?

That was followed, Mr. President, by an appeal to Congress to challenge Germany to war because in trying to protect her people against starvation she had sunk three or four vessels. So we went to war for our sea rights. We did not conduct a war to maintain our sea rights. If we had, we would have had a naval war. But no; we opened, under the leadership of our Chief Magistrate, the dreamland of pursuing democracy into every quarter and corner of the globe; we conducted a land war in a foreign country; and after having made the issue upon our rights on the sea, we threw that into the dust heap and permitted Great Britain to come out of this war with the right to dominate the seas.

Sir, if we taxed our people—on top of the $30,000,000,000 of war taxes already imposed upon them—to the last limit of endurance, we could not catch up with Great Britain in her naval equipment in a period of 50 years. She will dominate the seas unless you adopt some provision here that will require a limitation. I have offered some reservations to that end.

Now, Mr. President, I propose reservation No. 2, and ask the Secretary to read it. I presume that will not come out of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WADSWORTH in the chair). The reservation proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

2. The United States hereby gives notice that it will withdraw from the league at the end of one year from the date of the exchange of ratifications of this treaty, unless within that time each member of the league shall abolish and discontinue the policy of maintaining its army or navy in time of peace by conscription.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is upon the reservation offered by the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, the vote upon this proposed reservation will give Senators an opportunity to record themselves for or against the policy of maintaining armies in time of peace by conscription.

The people of this country, having just fought a war to crush militarism in Germany, are not in favor of setting up a system in this country similar to that which has been destroyed abroad. The reservation I have proposed serves notice that the United States will retire from the league unless all members take the first step toward ending war by abolishing conscription. A vote against this reservation is a vote for conscription. Upon this reservation I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The yeas and nays have been requested. Is there a second.

Mr. GERRY. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I should like——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There seemed to have been a sufficient number to second the demand, and the presiding officer was about to announce that fact when the Senator from Rhode Island suggested the absence of a quorum.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I do not think that the count and announcement can be interrupted in that way. I ask for a report upon the demand made by me.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There were a sufficient number to second the demand.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. And the roll call is ordered?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes; the yeas and nays are ordered.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Now, the Senator from Rhode Island can have a roll call, if he wants it.

Mr. GERRY. I think I am entitled to have it anyway, Mr. President.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Well, I will ask for it in order to assure a good attendance here.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin suggest the absence of a quorum?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Yes, I do.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ball	Hale	McKellar	Shields
Capper	Harding	McNary	Smith, Md.
Chamberlain	Harris	Moses	Smith, S. C.
Colt	Jones, Wash.	Newberry	Smoot
Curtis	Kellogg	Norris	Spencer
Dillingham	Kenyon	Nugent	Sutherland
Fernald	Keyes	Overman	Swanson
Fletcher	King	Owen	Trammell
France	Kirby	Penrose	Underwood
Frelinghuysen	Knox	Phipps	Wadsworth
Gay	La Follette	Pittman	Walsh, Mass.
Gerry	Lenroot	Poindexter	Warren
Gore	McCormick	Reed	Watson
Gronna	McCumber	Sheppard

Mr. CURTIS. I again desire to announce the pair of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-five Senators having answered to their names, there is a quorum present.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I ask that the pending reservation be stated to the Senate before the roll call which has been ordered takes place.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state reservation No. 2, offered by the Senator from Wisconsin.

The Secretary read as follows:

2. The United States hereby gives notice that it will withdraw from the league at the end of one year from the date of the exchange of ratifications of this treaty, unless within that time each member of the league shall abolish and discontinue the policy of maintaining its army or navy in time of peace by conscription.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On this reservation the yeas and nays have been called for and ordered. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CURTIS (when his name was called). Again announcing my pair with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS], I withhold my vote.

Mr. GERRY (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as on the last roll call, I withhold my vote.

Mr. CURTIS (when Mr. LODGE's name was called). I again announce that the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] is paired with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. ROBINSON (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS]. If I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. WATSON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. WOLCOTT]. In his absence, I withhold my vote. If I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER] with the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST]; and

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. PAGE] with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD].

The roll call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 21, nays 54, as follows:

YEAS—21.

Borah	Gore	Knox	Reed
Brandegee	Gronna	La Follette	Sherman
Capper	Harding	McCormick	Walsh, Mass.
Fernald	Johnson, Calif.	Moses
France	Jones, Wash.	Norris
Frelinghuysen	Kenyon	Penrose

NAYS—54.

Ball	Johnson, S. Dak.	Nugent	Spencer
Beckham	Jones, N. Mex.	Overman	Stanley
Chamberlain	Kellogg	Phelan	Sterling

Dillingham	King	Poindexter	Thomas
Edge	Kirby	Pomerene	Trammell
Fletcher	Lenroot	Ransdell	Underwood
Gay	McCumber	Sheppard	Wadsworth
Hale	McKellar	Shields	Walsh, Mont.
Harris	McNary	Smith, Ariz.	Warren
Harrison	Myers	Smith, Md.	Williams
Henderson	New	Smith, S. C.
Hitchcock	Newberry	Smoot

NOT VOTING—20.

Ashurst	Curtis	McLean	Simmons
Bankhead	Elkins	Nelson	Smith, Ga.
Calder	Fall	Owen	Townsend
Culberson	Gerry	Page	Watson
Cummins	Lodge	Robinson	Wolcott

So reservation No. 2, offered by Mr. LA FOLLETTE, was rejected.

III. GIVING THE PEOPLE OF ALL NATIONS A REFERENDUM VOTE ON WAR.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I offer now reservation No. 3, page 2 of the leaflet, on which is printed the reservations that I submitted and which I gave notice that I would call up.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the proposed reservation.

The Secretary read as follows:

3. The United States hereby gives notice that it will withdraw from the league at the end of five years from the date of the exchange of ratifications of this treaty, unless within that time each member of the league shall have agreed that in no case will it resort to war except to suppress an insurrection or repel an actual invasion of its territory until an advisory vote of its people has first been taken on the question of peace or war.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, there is an opportunity here now to test the genuineness of the professions made that this was a "war to end war."

If that was not a hypocritical pretense, then there should be embodied somewhere in the covenant that creates this league of nations and defines its power some provision with respect to leaving to the people who are to fight the wars and pay the debts which war entails some voice in the determination of whether or not the war shall be fought.

I tender this reservation as defining that issue, and on it, Mr. President, knowing well what its fate will be here, but having faith as to what this issue may mean when it is presented to the people of the country, as it will be, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CURTIS (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before in reference to my pair, I withhold my vote.

Mr. GERRY (when his name was called). I make the same announcement of my pair as on the last vote, and withhold my vote.

Mr. CURTIS (when the name of Mr. SMITH of Georgia was called). I announce the pair of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH].

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. GERRY. I wish to announce that the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK], the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], and the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] are necessarily absent.

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested to announce that the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PAGE] is paired with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], and that the Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER] is paired with the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST].

Mr. KIRBY. I announce the necessary absence of the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], who is paired with the senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS].

The result was announced—yeas 13, nays 58, as follows:

YEAS—13.

Borah	Fernald	Jones, Wash.	Sherman
Brandegee	France	La Follette
Capper	Gore	Norris
Elkins	Gronna	Penrose

NAYS—58.

Beckham	Jones, N. Mex.	Nugent	Spencer
Chamberlain	Kellogg	Overman	Stanley
Colt	Kendrick	Owen	Sterling
Dial	Kenyon	Phipps	Sutherland
Dillingham	Keyes	Pittman	Swanson
Edge	King	Poindexter	Thomas
Fletcher	Kirby	Pomerene	Trammell
Frelinghuysen	Lenroot	Ransdell	Underwood
Gay	McCumber	Reed	Wadsworth
Hale	McKellar	Sheppard	Walsh, Mass.
Harding	McNary	Shields	Walsh, Mont.
Harris	Moses	Smith, Ariz.	Warren
Harrison	Myers	Smith, Md.	Williams
Henderson	New	Smith, S. C.
Johnson, S. Dak.	Newberry	Smoot

NOT VOTING—24.

Ashurst	Curtis	Lodge	Robinson
Ball	Fall	McCormick	Simmons
Bankhead	Gerry	McLean	Smith, Ga.
Calder	Hitchcock	Nelson	Townsend
Culberson	Johnson, Calif.	Page	Watson
Cummins	Knox	Phelan	Wolcott

So Mr. LA FOLLETTE's reservation No. 3 was rejected.

IV. LIMITATION OF ARMAMENTS.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I offer reservation numbered 4 of the reservations printed on the leaflet, which I have heretofore presented to the Senate and had read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the proposed reservation.

The Secretary read as follows:

4. The United States hereby gives notice that it will withdraw from the league of nations at the end of any year during a period of five years from the date of the exchange of ratifications of this treaty, unless during each and every year of the five-year period every member of the league now expending in excess of $50,000,000 for the maintenance of its military forces or in excess of a like sum for the maintenance of its naval establishment shall fail to reduce such expenditures by a sum equal to one-fifth of the amount, by which the total annual expenditure for the maintenance of military forces or naval establishment, respectively, exceeds the sum of $50,000,000 for either, to the end that by the close of the period of five years from the date of the exchange of ratifications of this treaty no member of the league of nations shall expend for the maintenance of its military forces or its naval establishment, respectively, an amount in excess of $50,000,000 per annum; and the United States gives notice that it will withdraw from the league of nations at the end of any year thereafter whenever any member expends for the maintenance of its military forces or its naval establishment, respectively, an amount in excess of $50,000,000 per annum.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President——

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator a question. Suppose this applied to nations inside of the league, and suppose the great nations remaining outside of the league do not cut down their military departments, what then?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Then the combination of the nations inside of the league, with their 50,000,000 men, would snuff them out of existence.

Mr. REED. I think not.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. There are only three or four nations outside of the league.

Mr. REED. No; more than half the white people of Europe.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Oh, yes; but you have stripped—but I do not want this to come out of my time. I ask for a yea-and-nay vote on this proposition.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the fourth reservation offered by the Senator from Wisconsin, and on that the yeas and nays have been ordered. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CURTIS (when his name was called). I announce my pair with the senior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] and withhold my vote.

Mr. ROBINSON (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS]. He is absent. I therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE]. In his absence I withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I would vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. GERRY. Making the same announcement of my pair as on previous votes, I withhold my vote.

Mr. ROBINSON. I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] to the senior Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN] and vote "nay."

Mr. CURTIS. I wish to announce that the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PAGE] is paired with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], and that the Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER] is paired with the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST].

Mr. GERRY. The Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] is necessarily absent from the Senate.

The result was announced—yeas 10, nays 60, as follows:

YEAS—10.

Borah	Elkins	Johnson, Calif.	Penrose
Brandegee	France	La Follette
Capper	Gronna	Norris

NAYS—60.

Ball	Henderson	Moses	Smith, S. C.

Fall	Myers	Simmons

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. PAGE] with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD]; and

The Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER] with the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST].

So Mr. LA FOLLETTE's reservation No. 4 was rejected.

V. PREVENTION OF FORCIBLE ANNEXATIONS.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I now offer the reservation numbered 5 on the leaflet which I have sent to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the proposed reservation.

The Secretary read as follows:

5. The United States hereby gives notice that it will withdraw from the league of nations whenever any member or members of the league of nations shall attempt to acquire the whole or any part of the territory of any member or of any nation not a member of the league of nations against the will and without the full and free consent of the people of such member or of such nation not a member of the league of nations.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, just one sentence. This reservation simply gives notice that we will not stay in the league of nations and be made a party to the forcible seizure of the territory of weaker peoples. On this reservation I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CURTIS (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as on previous votes, I withhold my vote.

Mr. GERRY (when his name was called). Making the same announcement of my pair that I previously made, I withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota (after having voted in the negative). I have a pair with the Senator from Maine [Mr. FERNALD]. I notice that he is not present. I therefore withdraw my vote.

Mr. ROBINSON. I have a pair with the senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] which I transfer to the senior Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], and vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 19, nays 51, as follows:

YEAS—19.

Ball	France	Kenyon	Norris
Borah	Gore	Knox	Penrose

So Mr. LA FOLLETTE's reservation No. 5 was rejected.

VI. PROHIBITING THE USE OF MANDATES OVER WEAKER STATES FOR EXPLOITATION OF THE INHABITANTS AND RESOURCES OF THE COUNTRY.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I now offer the reservation numbered 6, which is the last of the reservations that I shall propose.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the proposed reservation.

The Secretary read as follows:

6. The United States hereby gives notice that it will withdraw from the league of nations whenever any member, exercising a mandate or a protectorate over any country, or claiming and exercising a sphere of influence in or over any country, shall, without the free and full consent of the people of such country, appropriate the natural resources thereof, or shall, directly or indirectly, aid any individual or corporation alien to such country to acquire any right or title to, or any concession in its natural resources, or right or title to its property, real or personal, or shall fail or neglect, within such authority or influence as it may properly exercise, to preserve in trust for the people of such country all right and title to and in its natural resources and real and personal property, or shall fail to exercise such mandate, protectorate, or sphere of influence over such country for the sole benefit of the people thereof.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, the league covenant parcels out hundreds of millions of people called weak and unable to take care of themselves to become the wards of different members of the league under what are called mandates. This action is taken upon the assumption that these people need a guardianship; and it is proposed to extend this guardianship over them through the league of nations.

Mr. President, the reservation which I have offered makes the trust binding upon the league of nations. It provides that the great powers acting as mandatories shall take care of these weaker nations as wards and take care of their property as a sacred trust; that the wards shall not be robbed. That is all there is to it.

If this be not a scheme to exploit the weaker nations, to take away from them their coal and their oil and all of their natural resources, under the pretense of development, for the benefit of those who have the mandates, then you will adopt this reservation. If you are in favor of robbing these people—these weaker nations—through mandates, you will vote down the reservation that I have offered. On this reservation I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. President, there is certainly no one who is more firmly convinced than am I that the whole section or sermon or mandatories in the covenant of the league is a shabby sham; but, nevertheless, I for one, desiring that we should have no part in this covenant of duplicity, do not feel that I ought to support a reservation which seeks to dictate to the other nations how they should conduct themselves.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, before the Senator from Illinois sits down, if he will permit me in his time——

Mr. McCORMICK. In my time; yes.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. All that this reservation proposes to do if we go into this league is to serve notice upon the other members of the league that unless they treat this as a sacred trust we will withdraw from the league.

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. President, I share the view of the Senator from Wisconsin as to the character of these mandates; but I can not bring myself to vote for a reservation which appears to me to dictate the conduct of the members of the league as regards these weaker peoples.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, in my own time I will merely say in response that all that this reservation says to the members of this compact is, "If we go into this thing, you shall agree that the administration of the property of these wards shall be honest." That is the reservation and all there is to it; that "you shall be honest and shall discharge your trust or we will not join you." I am unable to understand how the Senator from Illinois or any Senator can say that that is a dictation to the other members of the league, further than any man who joined in the execution of a trust ought to dictate that if he is to be made a party to the trust the trust shall be faithfully discharged. That is all the reservation does.

Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays, unless some other Senator desires to speak.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, it seems to me that the logic of the Senator from Wisconsin is somewhat faulty. The league of nations, under the plan which has been devised, is to assume a mandatory control over the peoples inhabiting certain colonies and territories formerly belonging to members of the Central Empires with which our country and the allied nations were at war. These colonies and peoples form a sacred trust of civilization, and the obligation rests upon these nations to whom Germany ceded her colonies, by the terms of the treaty, to see that this trust is scrupulously performed.

The contention of the Senator rests upon the theory that if a trustee violates his trust and robs the cestui que trust, then his cotrustees should flee and thus aid him in his perfidy or defalcation. It seems to me that the duty of the other trustees, the other members of the league, is to watch the trustees designated and provided in the league, and if one of them attempts to default, if one of them attempts to impose upon the ward intrusted to its care, if one of them attempts to rob and plunder the ward, that it should be the sacred duty of the other trustees to more earnestly devote themselves to the discharge of their duties and to the protection of the peoples wronged or oppressed. They should insist that the nations named as trustees or mandatories should live up to the letter and spirit of the trust and administer the affairs of the colonies intrusted to their care in a just and righteous manner and for the security and advancement of the inhabitants thereof.

Of course, every trustee assumes the obligation or the duties of his position with the asseveration upon his lips that he is going to be honest, that he is going to discharge with fidelity the trust committed to his care; but the courts and those who are connected with him, because of that asseveration, do not release him from observation and the obligations the law imposes.

If they detect that he is defaulting or is guilty of any delinquency, they increase their vigilance and stretch out their arms and bring him to a realization of his obligations, and, if necessary, to the bar of justice.

It seems to me, Mr. President, that the plan of the Senator from Wisconsin is one which should not commend itself to the judgment of practical and rational men.

The title to the German colonies is vested by the treaty in the associated and allied nations. It was understood by Germany when she signed the treaty that the people residing within such possessions should be protected and their rights guarded. The United States should insist that the terms of the treaty be observed and that every nation acting as a mandatory should scrupulously guard the interests of those subject to the control conferred by the treaty. If this Nation should withdraw from the league because a mandatory nation failed in its duty, it would be condoning a wrong and aiding in the continuation of a wrong.

Suppose that the league of nations becomes operative and Great Britain or Japan or France becomes a mandatory of the league and has given to its care the custody of one of the colonies of Germany or Turkey, with the weak and feeble people therein, and suppose that such mandatory should become imbued with imperialistic designs or by selfish, lustful desires, and utterly fails to discharge its obligations, and seeks the exploitation of the people and their enslavement. Instead of the United States withdrawing from the league the United States ought to stretch forth its puissant arm and say to the mandatory, "You must discharge the duty resting upon you or we will bring you before the bar of justice and the council of the league, and before the public opinion of the world, and brand you as a nation that has failed to discharge a sacred obligation and a trust affecting the welfare of weak and helpless peoples." By this course the United States would serve humanity and restrain imperialism and oppression and compel the performance of a duty arising from obligations solemnly entered into.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, that comes as a beautiful theory from a Senator who on this floor, every time the occasion has been presented, has voted to deprive the United States of having an equal number of votes with Great Britain, the one member of the league that is in a position to reap the richest possible results from the mandatory system.

There is no better way to impress upon the nations who take mandates that the condemnation of this Government, when it becomes a member, will be visited upon them unless they discharge their duty than to announce and write into the resolution of ratification that in the event of their default the United States will withdraw. We will be outnumbered. We are taking none of these mandatories that have benefits attached. We are not going into the business of destroying weaker peoples; the other nations are, as I showed in the speech that I delivered this afternoon, as will appear in the RECORD. Mr. President, we will have one vote there to bring these nations to terms and make them execute their sacred trust, and we will be voted down. What then?

Mr. President, they want us in this league; they want us very badly, because they have imposed upon us very great burdens. They expect us to furnish the troops that are needed; they expect us to back financially all of the undertakings of the league; and if we impose conditions upon our entering they will accept those conditions. If we impose the condition that this league shall not be converted into a system of robbing all of the weaker nations of the earth, and get that recognized at the outset, we may possibly be able to hold them to a somewhat decent execution of the trust that is committed to them.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I do not wish to let this moment pass without trying to say in two minutes what I should like to say at length. This entire treaty is filled up with catchwords and soft phrases calculated to mask villainous intents. Among these is the gentle word "mandatory." A mandate, however, means nothing but the military occupancy of the territory of a conquered people; it is a power to be enforced by fire and sword; it bears no relationship whatever to a trust; and when we speak of beneficence in connection with it it is like speaking of the acts of Satan in the gentle language of eulogy.

Certain of the great nations have seized all of the habitable world that was incapable of defending itself; they propose to establish themselves in rulership over it; and they denominate that rulership a mandatory, but they will hold all their possessions by armed bodies, and it is proposed to put back of those armed bodies the entire strength of all the armies and all the navies of all the great members of the league. That is all there is to this mandatory business. It is another hypocritical pretense; it is another mask for infamy and theft, and when we talk about it here in the Senate as though it were a sacred trust to be sacredly executed we mock the facts and we insult our own intelligence.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CURTIS (when his name was called). I make the same announcement as on the previous roll call, and withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. GERRY. Making the same announcement as before, I withhold my vote.

Mr. ROBINSON. Again announcing my pair with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS], I transfer that pair to the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] and vote "nay."

Mr. GERRY. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] to the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] and vote "nay."

Mr. HENDERSON (after having voted in the negative). Has the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. MCCORMICK] voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. HENDERSON. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Illinois, and withdraw my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 23, nays 51, as follows:

YEAS—23.

Borah	Frelinghuysen	La Follette	Phipps

So Mr. LA FOLLETTE's proposed reservation No. 6 was rejected.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, I move the fourth of the reservations offered by me, which I ask the Secretary to read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The reservation will be stated.

The Secretary read as follows:

4. The provisions of article 11 shall in no respect abridge the rights of free speech, the liberty of the press, and the advocacy of the principles of national independence and self-determination of any people or peoples; and no circumstance directly related to the enjoyment of any of the aforesaid rights shall be construed as providing any member of the league with cause to declare that the exercise of such aforesaid rights as heretofore construed under the provisions of the Constitution of the United States warrants the assembly or council in determining what course of action, legal measures of control, or regulation shall be enforced or prescribed by the United States.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, at this late hour, and with the Senate very tired, I do not propose to make any speech upon this reservation. I do not, however, want the brevity of my remarks to be construed to indicate that I do not consider it a very important reservation.

The language of article 11 is broad in its scope. Under it almost any circumstance likely to disturb the good understanding between nations may be brought up for consideration. It seems to me there are some fundamental American rights that ought to be reserved, such as free speech, freedom of the press, and the advocacy of the principle of national independence and self-determination.

On a previous occasion I pointed out the fact that certain domestic questions may, under certain circumstances, become questions of great international importance; and it is very possible that our right of free speech and the freedom of the press, and especially the advocacy of national independence here by people from other countries, may become a circumstance of very great and serious international importance.

It seems to me that we ought not to leave the door so wide open and the provisions of article 11 so broad as by any possibility to have fundamental American rights put in jeopardy or subject to review by the league, or even leave it open to have advice given us by the league of nations as to our exercise and enjoyment of these rights. This reservation, therefore, seeks to remove any possibility of the abridgment by the league of nations of these inalienable American rights; and I think the least that the Senate should do is to reserve from consideration under article 11 these precious rights that always have been prized and considered of inestimable value by the American people.

In a word, the reservation I propose seeks to prevent any abridgment through this covenant of certain fundamental American rights and restricts the consideration of circumstances which relate to the enjoyment of the rights of free speech, liberty of the press, and the advocacy of the principle of national independence of any people.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President, I make my apologies to the Senate for detaining it for even a minute, but I want the RECORD to show what became of the principle of self-determination at Paris. In order that the RECORD may show that fact, I read the original article which was transmuted ultimately into article 10, taken by President Wilson to Paris, and which contained the principle of self-determination, and contained it in words there was no mistaking.

Here is the original article taken by the President to Paris. It is article 3:

The contracting powers unite in guaranteeing to each other political independence and territorial integrity; but it is understood between them that such territorial readjustments, if any, as may in the future become necessary by reason of changes in present racial conditions and aspirations or present social and political relationships, pursuant to the principle of self-determination, and also such territorial readjustments as may in the judgment of three-fourths of the delegates be demanded by the welfare and manifest interest of the peoples concerned, may be effected if agreeable to those peoples, and that territorial changes may in equity involve material compensation. The contracting powers accept without reservation the principle that the peace of the world is superior in importance to every question of political jurisdiction or boundary.

That is the original article 10. That is the article 10 taken by President Wilson to Paris. That article 10 provides for readjustment on the principle of self-determination. I read, that it may be in juxtaposition, the present article 10:

The members of the league undertake to respect and preserve as against external aggression the territorial integrity and existing political independence of all members of the league. In case of any such aggression, or in case of any threat or danger of such aggression, the council shall advise upon the means by which this obligation shall be fulfilled.

The President took to Paris a means whereby, under the principle of self-determination, there should be readjustments. That principle was eliminated. He took there his method of readjustment upon that principle. He came back without the principle of self-determination and with a scheme under which there could be no readjustments at all.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the reservation offered by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH]. On that the yeas and nays have been requested.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CURTIS (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the senior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS]. Were I permitted to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. WATSON (when his name was called). In the absence of my pair, the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. WOLCOTT], I withhold my vote. If permitted to vote, I should vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. GERRY. I have a pair with the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND]. I therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. ROBINSON. I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] to the junior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] and vote "nay."

Mr. CURTIS. I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] to the senior Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] and vote "yea."

I have been requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER] with the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST];

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. PAGE] with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD]; and

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. KENDRICK].

The result was announced—yeas 36, nays 42, as follows:

So the reservation proposed by Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts was rejected.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I give notice that I shall move in the Senate the reservation just voted upon.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Are there any further reservations? There being no further reservations, the Senate has under consideration, as in Committee of the Whole, the treaty with Germany, and has made certain reservations thereto. The question is, Will the Senate concur in the reservations made as in the Committee of the Whole? The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] has reserved a vote on the amendment offered by the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE]. Are there any further reservations? There being none, shall the vote on concurring in each reservation be put separately or shall it be put en bloc?

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I understood the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] reserved a vote upon one of the reservations.

The VICE PRESIDENT. On which reservation?

Mr. JOHNSON of California. On the reservation I offered which was voted on to-day. But I understood that that might be offered in the Senate.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I suggest that we vote upon the reservations separately.

Mr. LODGE. That requires reserving all of them.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That means, then, under the rule, that the Senate will vote on each one separately.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. There is no necessity of reserving a vote upon any reservation unless it was affirmatively carried?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Certainly not.

Mr. SMOOT. That is what I understand.

Mr. LODGE. My attention was diverted for the moment. I understood the request was that there should be a separate vote, not a block vote. That involves reserving each reservation, does it not?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is not permitted to say what he thinks about these rules; but the rule is that the vote on amendments or reservations may be taken separately or in gross, if no Senator shall object.

Mr. LODGE. If objection is made, the vote must be taken separately.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Will the Senate concur in the first reservation?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I understand that the decision is that they are to be voted on separately?

The VICE PRESIDENT. There having been an objection to their consideration en bloc, there must be a separate vote on each reservation.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. I understood that the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL] suggested that the reservations be voted on separately. I did not know whether he meant that by way of an objection or not.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Yes; there was an objection; and I would make one if no one else did.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Very well.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. When the first reservation proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts was adopted I reserved the right to move to strike out all after the word "ratification," on line 3, so that nothing would remain except these words:

The reservations and understandings adopted by the Senate are to be made a part and a condition of the resolution of ratification.

That part to be stricken out reads as follows:

Which ratification is not to take effect or bind the United States until the said reservations and understandings adopted by the Senate have been accepted by an exchange of notes as a part and a condition of said resolution of ratification by at least three of the four principal allied and associated powers, to wit, Great Britain, France, Italy, and Japan.

Now, Mr. President, I move that all after the word "ratification," on line 3, be stricken out.

Mr. LODGE. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CURTIS (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] to the senior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] and vote "nay."

Mr. KENDRICK (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL], which I transfer to the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] and vote "yea."

Mr. WATSON (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. WOLCOTT] and I withhold my vote. If permitted to vote, I would vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. EDGE (after having voted in the negative). Has the junior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. EDGE. I have a general pair with that Senator and in his absence I withdraw my vote.

Mr. ROBINSON. Announcing my pair with the senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS], I withhold my vote.

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested to announce that the Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER] is paired with the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], and that the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PAGE] is paired with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD].

Mr. GERRY. I wish to announce that the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS], and the Senator from Delaware [Mr. WOLCOTT] are necessarily absent from the Senate.

The result was announced—yeas 36, nays 45, as follows:

YEAS—36.

So Mr. HITCHCOCK's amendment to reservation No. 1, proposed by Mr. LODGE, was rejected.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, in order to save the time of the Senate, so far as I am concerned, I can see no objection to voting on the other reservations en bloc. I see objection to agreeing to them, but there is no objection to voting on them en bloc.

Mr. LODGE. There is one that has been reserved for a separate vote, but it will take only a few moments, I think, to dispose of it if the roll is not called.

The VICE PRESIDENT. With the exception of reservation numbered 5, the question is on concurring in the reservations made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. LODGE. No; I thought we were to vote on each one merely without calling the roll.

The VICE PRESIDENT. No; we were going to vote on all en bloc, except No. 5.

Mr. LODGE. If we are to take a vote en bloc, I desire to reserve, in addition to No. 5, reservation No. 4, and ask for a vote on it, because there is no record vote on it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Reservations Nos. 4 and 5 are reserved for a separate vote.

Mr. WADSWORTH. May I follow the same procedure and ask that No. 12 be likewise reserved?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Nos. 4, 5, and 12 are reserved. The question is on concurring in the other reservations made as in Committee of the Whole, proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE].

The reservations, with the exception of those numbered 4, 5, and 12, were concurred in.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question now is on concurring in reservation No. 4.

Mr. PENROSE. Let the reservation be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read.

The Secretary read as follows:

4. No mandate shall be accepted by the United States under article 22, part 1, or any other provision of the treaty of peace with Germany, except by action of the Congress of the United States.

Mr. LODGE. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CURTIS (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as on the previous vote with reference to my pair and its transfer, I vote "yea."

Mr. KENDRICK (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as previously made with reference to my pair and its transfer, and asking that the announcement may stand for the day, I vote "nay."

Mr. WATSON (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. WOLCOTT] and withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I would vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. ROBINSON. Again announcing my pair with the senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS], I withhold my vote.

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested to announce that the Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER] is paired with the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] and that the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PAGE] is paired with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD].

The result was announced—yeas 52, nays 31, as follows:

So reservation No. 4, made as in Committee of the Whole, was concurred in.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on concurring in reservation No. 5.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, in reservation No. 5 an amendment was made which is not in the print which I have. Will the Secretary kindly read it?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

The SECRETARY. Amendment offered by the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE]: In the reservation print in bill form on line 25, after the word "question," the following words were inserted in Committee of the Whole:

And all questions affecting the present boundaries of the United States and its insular or other possessions.

So that it now reads as follows:

5. The United States reserves to itself exclusively the right to decide what questions are within its domestic jurisdiction, and declares that all domestic and political questions relating wholly or in part to its internal affairs, including immigration, labor, coastwise traffic, the tariff, commerce, the suppression of traffic in women and children and in opium and other dangerous drugs, and all other domestic questions, and all questions affecting the present boundaries of the United States and its insular or other possessions, are solely within the jurisdition of the United States—

And so forth.

Mr. LODGE. That amendment was of necessity hastily prepared, as it was only prepared in the morning of the day when the cloture rule was adopted. I approved it and voted for it myself. On further consideration I came to the conclusion that it went too far and interfered with questions which are in their very nature international, and that it was, I thought, sufficiently provided for in other parts of the reservation. I reserved it for this purpose, and I shall be very glad if the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] would be willing to withdraw it.

Mr. HALE. I think there is a good deal of force in what the Senator from Massachusetts says. However, if I were permitted to offer an amendment at the present time, which I understand I am not, I think that by transposing two or three words I could obviate the objection of the Senator from Massachusetts. I shall, therefore, ask unanimous consent to make such an amendment at the present time. I will ask the Secretary to read my proposed amendment.

Mr. KNOX. I object. I wish further to congratulate the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE], who offered the amendment, and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], who voted for the amendment, in having at last realized what I called to the attention of the Senate at the time, the manifest absurdity of the amendment. The idea of trying to place all questions affecting boundaries within the exclusive jurisdiction of the United States struck me instantly as being preposterous.

Not only that, but the immediate effect of the ratification of the treaty with such a provision in it would have been to have abrogated the existing treaty between the United States and Canada under which all boundary questions are referred to a joint commission of representatives of the two countries. The amendment seems to have been prepared upon the theory that a boundary question only meant a boundary line. The great and grave and important boundary questions arising between this country and Canada are those affecting our boundary waters, and the disposition and use of diversion of those waters, as well as other questions that relate to the boundaries.

I conclude as I began by congratulating both the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE].

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, in view of the statement of the Senator from Massachusetts and of the request of the Senator from Massachusetts, I can do nothing but withdraw my amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is "going some." [Laughter.] Oh, no; the Chair can not permit that. The Senate has voted upon the amendment, and nothing can be done except to move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. To reconsider in the Senate a vote taken as in Committee of the Whole?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Certainly. The Senator has reserved a vote on this amendment.

Mr. LODGE. I have reserved a vote; but I do not think it is necessary to reconsider, is it?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It has been made a part of the reservation by amendment.

Mr. LODGE. But, surely, when we go into the Senate we do not reconsider a vote taken in Committee of the Whole?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair so rules; and under the agreement it is not discussable. If the Senator desires to appeal, he can do so.

Mr. LODGE. Oh, no; I have no desire to appeal. I move to reconsider the vote whereby the amendment was agreed to.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question now is, Shall the amendment be agreed to?

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, what has become of the amendment?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment is now pending.

Mr. LODGE. Then, the vote will be to agree or to disagree to it?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing or disagreeing to the Hale amendment.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I do not desire to be heard upon the pending matter, but I rise simply to remark that I voted "nay" upon the reservation immediately preceding reservation No. 4, in the entire conviction that it is utterly unnecessary; that no mandate can be accepted by the United States except by act of Congress, and I am sure I speak the conviction of every Senator on this side of the Chamber who voted with me.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE]. [Putting the question.] The amendment is not concurred in. The question is on concurring in the reservation.

The reservation was concurred in.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question now is on concurring in reservation No. 12.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that an amendment be considered to reservation No. 12 in order that an obvious error in phraseology may be corrected. On page 5 of the leaflet containing the reservation, line 15, I move to strike out the words "said article 16" and in their place to substitute the words "its covenants," so that that portion of the sentence will read:

Or in countries other than that violating its covenants.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I think I shall have to continue by objection to that, following the illustrious example of the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. WADSWORTH. In doing so the Senator from Nebraska contributes to good legislation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on concurring in reservation No. 12.

The reservation was concurred in.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, does that dispose of the reservations that have been adopted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It disposes of all reservations made in Committee of the Whole and of all amendments offered to such reservations in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. REED. The question is still open to reservation?

The VICE PRESIDENT. To reservations and other amendments.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, it was not necessary to reserve the privilege, I take it, but I did, as a matter of notice to the Senate, say that I would reserve for separate vote in the Senate reservation 15 as reported by the Committee on Foreign Relations and defeated in Committee of the Whole. It is the reservation that provides that the United States shall retain in itself the right to decide what questions affect its vital interests and national honor.

I call attention to the fact, as stated by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX], that it is by such a reservation that questions like the one sought to be covered by the reservation offered by the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] may be taken care of. There has been a misapprehension about this reservation. It never was reported by the committee or suggested to the committee for the purpose of destroying or weakening the treaty.

It was intended that, if adopted, it would be acted upon and construed in good faith; that the United States could be trusted never to claim that a question was vital to it and affected its very life unless, in the opinion of the Government of the United States, that should be the fact, for it was intended and believed that the United States would never assert that its honor was at stake and that it could not afford to submit the question because its honor was at stake unless it could say that was the opinion of the Government of the United States. It was offered by the committee, I am sure—and I suggested it to the committee—in the best of faith, in the hope of improving the treaty, believing, as I did at that time, that the treaty would probably be adopted and, perhaps, even yet may ultimately be adopted, and if adopted that the vital interests of the United States and the honor of the United States ought to be within the custody and control of this Government alone. Therefore, I am going to ask if we can not have another roll call upon the reservation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair understands the Senator from Missouri offers a reservation, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add as a new reservation the following:

15. The United States reserves to itself exclusively the right to decide what questions affect its honor or its vital interests and declares that such questions are not under this treaty to be submitted in any way either to arbitration or to the consideration of the council or of the assembly of the league of nations or any agency thereof or to the decision or recommendation of any other power.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the reservation offered by the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. REED. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CURTIS (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] and therefore withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. ROBINSON. Again announcing my pair with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS], I withhold my vote.

Mr. ASHURST. I inquire if the junior Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER] has voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. ASHURST. I am paired with that Senator until 10 o'clock, and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested to announce that the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PAGE] is paired with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD].

So Mr. REED'S reservation was rejected.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I offer the reservation which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The reservation will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add, as a new reservation, the following:

The protectorate in Great Britain over Egypt is understood to be merely a means through which the nominal suzerainty of Turkey over Egypt shall be transferred to the Egyptian people, and shall not be construed as a recognition by the United States of any sovereign rights over the Egyptian people in Great Britain or as depriving the people of Egypt of any of their rights of self-government and independence.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I want to say to my colleagues that I would not offer this reservation if it had not become entirely obvious that the final ratification of the treaty can only be accomplished with reservations, and I think this reservation is entirely interpretative and is not in any way a change of the existing treaty.

I want to call attention particularly to article 147, to wit:

Germany declares that she recognizes the protectorate proclaimed over Egypt by Great Britain on December 18, 1914, and that she renounces the régime of the capitulations in Egypt.

This renunciation shall take effect as from August 4, 1914.

Article 148——

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, let us have order.

Mr. OWEN. I ask for order. I have taken only 12 minutes of the time of the Senate, so I am entitled to present this matter.

Article 148. All treaties—

I ask Senators to desist from conversation on the floor—

All treaties, agreements, arrangements, and contracts concluded by Germany with Egypt are regarded as abrogated as from August 4, 1914.

In no case can Germany avail herself of these instruments and she undertakes not to intervene in any way in negotiations relating to Egypt which may take place between Great Britain and the other powers.

Showing that this treaty contemplates negotiations with other powers regarding the government of Egypt.

Now, I call attention to the fact that Egypt gained her independence by the sword in 1840. She took the war to Constantinople, and would have controlled Constantinople and overthrown the Turkish Government except for the powers of Europe. She managed her own affairs under a merely nominal suzerainty, in which Turkey interefered in no respect whatever with her internal management; but under Ishmael Pasha she incurred a great debt in building the Suez Canal and in putting irrigation plants and dams in the valley of the Nile for the purpose of making that country capable of producing food for the Egyptian people. Ishmael Pasha placed those bonds in Paris and in London, and in order to safeguard those bonds Great Britain undertook to open negotiations with the Khedive, who was in great distress over his debts, for the management of Egyptian finances.

The Egyptian people protested against it. It resulted in riots, because of European domination of the finances of Egypt. Great Britain thereupon, with the consent of the powers, in order to protect the bondholders who held the bonds of Egypt, bombarded Alexandria and put in a military force and sustained the Khedive by military power, and thereafter, in a greater or less degree, exercised the powers of government indirectly over the Egyptian people; but, when that was done, assurances were given to the Egyptian people that it was not intended to interfere with their independence. The admiral who bombarded Alexandria, and who took charge at that time, made the statement to them that—

The sole object is to protect Your Highness—

That is, the Khedive, who, by the way, was governing by divine right, a thing against which we fought in this war, sustained by Great Britain in this instance—

The sole object is to protect Your Highness and the Egyptian people against the rebels.

The rebels were those who were protesting against European domination of their Government.

When in 1914 the protectorate was declared over Egypt, because the then existing Khedive was making overtures to Germany and was practically conspiring against Great Britain in the war, Great Britain deposed the Khedive by military force and put another Khedive, his nephew, in his place, but the King of Great Britain, or his minister in his name, addressed this communication to the Egyptians, to wit:

I feel convinced that you—

The new sovereign—

will be able, with the cooperation of your ministers and the protectorate of Great Britain, to overcome all influences which are seeking to destroy the independence of Egypt.

Those people were given to understand that their independence was being fought for in this war, and they contributed 1,200,000 soldiers; they carried on the campaign protecting the Suez Canal and in Palestine and Arabia. Now the question comes before the Senate as to whether we will leave without any interpretation this item recognizing a protectorate, which Gladstone said in 1882, and the ministers from that time down to 1914 declared, would not be established.

I think it is only fair that the Egyptians, it is only fair to the principles for which we fought this war, that there should be an interpretation of this item of the treaty consistently with the declarations made by the United States, by Great Britain, by France, by Italy, and finally by the President of the United States at the peace conference when this peace treaty was drawn up.

I want you to listen to the President's words.

At the plenary council of the peace conference on January 25, 1919, at which it was decided to include a league of nations in the treaty of peace, President Wilson delivered the principal address, and in it he said——

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President——

Mr. OWEN. I yield.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. There is very good attention upon the Democratic side of the Senate, but there is considerable conversation upon the Republican side. I want to state to the Republican Members of the Senate that the Senator from Oklahoma is reading something that President Woodrow Wilson said, and I am sure they would like to hear it. It bears upon the question that they are going to vote upon in a few minutes, and I ask for better order on this side.

Mr. OWEN. It was said at a very important time. It was said when the treaty was submitted to the plenary council in Paris. He said this, and I beg Senators to listen to this:

We are here to see that every people of the world shall choose its own masters and govern its own destinies, not as we wish, but as they wish. We are here to see, in short, that the very foundations of this war are swept away. Those foundations were the private choice of a small coterie of civil rulers and military staffs. Those foundations were the aggressions of great powers upon small. Those foundations were the holding together of empires of unwilling subjects by the duress of arms.

That was accepted by the plenary council. They understood that this was the meaning of this treaty and of section 147; and I appeal to Senators not to ignore the rights of 13,000,000 people who have come up appealing to you through their representatives—representatives chosen by the legislative authority of Egypt, representatives whose credentials were signed by 100,000 citizens.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President——

Mr. OWEN. I yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. PENROSE. How does the Senator explain that the President did not stand up for those noble principles?

Mr. OWEN. I think the President did stand up for these noble principles as far as he could. He was not omniscient and he was not omnipotent, but he did the best he could; and I am in favor of supporting him in what he has brought here, with these modifications and explanations.

Some gentlemen say that the Egyptians are incapable of self-government, and that those who advocate it are only agitators. That is what the Tories in the House of Lords said in 1775 when our forefathers demanded the right of self-government.

A review of the debates in the House of Lords, taken from the Parliamentary Register, volume 2, of the year 1775, reveals a striking analogy between the utterances of British Tories of that period, opposed to American independence, and those of British opponents to-day to Egyptian independence. In many respects the same argument is followed.

The Earl of Suffolk heatedly declared, on January 20, 1775, Parliamentary Register, 1775, volume 2, page 11, that he—thought it a duty incumbent on the administration to pursue the object of subduing the refractory, rebellious Americans; and avowed a ministerial resolution of enforcing obedience by arms.

And the same day (ibid., p. 15) Lord Viscount Townsend asked if—the mutual interests of both countries should be destroyed in order to gatify the foolishly ambitious temper of a turbulent, ungrateful people.

Earl Gower asserted on January 20 (ibid., pp. 15, 16) that he—was well informed that the language now held by Americans was the language of the rabble and a few factious leaders; that the Delegates at the Continental Congress were far from expressing the true sense of the respectable part of their constituents.

While the Earl of Chatham—Pitt—spoke for America (ibid., p. 7), as liberal Englishmen of to-day might well speak for Egypt:

The idea of coercion by troops was wanton and idle. Anger was your motive in all you did. "What! Shall America presume to be free? Don't hear them; chastise them!" That was your language. The severest judge, though it chastises, also hears the party. All the mischief has arisen from your anger. Troops and violence were ill means to answer the ends of peace. * * * (Page 9.) Maladministration has run its line; it has not a move left; it is a checkmate.

Lord Camden said on March 16 (ibid., p. 82):

You arbitrarily introduce a total change into their constitution. You violate their charter rights of choosing their own council, their own assembly, their own magistrates, and invest the governor with these privileges. You rivet the dependence of their judges by making them removable at pleasure. * * * And thus, my lords, are annihilated all the securities of their freedom and happiness. * * * (Pp. 83, 84.) When such is the conduct held against America, when the severest and most comprehensive punishments are inflicted without examining the offense, when their constitutional liberties are destroyed, when their charters and their rights are sacrificed to the vindictive spirit of the moment, when you thus tear up all their privileges by the roots, is there a country under heaven, breathing the last gasp of freedom, that will not resist such oppressions and vindicate * * * such violations of justice.

Americans can not fail to lend ready sympathy to Egypt in her present plight, when they realize the same arguments and means are being used to suppress the aspirations and hopes of the Egyptians as were used to suppress the aspirations and hopes of the American colonists.

Mr. President, that is all I have to say. We fought this war for liberty. I believe in the right of men to govern themselves; and I propose to register my voice, if it be alone, for that principle.

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. President, I assume that the Senator from Oklahoma has some recent information as to the attitude of the Executive, for when he was in Paris he dispatched the Secretary of State to the British delegation there to recognize the protectorate over Egypt.

Mr. OWEN. I have just read his words at the peace conference, which are not disputed by anybody.

Mr. McCORMICK. Sometimes in the case of this administration the fact disputes with the word.

Mr. OWEN. Then let us give our own interpretation to this language.

Mr. PENROSE. It seems to be a clear case of duplicity on the part of the President, as far as I can gather from the statement of the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I deeply regret that the President of the United States should be made mock of in this Chamber.

Mr. PENROSE. Well, this is a serious discussion.

Mr. OWEN. It is a serious discussion.

Mr. PENROSE. And the performance is very serious in its results.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I believe this is as serious a proposition as any that has been connected with this treaty. I believe that the President at the peace conference could have avoided the difficulty entirely. But I am not going to discuss that. Whether he could or not, the provision that is in the treaty was put in it. The representatives of Egypt wanted to be heard. After they had come to Paris they were denied admission to the conference, which was held behind closed doors. They were denied a hearing by Lloyd-George, they were denied a hearing by Clemenceau, and they were denied a hearing by Woodrow Wilson. We are up to the proposition as to whether we shall put into the reservations the simple reservation that has been tendered by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN]. The interests of the people of Egypt are directly involved. It seems to me that the honor of every other nation is likewise involved.

No one doubts the loyalty of Egypt during the war. No one has questioned, as I understand, the righteousness of this reservation. I have heard no voice on the floor of the Senate raised in opposition to it, and the only objection that I have heard in the cloakroom conversations has been that England will give Egypt a good government.

It is conceded, I think, by all those who study the proposition that Egypt by this treaty is turned over to Great Britain. I ask Senators who are going to vote against this reservation on the ground that England is going to give Egypt a good government to bring that home to themselves. If England will promise us a better government than we have, are we willing to surrender our national independence and become a British colony, as we were over 100 years ago? Are we willing to be governed by some other nation or by some king on the ground that they are going to give us as good a government as we have under our own independent control, or a better one?

When the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] read an editorial in a Canadian paper to the effect that the league of nations was going to give Canada an opportunity to cut four counties off the north end of Maine, he was immediately seized with an idea that he ought to preserve the territory of Maine by putting in a reservation, and the Senate put it in, inconsistently, in order to prevent that question from being opened up by the league of nations on the application of Canada.

We are jealous, rightly jealous, of our national integrity and existence. The Egyptian people are just as jealous of their independence, just as anxious to maintain it as we are, and if they are able to govern themselves—and I have heard no one question it—and have in substance been promised their independence by Great Britain, as has been shown here from the records read into the RECORD by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN], and by myself the other day when this question was up, then how can Senators, if they believe that it is right for the Egyptian people to govern themselves, vote against a reservation which says, in substance, that as we construe the treaty it will in effect be the duty of England to transfer the nationality of Egypt to the people of Egypt?

Mr. President, a million Egyptians went into this war. I have never yet heard of any dissent among the Egyptian people in their loyalty to our side of the war. They believed, as the record shows without dispute, that at the close of the war they were going to be an independent nation, and that Great Britain was going to make her word good. When they appointed representatives to go to Paris and meet with the representatives of other nations, those emissaries were arrested by the British Government and put in prison, without any charge of crime or anything, but simply to prevent them from going to Paris; and when, on account of the excitement in Egypt that it aroused, they were finally released and they did come to Paris, they never were able to obtain admission into the council where the treaty was made. Their petitions were ignored, their voices were unheeded, and we have a treaty before us which, in substance, turns over Egypt to Great Britain.

It seems to me that we ought to consider what has been shown among other things that have come out in this debate that after all this treaty is turning over a great portion of the world to Great Britain, giving her jurisdiction over a great portion of the civilized world, the greatest portion, as has been shown and is undisputed. When this treaty is ratified, if it is, with the exception of the Panama Canal there will be no great trade route in the world not covered by British guns. With that one exception we can not send our own commerce anywhere without going within the range of British cannon.

Thirteen million people have been promised their independence. They are able to govern themselves. They have a civilization older than ours, and it seems to me that we ought at least to agree to the reservation that the Senator from Oklahoma has offered, and make good to these people who were loyal to our cause through the struggle.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the reservation offered by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN].

Mr. NORRIS. I ask for the yeas and nays, Mr. President.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on this reservation, and just before they are taken I am going to put this statement into the RECORD.

In May, 1882, a British fleet appeared before Alexandria. In June, 1882, a disturbance took place in Alexandria in which a number of Europeans were killed. On June 11 and 12, 1882, the British warships bombarded Alexandria, an unfortified city, and hundreds of Egyptians were killed and wounded.

That staged the performance for the British entrance into Egypt. British troops then occupied Egypt, with the most explicit pledges from British officials that the occupation was for the sole purpose of restoring order, and was to be temporary.

Now, listen. Sir Charles Dilke said in the House of Commons on July 25, 1882:

> It is the desire of His Majesty's Government, after relieving Egypt from military tyranny, to leave the people to manage their own affairs. * * * We do not wish to impose on Egypt institutions of our own choice, but rather to leave the choice of Egypt free.

Gladstone, on August 10, 1882, when prime minister, declared in the House of Commons, in response to questions asked him as to the British intentions regarding Egypt:

> I can go so far as to answer the honorable gentleman when he asks me whether we contemplate an indefinite occupation of Egypt. Undoubtedly of all things in the world, that is a thing which we are not going to do. It would be absolutely at variance with all the principles and views of His Majesty's Government, and the pledges they have given to Europe, and with the views, I may say, of Europe itself.

Lord Granville declared the government ready to begin withdrawal of the troops "at the beginning of the year 1888," a promise which was never fulfilled.

Lord Derby declared the occupation of Egypt was—and I quote his words—"temporary and provisional only." He said on February 26, 1885:

> We do not propose to keep Egypt permanently. On that point we are pledged to this country and to Europe.

Lord Salisbury, a succeeding prime minister, repeated this promise on numerous occasions, denying the intention of Great Britain to establish a protectorate over Egypt.

Yet on December 18, 1914, England proclaimed her removal of the lawful Khedive of Egypt, appointed a successor, put him on the Egyptian throne, and announced that henceforth Egypt will constitute a British protectorate.

But listen to the words of King George. In order to allay the apprehensions of the Egyptian people, and in order to enlist the Egyptian people in support of the armies of the Allies, King George sent a letter, from which I quote the following:

> I feel convinced that you will be able, with the cooperation of your ministers and the protectorate of Great Britain, to overcome all influences which are seeking to destroy the independence of Egypt.

That letter was widely circulated over Egypt. It was taken as an assurance that their independence was to be preserved, and on the strength of it they enlisted more than a million Egyptians and put them into the armies in support of the Allies; and this is the answer as it is written in the treaty.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator's hour has expired. The question is on agreeing to the reservation offered by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN], on which the yeas and nays are requested.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ASHURST (when his name was called). On this question and until the hour of 10 o'clock I am paired with the junior Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER]. I therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. CURTIS (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the senior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] and withhold my vote. If permitted to vote, I should vote "yea."

I also wish to announce that the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PAGE] is paired with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD].

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. WATSON. Announcing my pair as on previous votes, I withhold my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 31, nays 46, as follows:

So Mr. OWEN's reservation was rejected.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President, it was my intention to offer the reservation which was offered this afternoon and defeated by a vote of 46 to 43, but I shall content myself without offering it again, because of the lateness of the hour and because possibly it makes an inconsistency with the reservations which have been adopted, by explaining in just a brief moment to the Senate that the reservation adopted does nothing of the sort which was endeavored to be done by the reservation offered this evening. The reservation adopted assumes no obligation to be bound by any election, decision, report, or finding of the council or assembly in which any member of the league and its self-governing dominions, colonies, or parts of empire in the aggregate have cast more than one vote, and assumes no obligation to be bound by any decision, report, or finding of the council or assembly arising out of any dispute between the United States and any member of the league if such member, or any self-governing dominion, colony, empire, or part of empire united with it politically has voted.

Thus the United States Senate has spoken. It goes into the league of nations and takes the country into the league of nations where we sit with but one vote and Great Britain with six votes, and wherein, under this reservation, we lie in wait and determine, after a decision has been rendered by the six votes as against our one vote, whether or not we will be bound and whether or not we will accept the decision.

It affords some protection to the United States, and for that reason I voted for it. It does not afford the protection which ought to be afforded, and no man can salve his conscience in voting for that reservation with the soothing thought that he has endeavored to protect or has at all protected his country. No man can insist that by reason of that reservation he has given either equal voting power or equal representation to his country in the league of nations with Great Britain.

Of course, there is just one way in which this could be done. That way has been denied by the United States Senate. By a vote of 46 to 43 we acknowledged the superiority of Great Britain in this league, and we stand under our inferiority. But because there will be an inconsistency in the adoption of the particular reservation that was mine with what we have already done which might render the matter of considerable consequence and unable to be wholly corrected under the parliamentary situation, I do not carry out my original intention to offer the reservation in the Senate.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, as one of those who supported the reservation which was adopted, I wish most emphatically to refute the statement of the Senator from California that, by a vote of 46 to 43, we acknowledged the superiority of Great Britain and the inferiority of the United States when the Senate adopted the reservation proposed by the Seantor from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] and rejected the one offered by the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON].

I admire the Senator very much, I esteem his Americanism, but he has been handing out this line of talk in the Senate for lo these many months in regard to this reservation. He would have it appear that every man who does not agree with him on the question of voting, not in the council that determines the important questions, but in the assembly, is imputing to America inferiority to Great Britain.

Mr. President, I resent most emphatically any assertion that because we supported the reservation offered by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] which protects the American interests, that we consider America inferior. With me it is my own country, first, last, and always.

There is, of course, considerable sentiment in the idea that no nation should have more votes than another nation, and if we were dealing with this matter in the initiative I would very much favor trying to prevent any such condition; but we now have confronting us this condition. We are dealing with the league as it came to us from the peace conference. The conference having provided that Canada, Australia, and other dependencies and colonies of Great Britain have a voice in the assembly, it is for us now either to protect the United States by the provision contained in the reservation of the Senator from Wisconsin in the way of stating that we shall not be bound if Great Britain and her colonies have more than one vote, or else we are to say that the United States shall inflict another injury and another wrong upon the other members of the league of nations by taking unto ourselves six votes and leaving France, Italy, and the other member nations with only their one vote.

I have never known yet of two wrongs making a right, and if it is wrong for Great Britain to have her one vote and each of her colonies one vote, making a total of six votes, because such voting strength may conflict with the United States, then it is wrong for our Republic to have six votes and leave France and Italy and others that may become members of the league with only one vote each. What becomes of the axiom, "Those who seek equity must do equity"?

If the Senator believes so much in justice and is such a champion of fairness for his own country, why has he not claimed some justice and equity in the interests of France, Italy, and other member nations?

Mr. SMOOT. They will take care of themselves.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Yes; they will take care of themselves, and that is what we who have supported the reservation offered by the Senator from Wisconsin have done on the part of the United States, without heaping injury upon injury on the other nations with only one vote each. We want to leave France and Italy to take care of themselves. The reservation offered by the Senator from Wisconsin specifically provides that the United States shall not be bound upon any election, decision, or determination reached by the assembly wherein Great Britain and her colonies cast more than one vote. America's interest is made secure and protected just as much as if the reservation of the gentleman from California [Mr. JOHNSON] had been adopted.

Our Americanism and our rights are safeguarded, and I believe the American people will accord to the Senators supporting the Lenroot reservation just as much zealousness for sustaining the Republic's rights and an equal loyalty and love of country as that which throbs within the breast of the distinguished and able Senator from California.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Are there any further amendments or reservations to be offered?

Mr. LODGE. If there are no further amendments or reservations to be offered in the Senate, and I understand the Chair so declares, it now becomes necessary as the next step to reduce the reservations, and amendments if there are any—there are no amendments in this case—to a resolution of ratification. The rule provides that that resolution of ratification thus prepared must be proposed upon the subsequent day. It is therefore necessary that there should be an adjournment. I ask if the Chair has formally declared that there are no more reservations or amendments to be offered?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair inquires now, Are there any further amendments, reservations, interpretations, or suggestions to be made? The Chair hears none, and so declares that there are none.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President——

Mr. LODGE. I yield to the Senator from Kansas.

PROPOSED FINAL ADJOURNMENT OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. CURTIS. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the following resolution as in legislative session. I would like to state that the objection which was made to the resolution the other night has been withdrawn by the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] and I think there will be no objection.

Mr. LODGE. It concerns the House entirely?

Mr. CURTIS. Yes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will report the resolution.

The Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 231), as follows:

Resolved, That the consent of the Senate is hereby given to an adjournment sine die of the House of Representatives at any time prior to December 1 when the House shall so determine.

Mr. KIRBY. I do not wish to object to the resolution, but suppose the Senate agrees to the resolution and the House adjourns to-morrow, then the Senate can not adjourn at all?

Mr. CURTIS. The House to-morrow morning, when it convenes, will agree to a resolution of the House consenting to an adjournment of the Senate.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

EMPLOYEES OF RAILROAD ADMINISTRATION.

The VICE PRESIDENT. As in legislative session, the Chair asks unanimous consent to lay before the Senate the response of the Railroad Administration to the resolution submitted by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] on August 20, 1919. The response will be referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce, and the Chair understands the Senator from Iowa desires to have it printed as a public document.

Mr. CUMMINS. I ask that it be printed as a public document.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. POMERENE. May I ask the Senator from Iowa, Does the response of the Interstate Commerce Commission relate to a resolution which was passed calling for certain information with regard to wages?

Mr. CUMMINS. It is in response to a resolution I submitted last August, I think.

Mr. POMERENE. In July, I think.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution was agreed to August 20, 1919.

Mr. CUMMINS. The resolution called for information in regard to wages.

Mr. POMERENE. I am glad it has come in at last.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I am going to ask unanimous consent that I may be allowed to present some petitions which I have here.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. LODGE. They are petitions in favor of the league of nations, signed by some thousands of women in Massachusetts.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the petitions will be received.

The petitions are as follows:

Petitions signed by the Massachusetts committee of one hundred of the Women's Nonpartisan Committee for the league of nations and by approximately 15,000 other women of Massachusetts, residents of the following cities and towns, praying for the immediate ratification of the treaty of peace and the covenant of the league of nations:

Boston, 3,234 signatures; Beverly, Essex, Ipswich, Lynn, Manchester, Newburyport, Salem, and South Hamilton, 578; Athol, Brookfield, Harvard, Harwich, Holden, Framingham, Fitchburg, Gardner, Groton, Leicester, Littleton, Marlboro, Millville, Monson, Northboro, North Grafton, Orange, Southbridge, Sudbury, Templeton, Webster, West Brookfield, West Upton, Winchendon, and Worcester, 737; Newton, 408; Blackstone, Brockton, Fairhaven, Franklin, Freetown, New Bedford, and North Easton, 418; Ellerton, Barnstable, Bridgewater, Cotuit, Duxbury, Hanover, Hyannis, Hingham, Kingston, Nantucket, Vineyard Haven, Bournedale, Norwell, Osterville, Provincetown, Sandwich, Scituate, South Yarmouth, Wareham, West Barnstable, Whitman, Woods Hole, and Plymouth, 486; Arlington, Auburndale, Bedford, Chelsea, Concord, Dedham, Dover, Everett, Lexington, Lincoln, Malden, Medford, Melrose, Natick, Needham, Norfolk Downs, Randolph, Revere, Sharon, Somerville, South Braintree, Stoneham, Waltham, Whalen, Wellesley, Weston, Winchester, Wollaston, and Quincy, 1,435; Andover, Chelmsford, Haverhill, Lowell, Reading, Tynsboro, Wilmington, 356; Milton, 338; Sagamore, Winthrop, West Townsend, Prides Crossing, West Royalston, Hudson, Lancaster, Holliston, Norton, Whitinsville, Ayer, Holbrook, Marshfield, East Walpole, Millis, Becket, Chester, Roslindale, Dorchester, Roxbury, and Woburn, 1,801; Cambridge, 1,056; Brookline, 1,586.

Petitions signed by 451 students of Radcliffe, Wellesley, Smith, and Mount Holyoke colleges, favoring the immediate ratification of the treaty of peace and the covenant of the league of nations, were also presented by Mr. LODGE.

Mr. SMOOT and Mr. HITCHCOCK addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair does not want to stay here all night for morning business. The Chair will say that.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. It is getting pretty late, but I have here a petition of 3,000 women in Connecticut asking for the ratification of the treaty similar to the petitions which have been presented by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], who, I understand, has petitions signed by 15,000 women from Massachusetts. Here are petitions signed by 3,000 women of Connecticut which have been gathered within 10 days.

Mr. LODGE. The petitions which I have presented are signed by over 15,000 women in Massachusetts. The Senator from Nebraska misstates the number.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I have petitions signed by 3,000 women of Connecticut, all of which have been gathered within 10 days.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I could contribute petitions signed by 12,000 from New York, if such matters are going to be presented.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. But they are not. I object to anything being received.

Mr. JONES of Washington presented a memorial of Montesano Post No. 37, American Legion, of Montesano, Wash., remonstrating against the granting of citizenship papers to aliens who were exempted from military service during the World War on account of being nonresident aliens, which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

Mr. McLEAN presented memorials of Typewriter Lodge No. 1342, International Association of Machinists, of Hartford; of Local Union No. 215, Journeymen Barbers' International Union of America, of New Haven; and of Excelsior Lodge No. 259, International Association of Machinists, of Derby, all in the State of Connecticut, remonstrating against the adoption of the proposed antistrike clauses contained in the so-called Esch-Pomerene bill and the Cummins bill, which were ordered to lie on the table.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred, as follows:

By Mr. NELSON:

A bill (S. 3448) defining sedition, the promoting thereof, providing punishment therefor, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. JONES of Washington:

A bill (S. 3449) granting an increase of pension to Cornelia A. Forbes (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

HEARINGS BEFORE COMMITTEE ON THE LIBRARY.

Mr. BRANDEGEE submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 232), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Library, or any subcommittee thereof, be, and hereby is, authorized during the Sixty-sixth Congress to send for persons, books, and papers; to administer oaths, and to employ a stenographer, at a cost not exceeding $1 per printed page, to report such hearings as may be had in connection with any subject which may be before said committee, the expenses thereof to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate, and that the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, may sit during the sessions or recesses of the Senate.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

H. R. 10453. An act to provide for the termination of Federal control of railroads and systems of transportation; to provide for the settlement of disputes between carriers and their employees; to further amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, as amended, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 10 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, November 19, 1919, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, November 18, 1919.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, infinite and eternal source of all things, we realize our dependence upon Thee and lift up our hearts in gratitude for all the blessings of the past; and most fervently pray that Thou wilt continue to bless us as individuals and as a nation.

Open Thou our eyes day by day to truth, for there is nothing purer than truth, stronger than faith, brighter than hope, nor more enduring than love, that we may live our convictions now and always. In the spirit of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

THE JOURNAL.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read.

Mr. WELTY. Mr. Speaker, the Journal as read provides for five legislative days for Members to extend remarks on the railroad bill.

The SPEAKER. It should be five calendar days, and the correction will be made.

The Journal was approved.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Speaker, last evening after voting on the motion to recommit I went to the House Office Building, intending to return and take part in the final vote. To the best of my knowledge and belief the second bell failed to ring, and I arrived too late. Inasmuch as it was not my fault I ask unanimous consent that I may be recorded in the affirmative.

The SPEAKER. The House has no jurisdiction to grant that request.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE CONNECTICUT RIVER AT WINDSOR.

Mr. LONERGAN. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill S. 3332, on the Speaker's table, a House bill identical with it being favorably reported and now on the House Calendar.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

A bill (S. 3332) granting the consent of Congress to the board of county commissioners of the county of Hartford, in the State of Connecticut, to construct a bridge across the Connecticut River, between Windsor Locks and East Windsor, at Warehouse Point, in said county and State.

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the board of county commissioners of the county of Hartford, in the State of Connecticut, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Connecticut River, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, one end of said bridge to be in the town of Windsor Locks and the other in the town of East Windsor, at the village of Warehouse Point, all in the county of Hartford, in the State of Connecticut, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. LONERGAN, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The bill H. R. 9850 was laid on the table.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bill of the following title:

S. 425. An act to establish the Zion National Park in the State of Utah.

REPORT OF THE SECRETARY OF WAR.

Mr. CRAGO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the report of the Secretary of War, with accompanying documents, for the fiscal year of 1919 may be printed as a House document.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that the report of the Secretary of War, with accompanying documents, may be printed as a House document. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Reserving the right to object, what is the idea of having the annual reports of departments printed as House documents?

Mr. CRAGO. The law provides that reports accompanying the report of the Secretary of War shall be in the hands of the Public Printer not later than October 15. The Secretary's report is in the printer's hands as of October 15, but the reports of the Director of Chemical Warfare, the Construction Department, the report of the Chief of Artillery, the report of the Quartermaster General, the report of the Purchase, Storage and Supply, the Tank Corps, and the National Soldiers' Home were not in the hands of the Public Printer by October 15, as required by law. That was because in most cases the data necessary to make up the report was slow in coming in from the Hawaiian Islands and the Canal Zone and different fields of operation. The Public Printer takes the ground that the documents not being in his hands by October 15 he is not justified in printing them. The officials of the House are very much interested in these different reports of officials of the department, especially the Director of the Construction Division. I am asking unanimous consent at this time that they may be printed for the use of the House as House documents.

Mr. WALSH. I do not think it is a wise practice to help delay in departments by printing documents supposed to be printed under the law and under the appropriations that may be made for printing House documents.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. My recollection is that all reports from the heads of departments are printed as House documents.

Mr. WALSH. They are not entitled "House documents." We get them at the office as "Report of the Secretary of War," "Report of the Attorney General," and so forth.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The gentleman is mistaken, they are all printed as House documents. The heads of the departments, in addition, print the reports by the departments and send them out, but they are annually made to the House of Representatives and printed as House documents.

Mr. WALSH. If that is so, what is the necessity of this request?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The only question here is on account of the delay. If it had not been for the delay, it would have been printed as a House document under the law by the Public Printer, but he says that under the new law he is not authorized to print any documents not submitted by October 15.

Mr. WALSH. I would like to ask, is it not a fact that the annual reports of department heads, members of the various Cabinet positions, have a fund for printing their annual reports which are not printed as House documents?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Oh; they print their annual reports and distribute them, but under the law they are printed as House documents, and that is the way they go into the permanent record of the Government—all of these reports.

Mr. WALSH. Those are not the copies that the Members get.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Members get that copy later in the bound volume. The bound volume is the House document.

Mr. WALSH. They get them if they ask for them, I suppose, the same as they get any other House document after it is printed. I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, would it not meet the gentleman's purpose to ask that these documents be printed as if they had been regularly filed within the time? That covers the point made by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH]. The request of the gentleman seems to imply a duplication in the printing of these documents.

Mr. CRAGO. No; there is no duplication.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I would suggest an amendment to the gentleman's request that he ask that these documents be printed as if they had been filed in time.

The SPEAKER. That would require the consent of the Senate.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Probably the gentleman from Alabama does not understand that the law provides that the documents shall be printed as House documents only if submitted by October 15. The House has the power, however, to order any of these documents printed as House documents by simple resolution of the House. The House has not the power to change the law by simple resolution of the House.

Mr. CRAGO. That is a very recent act.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. So that they will be printed as House documents under the gentleman's request and also under the law?

Mr. CRAGO. Oh, no.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I do not know enough about this to make the objection. Has the gentleman submitted a request to the Joint Committee on Printing and had its approval of it?

Mr. CRAGO. I did not have time to do that. The matter was just called up this morning, and I ascertained that the cost would be very small.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. We have members of the Joint Committee on Printing in the room.

Mr. CRAGO. Would the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KIESS] have objection to this?

Mr. KIESS. No.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, according to the colloquy between the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] this report and other reports from the departments are not only printed as House documents but are also printed by each department under a special fund for their special distribution.

Mr. CRAGO. No.

Mr. BLANTON. I wanted to ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], because he knows more about it than anyone else, whether or not there are 100 men in this Nation who read these reports?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I could not answer that, except to say that there is one who does. I always did, and I expect to start doing it again pretty soon.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, the gentleman reads everything while he is on his farm and in his garden.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Oh, no; I do not read anything there.

Mr. BLANTON. Are there any others in the Nation who read them.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Oh, certainly; there are a great many people who read these annual reports.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. BRUMBAUGH, for one week, on account of important business.

CONTROLLING IMPORTATION OF DYESTUFFS.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I present a unanimous report from the Committee on Ways and Means with reference to extending the control of importations of dyestuffs to January 15, 1920, and ask unanimous consent for the present consideration.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 249) to continue the control of imports of dyes and coal-tar products.

Resolved, etc., That notwithstanding the prior termination of the present war, the provisions of the trading-with-the-enemy act, approved October 6, 1917, and of any proclamation of the President issued in pursuance thereof which prohibit or control the importation into the United States of dyes or other products derived directly or indirectly from coal tar, are continued until January 15, 1920.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, if I may be permitted a moment to explain the reason for this, the House will observe that this resolution only continues the operation of the trading-with-the-enemy act until January 15, 1920. This resolution not only has the unanimous report of the Committee on Ways and Means of the House, but has been unanimously reported by the Finance Committee of the Senate. Owing to the parliamentary situation in the Senate and the adoption of the cloture rule, while, as I understand it, no one in the Senate is opposed to the resolution, still there were Members of the Senate who thought unanimous consent ought not to be given for its consideration while the cloture rule is pending, and that has prevented its being adopted by the Senate.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. KITCHIN. As I understand it, and it so appeared before our committee, the dye-consuming industries of the country are perfectly willing to have this resolution passed.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. KITCHIN. They have no objection to it, although they did oppose the licensing feature in the dyestuffs bill which passed some time ago. The same people who opposed that have waived all objections to this, and think that this is necessary. That is true, is it not?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. That is true. The consumers of dyes, the ones who are most interested in the matter, have waived all objection and have consented to the passage of this resolution. They have been thoroughly consulted in the matter.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Why is it that it is limited to the 15th of January, 1920? Is something to happen between now and then?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. It is hoped that by that time we will have legislation covering it. The gentleman will remember that the dyestuffs bill proposing a tariff on dyestuffs and also providing for a license system passed this House some time ago, but owing to the consideration of the treaty in the Senate it has not been taken up by that body and can not be taken up at this session. It is considered, however, that by January 15 the Senate will be able to take up and dispose of the dyestuffs bill.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I was wondering if we would not have to pass another resolution owing to the lack of speed with which other people sometimes work?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I can not say.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Under the provisions of the trading-with-the-enemy act, when does that act expire by limitation?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. It expires on the exchange of the ratification of the treaty of peace.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the joint resolution? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I understand that this is on the Union Calendar, and I ask unanimous consent that it be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that this joint resolution be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the joint resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 249) to continue the control of imports of dyes and coal-tar products.

Resolved, etc., That notwithstanding the prior termination of the present war, the provisions of the trading-with-the-enemy act, approved October 6, 1917, and of any proclamation of the President issued in pursuance thereof which prohibit or control the importation into the United States of dyes or other products derived directly or indirectly from coal tar, are continued until January 15, 1920.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I will.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Under the existing law that will run until the exchange and ratification of the treaty?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. It will.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Suppose the ratification of the treaty does not occur until after January 15. In the language in which it seems to be written will it then have the effect of restricting the operation of the law to January 15?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. It will not. It will have no effect at all.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I am not sure.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I will yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH].

Mr. LONGWORTH. I think the wording of the resolution simply provides notwithstanding prior termination it shall be continued. I think should the war last longer than that unquestionably the powers of the war will continue.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. It may, although the language of the resolution would indicate that Congress was of the impression it ought to stop on January 15.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I do not think that is the construction that would be placed upon it.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. GREEN of Iowa, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed was laid on the table.

REIMBURSEMENT TO THE UNITED STATES FOR MOTIVE POWER, ETC., BOUGHT FOR RAILROADS.

Mr. MERRITT. Mr. Speaker, by instruction from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce I rise to ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill S. 3319.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Connecticut asks unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the Senate bill 3319. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Let it be read.

Mr. BLANTON. May we have it reported?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thought perhaps the gentleman from Connecticut might explain it in a shorter time. It can be reported if anyone wishes.

Mr. BLANTON. And unanimous consent will be preferred after that?

The SPEAKER. Certainly; it has not been granted.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I think the bill ought to be reported at least by title before the gentleman proceeds.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 3319) to provide for the reimbursement of the United States for motive power, cars, and other equipment ordered for railroads and systems of transportation under Federal control, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That in order to make provision for the reimbursement of the United States for the sums advanced to provide motive power, cars, and other equipment ordered by the President for the railroads and systems of transportation now under Federal control, herein called "carriers," pursuant to the authority conferred by the second paragraph of section 6 of the act of March 21, 1918, the President may, upon such terms as he shall deem advisable, receive in reimbursement cash, or obligations of any carrier, or part cash and part such obligations, or in his discretion he may accept for such motive power, cars, or other equipment cash or the shares of stock or obligations, secured or unsecured, of any corporation, not a carrier, organized for the purpose of owning equipment or equipment obligations, or part cash and part such shares of stock and obligations, and he may transfer to such corporation any obligations of carriers received on account of motive power, cars, or other equipment, and he may execute any instruments necessary and proper to carry out the intent of the second paragraph of section 6 of said act of March 21, 1918, to the end that title to the motive power, cars, and other equipment so ordered by the President as aforesaid for the carriers may rest in them or their trustees or nominees.

In addition to the powers herein and heretofore conferred, the President is further authorized to dispose, in the manner and for the consideration aforesaid, of motive power, cars, and other equipment, if any, provided by him in accordance with any other provisions of said section, and of any obligations of carriers that may be received in reimbursement of the cost thereof.

SEC. 2. That any contract for the sale of any motive power, cars, or other equipment ordered or provided under any of the provisions of section 6 of said act of March 21, 1918, may provide that title thereto, notwithstanding delivery of possession, shall not vest in the carrier until the purchase price, which may be payable in installments during any period not exceeding 15 years, shall be fully paid and the conditions of purchase fully performed. Any such contract shall be in writing and acknowledged or proved before some person authorized to administer oaths, and filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission within 60 days after the delivery thereof, and shall be valid and enforceable as against all persons whomsoever.

SEC. 3. That nothing herein contained shall be deemed to abrogate or limit the powers conferred upon the President by said act of March 21, 1918.

SEC. 4. That the President may execute any of the powers herein granted through such agencies as he may determine.

SEC. 5. That this act is emergency legislation, enacted to meet conditions growing out of war and to effectuate said act of March 21, 1918.

Mr. MERRITT. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. WALSH. Has the gentleman secured consent?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has not put the consent yet.

Mr. MERRITT. Mr. Speaker, this is an enabling act to allow the President to make the necessary arrangements to finance the equipment of locomotives and cars which the Railroad Administration has bought during the war and allocated——

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield. The House was assured by the gentleman from Wyoming yesterday that after the passage of the railroad bill and this dyestuff resolution that there would be no other business taken up by the House.

Mr. MERRITT. That is true. I will say to the gentleman, however, that it was the intention of everyone to act on that statement——

Mr. BLANTON. I just want to call attention to the fact that if an adjournment is delayed very much longer the men who live on the other side of St. Louis and Kansas City down in the Southwest will not have very much time to get away from here and get home, and this is such important legislation I think we ought to have a quorum present, and I make the point.

Mr. MERRITT. The gentleman will find when he understands this that it will not take——

Mr. BLANTON. Has the gentleman bought his transportation to Connecticut?

Mr. MERRITT. I have.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman expects to get away to Connecticut, does he not?

Mr. MERRITT. I hope so. If the gentleman will allow me to finish this——

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman and his colleagues who likewise expect to get away are just as anxious as the gentleman is, and we live a little farther.

Mr. MERRITT. But it will not take 10 minutes if the gentleman will allow me to go on. This is brought up at the special request of the Railway Administration, who want to finance $400,000,000 of equipment which they bought for the Government. The effect of this bill is to insure to the President power which present legislation is thought to give him, but it is not certain. Now, if this bill is passed——

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. MERRITT. I will.

Mr. MONDELL. The attorney of the Railroad Administration, Mr. Sherley, called me up this morning and called my attention to the important character of this legislation. That is, he said that in his opinion it was important that it be passed now, inasmuch as it relieves the Federal Government, in a way, of a very considerable obligation that will be taken over by the car equipment trust that is provided for.

Mr. MERRITT. The provisions of the arrangement which are permitted will be that title to all these engines and cars will be given to a corporation which is to be formed with the approval of the Railroad Administration, and the bankers have agreed to take enough of these trust certificates to provide the United States with $200,000,000 of cash, which otherwise the Government could not have. If this bill is not passed, then the United States may have to carry these obligations for some years, but it is expected the United States will be immediately reimbursed by $200,000,000 of cash, and they will have obligations of this car trust corporation secured by the collateral of the engines and cars, so that they will be certain to be repaid the entire debt of approximately $400,000,000 by the time the car trust matures.

Mr. ESCH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MERRITT. I will.

Mr. ESCH. Unless this bill goes through the Government would not be able to realize possibly more than $100,000,000? If it goes through it immediately realizes $225,000,000?

Mr. MERRITT. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield for a further question?

Mr. MERRITT. I will.

Mr. SNELL. This is one proposition in connection with the return of the railroads that the House committee entirely agrees upon, together with the Senate and the Railway Administration?

Mr. MERRITT. Yes, sir; the bill has been passed by the Senate.

Mr. SNELL. It is one thing that everybody agrees upon?

Mr. MERRITT. It is one thing that everybody agrees upon. I have heard no objection.

Mr. KITCHIN. If I understand it, this practically would enable the Government, if passed, to get $200,000,000 right off the bat from the railroads?

Mr. MERRITT. It would.

Mr. KITCHIN. And if this does not pass, the Government will have to carry that $200,000,000 for 10 or 15 years?

Mr. MERRITT. That is correct.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. MERRITT. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the bill be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Connecticut asks unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in order to make provision for the reimbursement of the United States for the sums advanced to provide motive power, cars, and other equipment ordered by the President for the railroads and systems of transportation now under Federal control, herein called "carriers," pursuant to the authority conferred by the second paragraph of section 6 of the act of March 21, 1918, the President may, upon such terms as he shall deem advisable, receive in reimbursement cash, or obligations of any carrier, or part cash and part such obligations, or in his discretion he may accept for such motive power, cars, or other equipment, cash or the shares of stock or obligations, secured or unsecured, of any corporation, not a carrier, organized for the purpose of owning equipment or equipment obligations, or part cash and part such shares of stock and obligations, and he may transfer to such corporation any obligations of carriers received on account of motive power, cars, or other equipment, and he may execute any instruments necessary and proper to carry out the intent of the second paragraph of section 6 of said act of March 21, 1918, to the end that title to the motive power, cars, and other equipment so ordered by the President as aforesaid for the carriers may rest in them or their trustees or nominees.

In addition to the powers herein and heretofore conferred, the President is further authorized to dispose, in the manner and for the consideration aforesaid, of motive power, cars, and other equipment, if any, provided by him in accordance with any other provisions of said section, and of any obligations of carriers that may be received in reimbursement of the cost thereof.

Also the following committee amendment was read:

Page 2, line 21, strike out the words "any other provisions" and insert the words "the first paragraph."

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that voting in the bill of the committee amendments, which were practically verbal, relating to punctuation and the insertion of paragraphs instead of sections, I think the amendments recommended and made by the committee should be voted down, so that there will be no further action necessary on the part of the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the committee amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That any contract for the sale of any motive power, cars, or other equipment ordered or provided under any of the provisions of section 6 of said act of March 21, 1918, may provide that title thereto, notwithstanding delivery of possession, shall not vest in the carrier until the purchase price, which may be payable in installments during any period not exceeding 15 years, shall be fully paid and the conditions of purchase fully performed. Any such contract shall be in writing, and acknowledged or proved before some person authorized to administer oaths, and filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission within 60 days after the delivery thereof, and shall be valid and enforceable as against all persons whomsoever.

The following committee amendment was read:

Committee amendment, page 3, line 1, after the word "of," where it appears the second time in the line, insert "the first or second paragraph of."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 5. That this act is emergency legislation, enacted to meet conditions growing out of war and to effectuate said act of March 21, 1918.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman what section 5 is intended to imply? That because this is emergency legislation the Executive has additional power, or that it——

Mr. MERRITT. I do not think it adds anything to the power which he has under the act of March 21, 1918. It is to make certain that the power he has will be acceptable to the counsel for the bankers.

Mr. WALSH. If that was not in there the bankers might default?

Mr. MERRITT. So far as I know.

Mr. ESCH. Will the gentleman yield? I think the language inserted by the person who drafted it was on account of a section of the Federal reserve act, which is as follows:

That this act is expressly declared to be emergency legislation enacted to meet conditions growing out of war.

Mr. WALSH. Of course, the Federal control act would be invalid if that particular paragraph did not appear.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. MERRITT, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

BRIDGES AT CHINCOTEAGUE ISLAND, VA.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate bill (S. 2961) to authorize the county of Accomac, Va., to construct certain bridges to connect Chincoteague Island with the mainland.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 2961) authorizing the county of Accomac, Va., to construct certain bridges to connect Chincoteague Island and the mainland.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the county of Accomac, in the State of Virginia, be, and it is hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate, at points suitable to the interests of navigation, six highway bridges and approaches thereto across Mosquito Creek, Cockle Creek, Queen Sound, Wire Narrows, Black Narrows, and Chincoteague Channel for the purpose of connecting Chincoteague Island to the mainland, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. Speaker, I ask leave to amend the bill in accordance with the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MONTAGUE: Page 1, line 3, after the word "the," where it first appears in the line, strike out the words "county of Accomac, in the State of Virginia," and insert "Chincoteague Toll Road & Bridge Co. (Inc.), a corporation created by and existing under the laws of the Commonwealth of Virginia."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill as amended.

The Senate bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Clerk may be instructed to change the title of the bill to conform to the amendment which has just been adopted.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent that the Clerk may be instructed to change the title of the bill to conform to the amendment. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

On motion of Mr. MONTAGUE, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the Senate bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, is there a similar bill on the House Calendar?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is not advised.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by printing the correspondence with the Federal Railroad Administration in regard to a point of constitutional law involved in the original taking over of the railroads.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Vermont asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks by printing correspondence with the Railroad Administration in regard to a point of constitutional law in taking over the railroads. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SLEMP. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the coal strike.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks on the coal strike. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, are they the gentleman's own remarks, with no insertions?

Mr. SLEMP. They are my own remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HULINGS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for three minutes.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman reserve that for a moment?

Mr. HULINGS. Yes.

The SPEAKER. In the meantime the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. IRELAND], or the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAPES], from the Committee on Accounts.

EMIL EDWARD HURJA.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I present a privileged resolution from the Committee on Accounts.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent for the consideration of a resolution, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. It is privileged.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House of Representatives be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay out of the contingent fund of the House to Emil Edward Hurja, clerk to the late Hon. Charles A. Sulzer, a Delegate in Congress from Alaska at the time of his death, April 15, 1919, the sum of $166.66, being an amount equal to one month's salary of a clerk of a Delegate in Congress.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the resolution?

Mr. LANKFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is there any way to ascertain how long this unanimous-consent matter is going on? There are a great many of us who want to go home, and if we are to be tied up by unanimous consents we can not go to-day.

Mr. MAPES. We have only two or three resolutions.

Mr. LANKFORD. I think I shall have to object.

Mr. MONDELL. I will say to the gentleman that no unanimous consents will be asked except as to some minor matters of accounts.

Mr. LANKFORD. They are causing delay.

Mr. SIMS. There will not be any roll call anyway. Nobody will know whether any gentleman has gone or not.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the resolution?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The resolution was again read.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

SESSION EMPLOYEES OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. IRELAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk and ask that it be read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the session employees of the House of Representatives shall be paid for the entire month of November, 1919, and a sum sufficient to pay such employees from the date of adjournment of the present session to and including November 30, 1919, shall be paid from the contingent fund of the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the resolution?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask if the House is going to adjourn—is Congress going to adjourn—before the 28th or 29th of the month?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, if that inquiry is directed to me——

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Well, it is——

Mr. MONDELL. I will say that we hope that the conditions will be such and matters will so develop in the Senate to-day that we can secure an agreement upon a resolution of adjournment by to-morrow. [Applause.] We are not absolutely certain in regard to that; but in the meantime, Mr. Speaker, there will be no business transacted in the House.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. That is what the gentleman stated yesterday. Yet we are running along, transacting business to-day——

Mr. MONDELL. By unanimous consent.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I know; but the man who is away from here can not object. The man who is away, on the assurance that there will be no business transacted, can not object.

Mr. MONDELL. The assurance was that there was going to be no legislation of importance. I assume that no one will object to the payment of the salaries of the employees of the House for the few days at the end of the session.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. But we passed a bill this morning involving $400,000,000. It may be that in my absence Congress has gotten to the pass where $400,000,000 is of minor consideration, but I still have the old-fashioned idea that it is of some importance.

Mr. MONDELL. I am sorry that the gentleman from Illinois has not been here for some time, and I am delighted that he is here now; but in his absence I think it was generally understood in the House that the car or equipment trust bill would be brought up immediately after the consideration of the railroad bill and passed.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I did not object to it.

Mr. MONDELL. It was not called up last night, but at the urgent request of the Director of the Division of Finance of the Railway Administration, Mr. Sherley, an esteemed former Member of this House, it was called up this morning. It is a matter that the Members of the House have understood to be one of the things that ought to be disposed of before we adjourn.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. That has nothing to do with the question as to what we are going to do in the future. Now, there is a resolution pending——

Mr. MONDELL. As far as I am concerned, I shall make the motion to adjourn if a motion to transact business is made. There are one or two minor matters from the Committee on Accounts which, if they were agreed to, would practically dispose of the chips and whetstones that remain.

Mr. KITCHIN. The gentleman means that he will make that motion after to-day?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. SIMS. Why not pass the resolution of adjournment to-day, to take effect to-morrow? Then if the Senate amends it we can come back and agree to the amendment.

Mr. MONDELL. I think the conditions will clear to-day so that we can secure the passage of an adjournment resolution to-morrow.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Will the gentleman tell us whether that resolution of adjournment contemplates the immediate adjournment of Congress, both the House and the Senate, or whether it contemplates adjournment of the House by permission of the Senate, and later the adjournment of the Senate?

Mr. MONDELL. That is what we had in mind, that there would either be a concurrent resolution which would allow either body to adjourn when its business was concluded, or a resolution passed by each of the two bodies giving its consent to the adjournment of the other. That would fulfill the constitutional requirement, and we hope to secure one or the other of these arrangements to-morrow. In the meantime no further business of importance will be transacted. I understand there are one or two small resolutions from the Committee on Accounts, but I shall move to adjourn if a motion is made to transact any important business.

Mr. WINGO. The gentleman does not intend to shut out the conference report on the foreign finance bill, does he?

Mr. MONDELL. I do not intend to shut it out, no; but my opinion is that the understanding we have had is such that we can not in good faith now take up the conference report.

Mr. WINGO. To what understanding does the gentleman refer? The gentleman may have had that understanding with gentlemen who put their desire to go home above the public business.

Mr. MONDELL. I do not believe that any interest will be injured or that there will be any loss to the public or the public service if that bill does not become a law until the 1st of December. But at any rate Members are anxious to get home. They were promised that they could go home after the passage of the railroad bill. The understanding was that business would not be transacted after that, and it seems to me the bill to which the gentleman refers is not a vital piece of legislation, the benefits of which will be less by reason of a few days' delay, although it is very important, and ought eventually to be placed upon the statute books.

Mr. WINGO. If the gentleman will permit me, I will say this much: As far as I am concerned, I think in the present condition of foreign exchange, and the effect it is having upon products all over the United States, it would be folly for Congress to adjourn with the conference report on the calendar, and I for one am not a party to any such agreement, and I will use every method I have to prevent adjournment with the situation like it is. The moral effect of quickly agreeing to that bill will be great. [Applause.]

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I believe the best thing Congress can do, the House especially, is to adjourn and go home. [Applause.]

Mr. SIMS. I want to help it.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I am not going home. I have just come from seeing my constituents, but the House ought to have an understanding, either that it will or will not do business. Members who are told that they can go away have the right to know that matters will not come up and be considered in their absence. No one knows what some Member might wish to object to. Either we will stay here and do business with a quorum, or there will be no further business transacted after to-day in the House.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I agree with the gentleman that we ought not to transact any important business, but does the gentleman think it would be wise for the House to take a formal adjournment until after the treaty is disposed of in the Senate?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I think it would be wise for the House to take a formal adjournment before the next session of Congress. That answers the gentleman's question.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I do not think it specifically answers it.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Oh, I think it does.

Mr. SIMS. Will it not take a quorum to adjourn?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. It does not take a quorum to adjourn.

Mr. SIMS. I mean to adjourn the session of Congress until December.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Whether that be so or not, if Members are told that they can go home, there ought to be an understanding that there will be no business transacted in their absence.

Mr. SIMS. That is right; but what about the point of no quorum? We have heard what the gentleman from Arkansas said.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. It does not make any difference. If Members are told that they can go home, there will be no other business transacted.

Mr. SIMS. I would like to see an adjournment resolution passed, and the question is, Will we have a quorum to do it?

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. IRELAND].

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. MONDELL. I hope that by to-morrow we can secure an agreement for an adjournment of Congress. I now move that the House adjourn.

Mr. HULINGS. I hope the gentleman will reserve that motion for a moment.

Mr. KITCHIN. Are you not going to let the Committee on Accounts get in its resolutions?

Mr. WINGO. Why can we not get up the conference report on the foreign finance bill? It is ready, and the House will agree to it, because the House got everything in the conference report.

Mr. SANFORD. Regular order!

Mr. HULINGS. I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed for three minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. HULINGS. Mr. Speaker, I have sought this opportunity to bring to the attention of the House a matter that is being bruited about all over the country in the public press. I refer particularly to the press reports that were made the other morning concerning the cruelty and extreme harshness with which the military prisoners are treated up here at Fort Jay, N. Y. I have also had some private communications from inmates and others concerning an institution making complaints of harshness and cruelty to enlisted men of the United States Army, and I have introduced a resolution of this import:

Whereas if these charges are untrue, scandalous, and libelous, the general public should be informed of their falsity and the military authorities be relieved of unjust reproach; and
Whereas if these charges are true, the military authorities responsible therefor should be subject to prompt and condign punishment.

Therefore I have introduced a resolution that a committee of three of the House be appointed for the purpose of going to Fort Jay and investigating the whole matter. That resolution has been referred to the Committee on Rules, and if it is in order, Mr. Speaker, I would ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The SPEAKER. It is not in order.

Mr. HULINGS. I wanted to bring those charges to the attention of the House. These charges are being brought on all hands. The kinsfolk of these men are agitated and alarmed and indignant. Complaints are coming from the men, and the truth or falsity of the charges ought to be investigated. The Adjutant General yesterday morning denied the truth of them, but I doubt whether he knows anything about it. The people responsible for the conduct of that institution certainly would not report to him that there was anything wrong with the management.

Mr. GARRETT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HULINGS. I will.

Mr. GARRETT. At what point in New York did the gentleman mention?

Mr. HULINGS. Fort Jay.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. GARRETT. I ask that the gentleman have one minute more.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GARRETT. I am asking for information. Is that the same point at which one of the subcommittees on expenditures in the War Department took testimony?

Mr. HULINGS. I do not know.

Mr. GARRETT. One of the subcommittees of the Committee on Expenditures, I think the one of which the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON] is chairman made some investigation at some point in New York. I am not sure whether it was at this point or not.

Mr. HULINGS. I do not know what the fact is, but I do know that this matter ought to have some examination.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has again expired.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 1 o'clock p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, November 19, 1919, at 12 o'clock noon.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. RUBEY: A bill (H. R. 10652) to provide for the erection of a post-office building at Mountain Grove, Mo.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10653) to provide for the erection of a post-office building at Lebanon, Mo.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. MILLER: A bill (H. R. 10654) to amend section 24 of the act entitled "An act for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes," approved June 3, 1916; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. McFADDEN: A bill (H. R. 10655) to repeal section 16 of the act of Congress approved July 17, 1916, known as the Federal farm loan act; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. RANDALL of California: A bill (H. R. 10656) to authorize air mail service between New York, N. Y., and Los Angeles and San Francisco, Calif.; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

By Mr. HADLEY: A bill (H. R. 10657) to construct a public building for a post office at the city of Port Angeles, Wash.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. WALSH: A bill (H. R. 10658) for the improvement of the harbor at Scituate, Mass.; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. TINKHAM: Resolution (H. Res. 394) requesting the Attorney General to furnish to the House of Representatives certain information regarding the fixing the price of sugar; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. CANTRILL: A bill (H. R. 10659) granting an increase of pension to Jane Polsgrove; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. CHINDBLOM: A bill (H. R. 10660) granting an increase of pension to Lula M. Jones; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. DEWALT: A bill (H. R. 10661) granting an increase of pension to James D. Ash; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HICKEY: A bill (H. R. 10662) granting a pension to Frances E. Parmater; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HOCH: A bill (H. R. 10663) granting an increase of pension to Robert S. McCreary; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10664) granting an increase of pension to Margaret Patton; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. IRELAND: A bill (H. R. 10665) granting an increase of pension to Noah C. Reichelderfer; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10666) granting a pension to Nellie F. Boyd; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10667) granting an increase of pension to Lavina Humfrey; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10668) granting an increase of pension to Joseph Black; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LONERGAN: A bill (H. R. 10669) granting an increase of pension to Lillian Brown; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. McPHERSON: A bill (H. R. 10670) granting a pension to George Wilson; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10671) for the relief of Catharine Bedell; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. MILLER: A bill (H. R. 10672) for the relief of George D. Root; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. SELLS: A bill (H. R. 10673) granting an increase of pension to J. F. Smith; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee: Papers accompanying the bill (H. R. 10624) granting an increase of pension to Mary S. Wilson; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. ELSTON: Resolutions of the Berkeley Defense Corps, Berkeley, Calif., recommending acceptance by the United States of a mandatory for Armenia; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. FULLER of Illinois: Petition of Eli Bowyer Post, No. 92, Department of Illinois, Grand Army of the Republic, supporting general pension bill, House bill 9369; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. McGLENNON: Petition of the Grand Lodge of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, for the enactment of House bill 1412, known as the Mondell bill; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania: Resolution of the Philadelphia Chamber of Commerce, approving the action taken by the Department of Justice for the suppression of radicalism in the United States; also urging Congress to amend immigration laws so as to exclude from the country undesirable aliens; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. O'CONNELL: Petition of Detectives' Endownment Association of the city of New York, favoring the passage of House bill 6659; to the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department.

By Mr. SINCLAIR: Petition of executives of American Train Dispatchers' Association, Railroad Yardmasters of America, Railway Traveling Auditors' Association, Roadmasters and Supervisors' Association, and National Order of Railroad Claim Men, asking that Congress safeguard semiofficial employees of the railroads in pending railroad legislation in the right to have their grievances as to wages or discriminations settled in the courts created for adjustment of grievances of the classified employees; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, petition of Lodge No. 42, International Association of Machinists, Williston, N. Dak., protesting against the return of the railroads to private operation, and protesting against the labor organizations liability clause in the Esch bill; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota: Petition of North Dakota Educational Institution, adopted at Minot, N. Dak., indorsing the Smith-Towner bill; to the Committee on Education.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, November 19, 1919.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we come before Thee as we face the tremendous responsibilities of this hour. The welfare of millions is dependent upon the action of the Senate. We would seek the guidance of the God of our fathers in the performance of our duty. We pray for Thy spirit, the spirit of wisdom and counsel, the spirit of a sound mind, that we may do our duty as in God's sight, and so well perform it as that it may have Thy approval. We ask for Jesus' sake. Amen.

TREATY OF PEACE WITH GERMANY.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the treaty of peace with Germany.

The Senate, in open executive session, resumed the consideration of the treaty of peace with Germany.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Hale	McNary	Smith, Ariz.
Ball	Harding	Moses	Smith, Ga.
Bankhead	Harris	Myers	Smith, Md.
Beckham	Harrison	Nelson	Smith, S. C.
Borah	Henderson	New	Smoot
Brandegee	Hitchcock	Newberry	Spencer
Calder	Johnson, Calif.	Norris	Stanley
Capper	Johnson, S. Dak.	Nugent	Sterling
Chamberlain	Jones, N. Mex.	Overman	Sutherland
Colt	Jones, Wash.	Owen	Swanson
Culberson	Kellogg	Page	Thomas
Cummins	Kendrick	Penrose	Townsend
Curtis	Kenyon	Phelan	Trammell
Dial	Keyes	Phipps	Underwood
Dillingham	King	Pittman	Wadsworth
Edge	Kirby	Poindexter	Walsh, Mass.
Elkins	Knox	Pomerene	Walsh, Mont.
Fernald	La Follette	Ransdell	Warren
Fletcher	Lenroot	Reed	Watson
Frelinghuysen	Lodge	Robinson	Williams
Gay	McCormick	Sheppard	Wolcott
Gerry	McCumber	Sherman
Gore	McKellar	Shields
Gronna	McLean	Simmons

The VICE PRESIDENT. Ninety-three Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I present the resolution of ratification, including the reservations adopted by the Senate. I am very sorry that we have not copies of it. I am told that it will be here in a few moments, so that every Senator can have a copy.

Mr. President, I understood that it was desired that the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] might have the opportunity to offer for the resolution which I have moved a substitute ratifying the treaty without any reservation or amendment whatever, just as it stands. If the Senator desires to do so, I ask unanimous consent that he may be permitted to offer as a substitute for the resolution I have presented a resolution ratifying the treaty without any amendment or reservation.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I call the Senator's attention to the use of language which is somewhat different in the resolution as printed from the reservation adopted by the Senate. I refer to the first reservation, where it reads—

The reservations and understandings adopted by the Senate are.

And so forth. Instead of the word "understandings" the Secretary read "conditions."

Mr. LODGE. The word "conditions" was put in by a mistake. That is not the way the reservation was adopted. The language ought to be "reservations and understandings."

Mr. FLETCHER. But the resolution does not contain the word "understandings"; it contains the word "conditions."

Mr. LODGE. It must contain the word "understandings." I want to say to the Senator that in some way the language of the first sentence has been incorrectly stated. The correct reading of the first resolution is "reservations and understandings."

Mr. FLETCHER. I think as it has been read, if the Senator will allow me, the word "conditions" has been used instead of "understandings."

Mr. LODGE. The word "conditions" was not intended and has no business there.

Mr. FLETCHER. I am speaking of the resolution as it was read.

Mr. LODGE. There has been omitted the clause "which are hereby made a part and a condition of the resolution of ratification." That is the phrase which was used. On yesterday in conjunction with the officials at the desk I arranged a correct copy of the resolution, but I understand the Secretary can not give me that copy now, it having gone to the Printing Office. However, it is not correctly stated. I am sorry to delay the Senate but I must make it correct. [A pause.]

I now have a corrected copy as it was adopted by the Senate. I am using the committee print which has just come from the printer from which is omitted one clause which Senators can put in for themselves. As corrected the resolution reads:

Resolved (two-thirds of the Senators present concurring therein), That the Senate advise and consent to the ratification of the treaty of peace with Germany concluded at Versailles on the 28th day of June, 1919, subject to the following reservations and understandings, which are hereby made a part and condition of this resolution of ratification, which ratification is not to take effect or bind the United States until the said reservations and understandings adopted by the Senate have been accepted by an exchange of notes as a part and a condition of this resolution of ratification by at least three of the four principal allied and associated powers, to wit, Great Britain, France, Italy, and Japan.

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. President, will the Senator read the omitted clause a second time?

Mr. LODGE. The omitted clause, coming after the word "understandings," is "which are hereby made a part and condition of this resolution of ratification."

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. Has the Senate upon its Secretary's desk the absolute record of what we did, to which we can refer without any reference to what the printers have done, or what mistakes there may be in the print; or, are these original records sent to the printer?

The VICE PRESIDENT. They are not original records. As reservations are adopted they appear in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Mr. KNOX. Do they not appear in any minute book?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Oh, yes; certainly.

Mr. LODGE. They all appear in the Journal.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Yes; they all appear in the Journal.

Mr. LODGE. And they have all been taken from the Journal, and are in this print from the committee.

Mr. KNOX. Very well. Then we are in such a position that if we find an error here we can correct it by reference to the Journal. Is that the idea?

Mr. LODGE. Absolutely. They were taken carefully from the Journal last night.

I submitted a unanimous-consent request, Mr. President.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I understand that the Senator from Massachusetts suggests that the Senate might give unanimous consent for us to propose a resolution of unqualified ratification to be voted on at this time.

I thank the Senator from Massachusetts for the suggestion; but it is the consensus of opinion over here that inasmuch as the Senate has already taken up these reservations and has committed itself to the reservations proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts, it would not be timely to propose now, while Senators are bound by pledges, a resolution of unqualified ratification. If the Senator will permit us to secure unanimous consent for such a resolution immediately following the vote upon his resolution, we shall be very glad to avail ourselves of it.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, of course, if the Senator does not care for the unanimous consent which I have asked for, I shall withdraw my request; but I can assure him that he is mistaken if he thinks that pledges have been given which will be set aside. There have been no pledges. The votes that have been given have been the free, undictated votes of the Senators on this side, and, in my judgment, they will not be modified by any talk of withdrawal of pledges.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I have given the best thought of which I was capable to this treaty and to these reservations. I have declined to allow my views to be controlled by those of any one else. There are parts of these reservations that do not accord exactly with what I would prefer.

The introductory resolution, I think, is ill-advised. I believe it would be much better if, by acquiescence, the other nations agreed to our action, and if our treaty with Germany was in no sense dependent even upon their acquiescence. I regard the language in the Monroe doctrine reservation as too extreme, and also in the Shantung reservation. But, Mr. President, the treaty with these reservations is vastly better than the treaty without them. As between the treaty with these reservations and a resolution of ratification without reservations, I have no difficulty in reaching a conclusion. These reservations free the treaty from language of uncertainty. They take from it provisions doubtful, provisions which, both on account of uncertainty and their doubtful nature, must necessarily lead to disputes, and from disputes to war.

There is no intelligent provision in the treaty as to who shall determine whether a nation seeking to withdraw has complied with its obligations. The second reservation clarifies that question, and declares that the United States will pass for itself upon the question of a performance of its obligations in case of a notice to withdraw.

The language of the treaty with reference to our domestic problems, including immigration, with reference to the questions that are to be investigated by the council and even submitted to arbitration, is doubtful and unsatisfactory. It is language calculated to bring dispute, and to involve this Nation in war. It is language not to preserve peace, but language to bring war. The reservation upon that subject is excellent, and meets my hearty approval.

The language of the league covenant with reference to mandates is doubtful and uncertain. Constructed by an Englishman, naturally he had the English practice in view; and under the English practice the representative of Great Britain in the council, under the direction of the ministry in London, would control the action of Great Britain and accept mandates. I am utterly unwilling for a member of the council 3,000 miles away, even by direction of the President, to put a mandate upon the United States, and especially that mandate which is now being so often suggested—a mandate for one country to handle the Turkish Empire.

The language in the covenant grew out of the English practice. While this great power is given to the English ministry, it is all subject to the control of Parliament, because the moment the British ministry disregards the wishes of Parliament a vote of disapproval retires the ministry. No such system exists in this country, but rather if a Member of the Senate disagrees with the administration, steps are taken to retire the Senator. [Laughter.]

The league covenant gives Great Britain six votes and gives the United States only one vote in the league assembly. A reservation provides that the United States will assume no obligation to be bound by any vote or decision of the league where a member and its colonies cast more than one vote.

Then, when we come to article 10, the reservation is not quite as strong as I wish it were, but it is a vast improvement upon the article as it is found in the covenant. I can not consent to see a treaty fastened upon this country, if I can prevent it, which places upon our country the burden that the first paragraph of article 10 places upon it. I hope no treaty will ever be ratified with a reservation less strong, so far as article 10 goes, than the reservation now in this list of reservations. To preserve the status quo of the world is practically its effect. After exquisite language about "freeing subject nations" and "self-determination" expressing the attitude of the United States, we practically assume under article 10 the burden of maintaining the status quo, when nearly one-third of the peoples of the world are subject nations under our four principal allies. I can not vote for such an article. I can not vote such an obligation upon the people of my country. I can not vote to draft our boys for every war and to maintain the present world status. I shall vote for the resolution and the reservations that have been presented, although, as I stated before, in several respects I would be gratified to see them changed; but they are so much better than the treaty as it stands that, as I desire the treaty ratified even with these reservations, I support them.

Mr. President, it is a question for each Senator to decide for himself. I wish each Senator would decide it for himself. Party obligations can not rise as high as duty to your country. I dislike to disagree with my party associates, but on a question of this importance I am constrained to do so. I believe that the league covenant as it stands involves such sacred rights of our country, and is calculated to bring such distress upon our people, that I would be faithless to my obligations if I failed to vote for ratification with reservation.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President, I have voted in the Committee on Foreign Relations and also in the Senate for the reservations that are attached to this resolution of ratification, but as I intend to vote against the resolution of ratification itself I think I should place in the RECORD the reasons for that course.

I voted for the reservations because I wanted to make the treaty as little harmful and as little obnoxious to our Constitution and the spirit and institutions of my country as it was possible, keeping in view the temper of the committee and the temper of the Senate. But, Mr. President, while these reservations have been helpful in that direction, in my deliberate judgment, formed after the most careful and painstaking study of this instrument, a study undertaken with no original attitude of unfriendliness toward it, as it stands with these reservations it is my judgment that it imposes obligations upon the United States which under our Constitution can not be imposed by the treaty-making power. It delegates powers and functions to an extraneous body of such a nature that only the people of the United States by an amendment to the Constitution could confer, and I think no man need make apology who can conscientiously say that if he were to vote for the resolution of ratification of this treaty he would be consciously committing deliberate perjury, perjury to the oath taken to support the Constitution against foreign and domestic enemies—and it has been assailed by both—and converting his seat here from a seat of honor to a seat of dishonor.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I have received from the press a copy of a letter which has been given out, I understand, and which I think, as the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] has not offered it, should be read at this time before we vote.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Secretary will read.

Mr. LODGE. It can be read in my time.

The Secretary read as follows:

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, 18 November, 1919.

MY DEAR SENATOR: You were good enough to bring me word that the Democratic Senators supporting the treaty expected to hold a conference before the final vote on the Lodge resolution of ratification and that they would be glad to receive a word of counsel from me.

I should hesitate to offer it in any detail, but I assume that the Senators only desire my judgment upon the all-important question of the final vote on the resolution containing the many reservations by Senator LODGE. On that I can not hesitate, for, in my opinion, the resolution in that form does not provide for ratification but, rather, for the nullification of the treaty. I sincerely hope that the friends and supporters of the treaty will vote against the Lodge resolution of ratification.

I understand that the door will probably then be open for a genuine resolution of ratification.

I trust that all true friends of the treaty will refuse to support the Lodge resolution.

Cordially and sincerely, yours,

(Signed) WOODROW WILSON.

Hon. G. M. HITCHCOCK,
United States Senate.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I think comment is superfluous, and I shall make none.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, the conclusion which I have reached regarding the pending resolution was reached long before I was made acquainted with the contents of the letter which has just been read to the Senate.

I shall vote against the ratification of the treaty. The reasons which animate me to that end I have so frequently stated upon the floor of the Senate that it is not necessary for me to say more at this time.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, for reasons very different from those asserted by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX], it is my purpose to vote against the pending resolution of ratification incorporating reservations adopted by a majority of Senators.

During several months, to the exclusion of nearly all other important business, the Senate has had under consideration the treaty of peace with Germany. It now seems probable, unless the advocates of unqualified ratification and so-called reservation Senators reconcile differences, that the result of our labors may be failure. The Senate is about to vote on an alleged resolution of ratification, a resolution which, it seems to me, does not ratify, but which in fact and in legal effect, constitutes a rejection of this treaty.

All Senators recognize the importance of the vote soon to be taken. This vote invites the judgment of the people of this country, and, indeed, the judgment of all mankind, upon the policy implied in the resolution of ratification incorporating reservations agreed to by the majority.

Many of us are convinced that the adoption of the pending resolution, as I have already stated, will accomplish no useful purpose. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] has had read into the RECORD a letter issued by the President, in which that officer, representing a part of the treaty-making power, declares that the pending resolution of ratification can not accomplish ratification; that it is in fact rejection of the treaty; and therefore it is futile to adopt the resolution.

The statement that the resolution of ratification will in fact defeat the treaty will occasion no regret to the Senators who from the beginning have advocated its rejection. They have apparently succeeded, temporarily at least, in accomplishing indirectly what could not be done openly and frankly. Through alleged reservations, which will not likely be accepted by other parties to the treaty, they seek to exclude the United States from fellowship with her late allies and from membership in the league of nations. In almost every line of the reservations is implied antagonism of Senators toward the President. Suspicion and mistrust of the nations associated with this Government in the recent war are reflected by the reservations, sometimes poorly concealed, often clearly evinced.

The avowed purpose is to completely repudiate every obligation of this Government to encourage and sustain the new and feeble States separated, by our assistance during the war, from their former sovereignties by withholding from them the moral and military power of the United States.

To me it seems regrettable beyond expression that Senators who desire to improve the treaty and who desire also that it shall become effective should lend their assistance to a course in which the avowed enemies of the league of nations must find unbounded gratification and pleasure. Is it not unpardonable for friends of the treaty to couple with the resolution of ratification conditions designed to deprive the Executive of his constitutional functions? It is worse than idle—it seems to me hypocritical—to impose terms and conditions which make the exchange of ratifications impracticable, if not impossible.

Membership in the league of nations is treated, in the reservations, with so little dignity and as of such slight importance as to authorize its termination by the passage of a mere concurrent resolution of Congress. This attempt to deny to the President participation in withdrawal by this Government from the league and to vest that authority solely in the two Houses of Congress in disregard of the plain provision of the Constitution displays a spirit of narrow opposition to the Executive unworthy of the subject and unworthy of the Senate of the United States.

The requirement that before ratification by the United States shall become effective the reservations adopted by the Senate must be approved by three of the four principal allied powers is designed to make difficult the exchange of ratifications. Mr. President, it can have no other purpose; it can accomplish no other end.

The reservation respecting article 10 nullifies the most vital provision in the league of nations contract. It absolves the United States from any obligation to assist in enforcing the terms of peace, an obligation that the leader of the majority, in his speech to this body on the 23d day of August, 1918, and again in December of the same year, asserted as one which the United States can not without dishonor avoid or escape.

No Senator can doubt that the repudiation by the United States of the undertaking in article 10 to respect and preserve the territorial integrity and political independence of the other members of the league weakens, if it does not destroy, one of the principal agencies or means provided by the league for the prevention of international war.

The reservation withholding the agreement of the United States to the arrangement in the treaty respecting Japanese rights in Shantung, and reserving for this Government freedom of action in case of controversy between China and Japan regarding the subject, admittedly will not be accepted by Japan, and probably it will not be accepted by either France or Great Britain. In making this declaration, I repeat the statement made in the Senate a day or two ago by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER], and I make the inquiry how any friend of the treaty who wants it ratified, and who realizes that under these reservations our ratification can not become effective unless it is approved by three of the four principal allied powers—I make the inquiry now how a Senator who takes that view of the subject and wants the treaty ratified can support the pending resolution?

It may be, Mr. President, that the friends of this treaty have made a mistake. Undoubtedly the friends of the treaty, and not its enemies, should dictate the policy of the Senate concerning ratification. The Senators who have opposed ratification from the beginning have imposed upon an overwhelming majority of the Senate, by their power and influence, their views respecting the resolution of ratification.

As the measure now comes before the Senate it comes with the open declaration of the Executive, who is the sole agency through whom this Government may exchange ratifications, that that act will not be accomplished. It comes with the recognition of the fact by the Senators who favor the treaty that the reservations are of such a nature that they will not be accepted by other nations.

Make no mistake about it. The Senate should either ratify this treaty unqualifiedly or upon such terms and conditions as will justify the Executive and enable him speedily to conclude peace by an exchange of ratifications.

The resolution of the Senator from Massachusetts incorporating the reservations as agreed upon will probably result in the refusal of the Executive to attempt to procure the consent and approval of three of the four principal allied powers. If he should make the attempt, it is plain that our self-respecting allies will not accept the terms and conditions which we seek to impose by these reservations. Why, then, Mr. President, should the resolution proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts be agreed to? Every Senator knows that it can not effectuate peace. The Senator from Massachusetts himself on last Sunday issued a statement to the press in which he declared that "The treaty is dead."

I call now upon the friends of the treaty to take charge of the corpse. By their action they can revitalize it. The enemies of the treaty, Senators who do not favor its ratification, have controlled the proceedings of the Senate heretofore. It is time now that those of us who favor the treaty, and we have the necessary number, should get together and ratify it.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I turn for solace and for guidance to Holy Writ and quote from the Book of Job:

> Shall not the multitude of words be answered? And shall a man full of talk be justified?

I felicitate myself on this occasion, Mr. President, as, for the first time since the armistice was signed, finding myself in accord and voting with the administration. [Laughter in the galleries.]

The VICE PRESIDENT. It may just as well be understood now as at any time that occupants of the galleries must keep order or the doorkeepers will remove the offending visitors.

Mr. SHERMAN. I, too, shall vote against the treaty and the reservations attached to the resolution, much as I regret to part company with some of my beloved associates on both sides of this Chamber.

The future of this measure is shrouded in uncertainty. Perchance it sleepeth only and waits for our all-wise Executive to rouse it from its torpor and again threaten us with its pristine beauty and excellence. It may be pleasingly arrayed in alliterative phrase and sonorous periods cunningly placed to obscure the selfish, boiling hell of the original text. Every ambush to the military man who is caught thereby looks mild until it starts into action. Beware of future reservations that do not reserve. It is impossible to divine the inopportune time when this alien skeleton in the Executive closet will again be dangled in this Chamber. In more pious days our forbears spoke of coming human events to occur at early candlelight if Providence permitted. Henceforth matters of great pith and moment will wait at any time on the nerve centers and digestive apparatus of statesmen, Providence omitted. The cloture which we have applied for the first time will stick closer than a brother when that hour strikes. Nothing but a reversed majority in this Chamber can relax its strangle hold upon this body.

Few officials handle public business with the economy and vigilance used in private life. That few who do seldom survive long on elective tickets. The dear people themselves are the cause and the same people pay the dear price, such of them as pay anything. I know some philanthropists and very zealous charity workers who industriously, with much loud advertising of their manifold virtues, relieve the poor at somebody else's expense. Such good Samaritans are ever ready to experiment and exploit another's pocketbook.

Some Senators say this measure is a promising experiment and may do some good. Distance lends enchantment to the far-away view, as usual, tinged in the haze of general abstractions. Not one of them would try such an experiment on his own person or private fortune. If, happily, the reservations adopted prove the death of the treaty, let this be my funeral oration over the defunct remains. I shall not, on this measure, again be heard. I make that announcement to relieve a suffering Senate and sorely oppressed public. It is the only time when I have failed to speak well of the departed. To do otherwise would rise to a height of dissimulation which I can not attempt.

This league and treaty, whether reserved or otherwise, are a charter of an international homicide club. Reservations do not relieve us of the usual responsibility of charter members. It converts Europe into a legalized cockpit, and the three continents of the Eastern Hemisphere into philanthropic shambles covering the selfishness of ancient nations with the cloak of altruism.

The sea is not made free. It is open under this league only to the strongest navy, and its only law is that reaching from Salamis to Scapa Flow. The rule is still one of superior force in the midst of empty Executive essays and the learned lying jargon of Old World diplomacy.

This instrument we are asked to ratify is grasping and heartless, godless and defiant of human rights and national independence. It contains no maxims of justice. It writes no code of laws for nations. It advances no remedy. It only declares its omnipotence and vests power. It undertakes to place that supreme power in the hands of the few without restraint or limitation save as imposed by the god of battles. It reverts to barbaric force and survives, if at all, upon the sword. Professing to announce the modern evangel of civilized nations, it turns to the practices of the warriors and conquerors of every age to justify its treacherous creed. It is built upon force and can not last unless by the wars it mendaciously claims it will end. Power, remorseless, cruel, and cold as the muzzle of the British cannon with which it girds the world, inspires its articles and broods like an evil spirit over this malign thing.

Universal peace is graven above its portals and perpetual war abides beneath its alien dome. If it shall endure, it consecrates its iniquity beneath the changeless sway of its assumed, comprehensive, all-embracing knowledge of its founders. If they know as much as their handiwork imports, their like has not heretofore appeared on earth and no man born of woman is fit to succeed them. "No doubt but ye are the people, and wisdom shall die with you." After them the deluge, for what aspiring mortal shall be worthy! Their work is presented to us as the collected, sublimated wisdom of mankind. To amend it the Senate has decided is hazardous, if not a profanation. To attach reservations to the ratifying act is blasphemy to the deserted minority remnant who mourn the mild reservationists' fall from ineffable grace. Hope springs eternal in their devoted breasts, for the President vows he will not return to Europe with the Americanized document. An Executive pigeonhole will bury it forever unless a new and more European set of reservations are substituted. The faithful look longingly and reproachfully, if not lovingly, at Republicans who browse on the borderland between the affairs of our own and other countries. When the Executive displeasure shall have been sufficiently manifested it is hoped a milder set of reservations may be devised, denatured of the Americanism which may find favor with some of their former well-wishers on this side of the Chamber.

If a diluted set of reservations appear and are held in order, sealed with the Executive stamp, they will face a dumb and voiceless Senate, for it has clotured itself into speechless silence, punctuated only with roll calls. Whatever the effect of the mild reservations hereafter appearing in this Chamber, discussion is gagged and no means remain here to reach the public opinion that has approved, if not caused, these adopted reservations. More than the necessary two-thirds of the Senators have taken the oath of total forensic abstinence. The pledge binds not alone on these reservations but all future ones proposed with every move hereafter taken or submitted on the league and treaty.

The Senate is a continuing body. Not like the House of Representatives do its Members pass through the alembic of a ballot box every two years, but two-thirds of its membership hold continuously from one Congress to another. The Senate under cloture sits a chamber of silence and a sepulcher of parliamentary debate.

As originally presented, unvexed by reservations, preserving, it is claimed, American sovereignty and independence, this document is declared to be all sufficient for the future, reaching to remote ages and anticipating conditions unknown to human ken. It is supposed to be adequate for generations unborn, for it proposes to shackle them with the unbreakable manacles of its perpetual covenants. Its dominant spirits are self-appointed guardians of the world's geography and the nations thereof. The league's articles forge mighty instruments out of erring mortal men. They are set upon thrones of illimitable world sovereignty. Their jurisdiction covers all human affairs and their powers are entirely adequate for the duties conferred.

Nothing is sacred from their meddling, intrusive hand. No barrier will stay their invasion. The threshold of no man's house is safe from their spies and agents. There is no privacy they regard; no human right they are bound to respect. There is no law they may not violate, and no privilege of citizen or subject they may not revoke or outrage. Constitutions and charters dissolve at their arbitrary touch, and a nation's statutes are silent before their edicts.

No king ever wore the crown of such sovereignty or stretched his scepter over such universal or absolute dominion. Nations become their pawns, officials of republics and monarchies alike become their vassals. They create States, survey their boundaries, examine their resources for future seizure or levy, chart and direct their access to the sea whose maritime laws wait on the breath of their unbounded power. They denote forms of government. They put up and pull down rulers. Whole peoples are cast headlong into eternal association with their inveterate and hereditary enemies. Decrees are issued that shame the rescripts of Cæsar. Even now the oligarchy assumes the look and stature of absolutism that dwarf the Corsican at the zenith of his imperial sway. It gathers the chosen nations beneath its shelter and exiles others to the limbo of its displeasure. Inevitably it must and does assemble the world's powers into two great groups. It is not in man or in human nature peaceably to endure such transcendent authority. Antagonism is invited. The league's very assumptions will rally every nation with a vestige of patriotism beneath the flag that typifies opposition. It prepares the way and inspires the spirit of armed collision.

It can not be an agency of peace when it assembles all the causes that have moved sovereign nations to war ever since history has taught how little mankind's primeval passions have changed in centuries. Human credulity is challenged by this collection of alien self-interests offered us as the fountainhead of eternal peace. It is the potent, insidious sneak thief of Europe disguised in the cloak of international philanthropy. In Asia, where one of the principal allied powers spent the whole period of the war in garnering the commerce of the distressed nations of the world and storing the gold and means with which to expand itself by force the league is the ambush to delay and deceive us. This measure is even now pillaging American resources, binding our young men on the bloody altars of Europe's quarrels, and riveting on us the government of a foreign capital.

The territory it has seized, the ports it has taken, the conqueror's terms imposed, the empires dismembered, the rancorous feuds created, coupled with the insane meddling of our country at every danger point in Europe's thousand years of jealous struggle, the imbecile interference in Asiatic controversy have made this oligarchy, if we enter it even with reservations, a source of eternal woe. If we vote it upon our people, it will reach out its mighty hand to smite the millions who come after us to their undoing and ceaseless affliction.

Even now, Mr. President, the great tax powers of nations are sought by this power-grasping oligarchy. The men dimly visible behind the vast authority of the league's council are moving steadily toward their goal. How little of this towering fabric of supermen is known to the victimized people whose blood and toil will pay the price of this merciless coterie. Against the lack of the multitude's knowledge is pitted the precise, definite purpose of Europe to drag the United States, its resurces, and its potential military power into the den of the Old World's endless intrigues and future wars. Hasten the day of universal military training, for a prepared militant America girt for action and inspired by a rebirth of national spirit to burst the fetters bound upon this Republic is the only avenue of our safety. Only another American revolution will break the dominion of alien power once it settles on us.

The first step in this stupendous usurpation is to internationalize the war debt. This accomplished, the ceaseless vigilance of the world's creditors is the lever acting on the fulcrum of a great funded debt. Such a power makes the league's council the receiver general of all terrestrial finances. It administers and audits the fiscal affairs of nations and sits perpetually at the receipt of customs of every people.

An international banker is a man without a country. His allegiance is to government accounts and the blood of his patriotism circulates responsively to the world's balance of gold in his vaults. I denounce him and his alien breed. I shall join issue between him and the American people; and if it be called talking to the galleries, so let it be. We will see who votes—the galleries or the international bankers—in this country. Let those who vote to subject our country to their mercenary creed reckon with an aroused indignant country's wrath at their betrayal of our blood for gold.

Usurped power once enthroned is never still. It constantly advances to further usurpations until it reaches the summit of absolutism and degrades and destroys the sovereign authority of independent States. The tremendous powers of taxation by steady attrition of usurping executives, the aggressions of internationalized union labor, and foreign economic forces will break down the resisting power of Congress, the weakest branch of Federal Government. Union labor leaders are committed to the program. Congress, too, is beginning to show its usual vacillation and to waver under fire. Many of its Members think more of succeeding themselves than they do of performing their duties. Unless the American people shall transfuse into the Congress a new spirit through an electoral convulsion their sovereignty will pass to the potent and ancient arm of the Eastern Hemisphere. Do not underrate the international banker and the labor leaders now joined in a common enterprise.

But will not American diplomacy defend? The American is an infant in world diplomacy. No training in that involved school of selfish intrigue and international perjury is given our ambassadors. We are the sport of dissembled selfishness and the derision of the veteran plunderers of the world's treasury and territory. The spirit of Talleyrand and Metternich still speaks in Europe through the lips of adroit and worthy successors. Against them the American delegates to the peace conference were a quintet of as promising greenhorns as ever fell into the hands of men of genius.

Vain indeed were the President's Spartan band of thirteen hundred retainers, with their provincial wisdom, marshaled by the distinguished Col. House. They went down ingloriously in the first encounter with the veteran diplomats of Europe and Asia. The doughty Col. House ought to be satisfied now. He died with his diplomatic boots on and his indomitable and inscrutable face to the foe. He wished it so in his latest biography extant. Our delegation in "gay Paree" lost their characters and our money, but escaped with their lives and a belated copy of the league of nations. This souvenir of their sojourn abroad bristles with the selfish philosophy of Abe Potash, sharpened with the cruel avarice of Shylock, and interwoven with the crude commercialism of David Harum. Under it we would be done first, without a chance to do anybody or anything in return.

Comedy treads on the heels of tragedy. Mirth and tears follow each other over every face, etched by sorrow's compelling hand. The cap and bells ever peep from unexpected nooks near the scaffold and the headsman. Laughter waits on the soberest occasion, and lurks beside the Æsop and the Solomon. In the heretofore unostentatious annals of our country nothing ever approached the departure of our peace commission last December. It was preceded by several years of brave array of notes and messages, resting on a broad foundation of universal advice, crowned by the 14 points, which were again fatally injured on yesterday. I did not mean to insult the minority by voting with them on that occasion, but I was only mindful of historic conditions and sought, once in my life, to be consistent.

Our five delegates, nominal in number, reduced in the ultimate analysis to one, sailed from our shores, "sonorous metal blowing martial sounds," and the plaudits of the multitude gladdening their ears. Europe made holiday when it or he arrived. Some of it was lodged in the palaces of kings and nobles. Likewise there was dining from golden platters. Repose was taken where statues, rare tapestries, and the canvas of ancient masters soothed the weary to their slumbers. Swarms of lackeys and many lords of the bedchamber encompassed about the head of the delegation, and adulation sat upon his doorstep. It bore abundant fruit. His hosts received the plenteous spoils of war in the treaty and we were vouchsafed the league of nations. And, now, in the eighth month of the second hegira, the league, like Hamlet's uncle, is become a king of shreds and patches—so much so that those who have stood sponsors for it and who have fought long and well and prayed with the zeal that comes to them who harken to the call of the muezzin to prayer are no longer able, with the reservations and the letter from the head of the delegation, to give it further their support. Hence, the time adverted to, when I joined with them. Our motives would not bear analysis, but our votes will be alike.

The faithful, indeed, swear by the beard of the prophet that they will have none of it. The cavalcade, with its stately band of retainers, its squandered millions, its lofty structure, ambitious as the Tower of Babel, is even now toppling to its fall. All is vanity and vexatious of spirit. Out of it the American will emerge purified and strengthened, resolved anew that institutional government and the Republic shall endure.

Only posterity can determine whether the world-heralded peace pilgrimage ranks with Ford's cruise of Oscar II or the Retreat of the Ten Thousand. Its portrayal at present can not be definitely assigned. I am unable to decide whether it requires a humorist or a historian, a Mark Twain or a Xenophon. I am disposed to allot the task to the future humorist, if justice is to be done to the entire unhappy affair.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, the reading of the letter from His Excellency the President of the United States a short time ago and its insertion in the RECORD, particularly in view of the paragraph which inferred that, following a possible negative vote on the resolution of ratification now before the Senate, there would be a further opportunity to prepare and pass a resolution of ratification which met the approval of the President, leads me to make a very brief statement.

So far as I am concerned, I feel that the time for any material changes in the resolution of ratification or in the various reservations that have been perfected and adopted by a majority vote of the Senate has passed. We have been considering for weeks and months various suggestions for reservations through which our country could be properly protected in this great and to an extent experimental proposition before us. On this side of the Chamber, as is well known, we have probably had every viewpoint; those who are unquestionably and conscientiously opposed to the whole plan of the league and have consistently voted that way; others who just as conscientiously believed there was a possibility of preventing war in the future by a combination of nations, resulting in an interchange of viewpoints, and, at least, by retaining in the covenant that to me very important section which provides that no member nation in case of a dispute or disagreement shall declare war until three months have passed.

As is well known, we have met and discussed various suggested reservations; as is well known, changes have been made and compromises have been made; these are days of compromises; and when the extreme viewpoints that had been developed on both sides of the Chamber were thoroughly understood, it appealed to me then that the duty of a strong man was to give and take; not to compromise with wrong, but to endeavor to reach a common agreement whereby the best results could be attained and the league authorized. It is time for sincere friends of the league on the other side of the Chamber to rally to its support. Personally I have no fear of our allies refusing to acquiesce in our reservations if they are presented to them. We do not attempt by reservations to dictate to them. We only protect our own destiny and no way deny them a similar privilege, and if they made such reservations the league would function just the same without giving up individually sovereignty and independence.

Again, may I say with a conviction—which is very positive, so far as I am personally concerned—the time for further compromise has passed. I might sum it up in one sentence—and it is not said unkindly or bluntly—but here is the treaty with a resolution of ratification, perfected after weeks of consideration, of compromise, of change, and of an attempt to meet diverse viewpoints; here it is; take it or leave it alone.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, in the letter of the President, which the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] had read to the Democratic conference this morning and which was read in the Senate this afternoon, the President, speaking of the pending resolution, used this language:

> In my opinion the resolution in that form does not provide for ratification, but rather for the nullification of the treaty.

Mr. President, the time has gone by when general statements like that, having no foundation in fact, can be longer made and the American people be deceived thereby. That statement ought not to go unchallenged before the vote is taken, and I propose to take a few minutes of the Senate's time in examining what is left of the league-of-nations covenant and of the treaty if the treaty be ratified with the reservations attached.

Beginning wih the league covenant, we read articles 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, and 7. The reservations do not affect any of those seven articles except in two particulars—one with reference to the right of withdrawal of the United States from the league, and the reservation that has been adopted in that respect is in exact accord with the interpretation given to the treaty by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] and many other Senators upon the other side.

The other reservation affecting these articles is that with respect to equality of voting, which was adopted last night. If Senators upon the other side desire to take the position that protection of the United States from the 6 votes of the British Empire to our 1 vote nullifies the treaty, very well; let them take it; we will let the American people decide.

Coming to article 8, the only effect the reservation has upon that article is that, if at any time the United States should adopt a plan for disarmament, whenever the United States is engaged in war or is threatened with invasion it may have the right to increase its armament without the consent of the council or the league. Are any of the Senators who propose to defeat this treaty to-day because of the reservations opposed to that? Do any Senators upon the other side of the aisle desire to put the United States in a position where, if it is engaged in war, it can not increase its armament to defend itself without the consent of other powers?

We next come to article 9, which the reservations do not affect in the slightest degree. The next article is article 10. That has been discussed so often, and the question involved is so clear to every Senator, that I am not going to take time upon it now, except to say that the real issue between us is not whether there shall be a league of nations, but the real issue is whether the President of the United States and the Senate of the United States shall to-day enter into an obligation that will compel our boys for all time to fight in every war that may occur in every quarter of the globe without their consent or the consent—the free consent—of the representatives whom they have chosen in the House of Representatives and in the Senate.

We are unwilling to enter into such an obligation; and I would resign my seat in the Senate, Mr. President, before I would vote to ratify this treaty with the obligation imposed by article 10 as the President of the United States asks us to accept it.

Article 11 is the next article of the league covenant. The reservations do not affect in the slightest degree that article, which, to my mind, is one of the most, if not the most, important article in the league covenant, because under that article we as a member of the league agree that we will meet and discuss in the council or the assembly matters affecting the peace of the world, but without any authority to bind or obligate anyone. Mr. President, as to the value and importance of that article, which, I repeat, is not affected by the reservations, let me quote what President Wilson said on the 4th day of September last:

> Therefore, I want to call your attention, if you will turn to it when you go home, to article 11, following article 10, of the covenant of the league of nations. That article, let me say, is the favorite article in the treaty, so far as I am concerned.

Then he proceeds to detail the very great benefits to be derived by the world because of the presence of that article in the treaty. As I have said, the reservations leave article 11 absolutely intact.

The next articles in the treaty are 12, 13, 14, 15, and 16—and they are all grouped together—relating to arbitration, compulsory inquiry concerning disputes, the agreement not to go to war within nine months after the submission of a dispute, and economic boycotts for violation of any of the provisions of article 12 or 13. Those articles, Mr. President, together with article 11, well warrant the United States in entering into the league of nations, and with those articles adopted the greatest effort will have been made toward the prevention of war that has ever been attempted by any concert of nations. The articles to which I have just referred are not affected in the slightest degree by the reservations that are pending except in two particulars—one that domestic questions are not by the ratification of the treaty submitted to the league. Are you upon the other side of the aisle opposed to that? Do you object to the reservation because we refuse to agree to those articles unless we save to ourselves the right to determine our own domestic questions?

The only other provision in the reservations that affects any of the articles of the covenant is the one relating to article 16, which permits us to trade despite the economic boycott with nationals of other nations residing within our own country or in neutral countries. Otherwise, Mr. President, these reservations leave all of the arbitration and inquiry articles absolutely intact. What was the President's view a short time ago of the importance of these articles which the reservations do not touch in any material particular? He said in his speech at Indianapolis on September 4 last:

> The great bulk of the provisions of that covenant—

> contain these engagements and promises on the part of the States which undertake to become members of it: That in no circumstances will they go to war without first having done one or the other of two things—without first either having submitted the question to arbitration, in which case they agree to abide by the result, or having submitted the questions to discussion by the council of the league of nations, in which case they will allow six months for the discussion and engage not to go to war until three months after the council has announced its opinion upon the subject under dispute. The heart of the covenant of the league is that the nations solemnly covenant not to go to war for nine months after a controversy becomes acute.

That obligation, Mr. President, remains intact in the treaty if it is ratified with these reservations; the reservations do not affect it in the slightest degree. So when you vote to reject this treaty, as you propose to do, you vote to reject a treaty the very heart of which, as the President says, is unaffected in the slightest degree by any of the reservations.

We go on.

Article 17 is not affected by the reservations nor are articles 18, 19, 20, or 21.

Article 22 is affected only by the reservation that no mandate shall be accepted by the United States without the consent of Congress. In voting to reject this treaty this afternoon do you Senators upon the other side take the position that you are against the treaty because you want the President of the United States to accept a mandate for Armenia, a mandate for Turkey, or a mandate for any other country across the seas, without the consent of Congress?

The next article is 23. That is not affected in any degree, except that in the reservation concerning domestic questions we reserve questions concerning labor that are not submitted to the league.

Articles 24, 25, and 26 are not affected in the slightest degree by these reservations.

I have now very hastily gone over what will be left of the covenant if the treaty shall be ratified with these reservations. The heart of it, so denominated by President Wilson, will be left. The beneficial articles, in so far as settling disputes is concerned, will be left intact. What is it that will be taken away? Obligations only, Mr. President; obligations that are imposed by this covenant and relieved from by these reservations that no American citizen, whether in public office or in private life, ought to be willing for a moment to have imposed upon the United States.

Now, let me just for a moment go through these reservations.

The first one, as I have said, relates to withdrawal, and the point is made that it is very objectionable because it provides for withdrawal by concurrent resolution of the Congress of the United States. Do you, sirs, upon the other side of the aisle, take the position in objecting to that provision that although the American people may desire to withdraw from the league and may have elected a Congress in the House and in the Senate pledged to the withdrawal of the United States from the league, nevertheless you wish to frustrate the will of the people of the land by making it subject to a veto of the President? That is the position. Take it if you want to. The American people will never indorse you.

The next reservation relates to article 10, whereby we do relieve ourselves of entering into every quarrel in every quarter of the globe, whereby we relieve ourselves of the obligation to send our boys across the seas to fight—fight, Mr. President, under this obligation just as quickly upon the side of tyranny and of oppression as upon the side of liberty, because under article 10 we will not be permitted to inquire into the justice of the cause in which we are called upon to fight.

Reservation 3 relates to mandates. I discussed that a moment ago.

Reservation 4 relates to domestic questions. Do you take the position that you object to this reservation because you want this league of nations to decide our domestic questions for us? If you do, very well; vote to reject the treaty this afternoon.

Reservation 5 relates to the Monroe doctrine, and the same comment can and should be made with reference to that.

Reservation 6 is the reservation with reference to Shantung. Under this reservation we refuse to assent to the robbery of China by Japan. We say we will have none of it, and we reserve to ourselves full liberty of action with reference to it. You, in voting to reject the treaty this afternoon, will go on record as wishing to condone—not only condone, Mr. President, but participate in—that robbery by your assent to the provisions of the treaty as they stand.

The next reservation is with relation to the appointment of representatives upon these commissions and representatives in the council. That reservation only carries out what the Senator from Nebraska, the leader of the minority, said in a speech here less than a week ago would be done by Congress in every case before appointments would be made. So that that reservation certainly can not be an objectionable one.

The eighth reservation is the one relating to the reparations commission, to which, of course, they do not and can not object.

The same is true of reservation 9. Reservation 10 is the one with reference to limitation of armaments. When you vote to reject the treaty, if you place your opposition upon the ground of reservation 10, you say, as I said a moment ago, that you want the United States to be bound that she will not be able to increase her armaments even though attacked by another nation and engaged in war; but before we can defend ourselves we must go to the council of the league and say, "Please, please, council, can we increase our armaments to defend ourselves?"

The eleventh reservation certainly they can not object to, because it merely declares the existing international law with relation to the duties and rights and obligations of belligerent States.

Reservation 12 is a comparatively minor matter, with relation to the rights of citizens under the alien-enemy act, and, of course, they can not object to that.

Reservation 13 is the one proposed by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER], and withholds assent to the labor provisions of Part XIII of the treaty, but leaves Congress free to accept them in the future if they desire to do so. Do you Senators upon the other side desire to go upon record that under existing conditions and circumstances you desire now to agree to all of the obligations imposed by Part XIII? Is it not, from the standpoint of Americanism, of statesmanship, of common sense, better to wait and find out what kind of a conference this is going to be, whether it is going to be a conference of labor delegates that will conserve real democratic government, or whether it is going to be a conference that is a first aid to Bolshevism and anarchy? Had we not better find out before we enter into that kind of a combination?

The last reservation is the one with reference to equality of voting, whereby the United States declines to assume any obligation to be bound by any action of the council or assembly where any member having self-governing dominions or colonies has in the aggregate cast more than one vote, or, where the United States and that power are parties to the dispute, where they shall have voted at all. Are you willing, sirs, to go to the American people upon the proposition that you want the British Empire to have six votes and the United States one, and permit the British Empire in binding the United States to cast six votes where we can cast only one vote to bind the British Empire?

Mr. President, those are the reservations that the President says nullify this treaty. Those are the reservations because of which, it is announced this afternoon by the Democratic leader, they propose to reject the treaty. What are these reservations, Mr. President? These reservations do nothing more nor less than to Americanize this treaty so far as it affects us. These reservations do nothing more nor less than to preserve the liberty and the independence of the United States of America.

I shall be very sorry, indeed, if this issue must get into a political campaign. It ought not to. There ought not to be any partisan considerations whatever in a matter of this character; but, if need be, Mr. President, that the Republican Party must again assume the obligation to stand for Americanism, and the Democratic Party chooses to stand upon this treaty and defeat it because we have Americanized it, we will welcome the issue.

Mr. President, this treaty has not been read generally by the people of this country; but I say to you that every one of these 14 reservations will be read in every home in this land, and when they are read and when they are understood they will approve of this resolution exactly as it is proposed to-day.

APPENDIX.

Resolution.

Resolved (two-thirds of the Senators present concurring therein), That the Senate advise and consent to the ratification of the treaty of peace with Germany concluded at Versailles on the 28th day of June, 1919, subject to the following reservations and understandings, which are hereby made a part and condition of this resolution of ratification, which ratification is not to take effect or bind the United States until the said reservations and understandings adopted by the Senate have been accepted by an exchange of notes as a part and a condition of this resolution of ratification by at least three of the four principal allied and associated powers, to wit, Great Britain, France, Italy, and Japan:

1. The United States so understands and construes article 1 that in case of notice of withdrawal from the league of nations, as provided in said article, the United States shall be the sole judge as to whether all its international obligations and all its obligations under the said covenant have been fulfilled, and notice of withdrawal by the United States may be given by a concurrent resolution of the Congress of the United States.

2. The United States assumes no obligation to preserve the territorial integrity or political independence of any other country or to interfere in controversies between nations—whether members of the league or not—under the provisions of article 10, or to employ the military or naval forces of the United States under any article of the treaty for any purpose, unless in any particular case the Congress, which, under the Constitution, has the sole power to declare war or authorize the employment of the military or naval forces of the United States, shall by act or joint resolution so provide.

3. No mandate shall be accepted by the United States under article 22, Part I, or any other provision of the treaty of peace with Germany, except by action of the Congress of the United States.

4. The United States reserves to itself exclusively the right to decide what questions are within its domestic jurisdiction and declares that all domestic and political questions relating wholly or in part to its internal affairs, including immigration, labor, coastwise traffic, the tariff, commerce, the suppression of traffic in women and children and in opium and other dangerous drugs, and all other domestic questions, are solely within the jurisdiction of the United States and are not under this treaty to be submitted in any way either to arbitration or to the consideration of the council or of the assembly of the league of nations, or any agency thereof, or to the decision or recommendation of any other power.

5. The United States will not submit to arbitration or to inquiry by the assembly or by the council of the league of nations, provided for in said treaty of peace, any questions which in the judgment of the United States depend upon or relate to its long-established policy, commonly known as the Monroe doctrine; said doctrine is to be interpreted by the United States alone and is hereby declared to be wholly outside the jurisdiction of said league of nations and entirely unaffected by any provision contained in the said treaty of peace with Germany.

6. The United States withholds its assent to articles 156, 157, and 158, and reserves full liberty of action with respect to any controversy which may arise under said articles between the Republic of China and the Empire of Japan.

7. The Congress of the United States will provide by law for the appointment of the representatives of the United States in the assembly and the council of the league of nations, and may in its discretion provide for the participation of the United States in any commission, committee, tribunal, court, council, or conference, or in the selection of any members thereof and for the appointment of members of said commissions, committees, tribunals, courts, councils, or conferences, or any other representatives under the treaty of peace, or in carrying out its provisions, and until such participation and appointment have been so provided for and the powers and duties of such representatives have been defined by law, no person shall represent the United States under either said league of nations or the treaty of peace with Germany or be authorized to perform any act for or on behalf of the United States thereunder, and no citizen of the United States shall be selected or appointed as a member of said commissions, committees, tribunals, courts, councils, or conferences except with the approval of the Senate of the United States.

8. The United States understands that the reparation commission will regulate or interfere with exports from the United States to Germany, or from Germany to the United States, only when the United States by act or joint resolution of Congress approves such regulation or interference.

9. The United States shall not be obligated to contribute to any expenses of the league of nations, or of the secretariat, or of any commission, or committee, or conference, or other agency, organized under the league of nations or under the treaty or for the purpose of carrying out the treaty provisions, unless and until an appropriation of funds available for such expenses shall have been made by the Congress of the United States.

10. If the United States shall at any time adopt any plan for the limitation of armaments proposed by the council of the league of nations under the provisions of article 8, it reserves the right to increase such armaments without the consent of the council whenever the United States is threatened with invasion or engaged in war.

11. The United States reserves the right to permit, in its discretion, the nationals of a covenant-breaking State, as defined in article 16 of the covenant of the league of nations, residing within the United States or in countries other than that violating said article 16, to continue their commercial, financial, and personal relations with the nationals of the United States.

12. Nothing in articles 296, 297, or in any of the annexes thereto or in any other article, section, or annex of the treaty of peace with Germany shall, as against citizens of the United States, be taken to mean any confirmation, ratification, or approval of any act otherwise illegal or in contravention of the rights of citizens of the United States.

13. The United States withholds its assent to Part XIII (articles 387 to 427, inclusive) unless Congress by act or joint resolution shall hereafter make provision for representation in the organization established by said Part XIII, and in such event the participation of the United States will be governed and conditioned by the provisions of such act or joint resolution.

14. The United States assumes no obligation to be bound by any election, decision, report, or finding of the council or assembly in which any member of the league and its self-governing dominions, colonies, or parts of empire, in the aggregate have cast more than one vote, and assumes no obligation to be bound by any decision, report, or finding of the council or assembly arising out of any dispute between the United States and any member of the league if such member, or any self-governing dominion, colony, empire, or part of empire united with it politically has voted.

Mr. BRANDEGEE obtained the floor.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President——

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Does the Senator desire me to yield to him?

Mr. McNARY. For just a moment.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I yield.

Mr. McNARY. Following the very forceful and able remarks of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT], I think it is appropriate that a statement issued by the Washington Bureau of the League to Enforce Peace be read at this time, and for that purpose I submit it.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Does the Senator want the paper read?

Mr. McNARY. If you please; yes.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I yield for that purpose. I shall want only 5 or 10 minutes, and I have an hour, so I yield gracefully.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the absence of objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary proceeded to read the paper.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, in whose time is the paper being read?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mine.

Mr. REED. Very well.

Mr. McNARY. I do not ask that it be read in the time of the Senator. I should like to have it read in my time.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The Senator can arrange it to suit himself.

The Secretary resumed and concluded the reading of the paper, as follows:

[From Washington Bureau, League to Enforce Peace.]

WASHINGTON, November 18.

The Washington Bureau of the League to Enforce Peace issued the following statement to-day:

The League to Enforce Peace, through the action of its executive committee, urged that the reservation to the treaty introduced by Senator REED, known as reservation 15, be defeated as nullifying the treaty. This reservation has been defeated. The Senate voted it down 56 to 36. Those remaining have their objections, and some are harmful; yet they leave a covenant which will create an efficient league equal to the task of preserving the peace of the world. A league of nations which will enforce and make more secure the peace of the world is the object for which "the League to Enforce Peace" was organized, for which it has labored through four and one-half years, and for which alone it exists. The treaty, even with the reservations now adopted, can accomplish this purpose and should be ratified. There is no adequate reason why it should not be. The world waits. Delay is perilous. Any action which casts the covenant for a league of nations for peace into the partisan politics of a presidential election will delay peace and halt political reorganization and economic rehabilitation of nations sorely smitten by war, by winter, and by famine.

The League to Enforce Peace, speaking for the great multitude which has labored for this supreme end, sensible of its responsibility, calls for the immediate ratification of the treaty, even with its reservations, but it is most important that the preamble be changed by removing the necessity for positive action on the reservations by nations definitely named and contenting ourselves by acceptance in the ordinary way by silent acquiescence within a time limited.

Failure to ratify the treaty now would defeat the world's hopes for peace now and always. Such a failure would throw the world back into worse than prewar conditions by reestablishing a balance or hostile grouping of powers with an increasing burden of armaments. If the league be once established and permitted to function with our country as a member the foundations of a new world order would continue to grow in beneficent stability, securing for all nations great and small peace with justice.

A. LAWRENCE LOWELL,
OSCAR S. STRAUS,
THEODORE MARBURG,
WILLIAM H. SHORT,
Committee of League to Enforce Peace.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I should like to inquire of the Senator who introduced this paper if this is the same league which, in sending out a circular, boasted that it was financed by the great international bankers and business men who as subsequent testimony showed expected to get a large harvest of gold in Europe?

Mr. MCNARY. Mr. President, this is the Washington bureau of the national organization, which has done tremendous good in an effort to bring about the ratification of the peace treaty, and I do not think it is pertinent to inquire who finances it, so long as they are working along the correct lines. I wish to say that the statement was issued last evening. I think I omitted to state that a moment ago.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, the views of the League to Enforce Peace are of no concern to me, and I do not think they have had any effect on the mind of any Senator in this Chamber, though, of course, I know the gentlemen who put them forth at periodic intervals are of the other opinion. They do no harm; they are perfectly harmless people, who are engaged in a work that they think is right, and I am very glad in my time to have extended to them the courtesy to print what has been said and written a thousand times heretofore, and what now comes with no seriously diminished force from the source from which it originates.

Mr. President, about a year ago the President of the United States issued an appeal to the country, just before the November elections. He urged the country to elect a Democratic Congress in both branches. He stated that while the Republican Party had been perfectly loyal during the war they did not support his policies and were not in favor of his administration; which was quite true. If the people had wanted his policies and administration supported they would not have elected this Congress. They rejected his demands, among which, conspicuously featured, was the following:

> Unity of command in civil action is as necessary as it is on the field of battle.

That to me was a somewhat abhorrent proposition, and evidently the people so considered it. "Unity of command in civil action" in this Republic will come at a somewhat later period than this century, if I see things correctly.

The President's administration having been repudiated, and the armistice having been declared within a few days after the election, the President, who is one branch of the treaty-making power under our Constitution, came before Congress and announced that he was personally going abroad to negotiate the treaty. He stated to Congress that though far removed he should be in close touch, and he promised the joint session of Congress that nothing should be done without our knowledge. He stated that the affairs were so vast and important that he would keep us closely advised of what took place in Europe. He denounced secret diplomacy and pledged himself to covenants openly arrived at.

After a sojourn of several months abroad he reappeared in Washington. The covenant which he brought with him was substantially that which we are about to reject. He gave a dinner at the White House, and had as his guests the members of the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations and of the House Committee on Foreign Affairs. The covenant and its terms were discussed as fully as at that time it was possible to discuss them, because it had only been exhibited to the American people in its perfected form for a very short period.

Immediately the attention of the members of the Senate committee and of the House committee was directed—by themselves, I mean—to what were considered to be vital defects and infringements of our Constitution and form of government. Radical departure from our traditional policies were pointed out and discussed, and the President was informed that changes would be absolutely necessary and that the covenant in the form in which it then stood was absolutely unsatisfactory to the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate.

The President, apparently taking the ground that to reopen the points referred to as defective and dangerous would involve a resubmission of the whole matter back to the committee of the plenary council, paid no further attention to it.

The meeting had been about February 16, as I remember the date. A couple of weeks passed by swiftly, and Congress was about to adjourn. But the members of the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate realized that if Congress adjourned sine die and dispersed over the country without expressing any views to guide the President, without making any attempt, whether he had made any or not, to advise and consult with him, as it was our constitutional duty to do, and he, separating himself again by the breadth of the Atlantic Ocean from his fellow countrymen, would be out of touch with the views of the country unless some method was taken to inform him that if he persisted in his then intention disaster would impend; whereupon, on the 4th of March, 1919, as appears on page 4974 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] introduced the following resolution:

> Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I desire to take only a moment of the time of the Senate. I wish to offer the resoluton which I hold in my hand, a very brief one:
> "Whereas under the Constitution it is a function of the Senate to advise and consent to or dissent from the ratification of any treaty of the United States, and no such treaty can become operative without the consent of the Senate expressed by the affirmative vote of two-thirds of the Senators present; and
> "Whereas, owing to the victory of the arms of the United States and of the nations with whom it is associated, a peace conference was convened and is now in session at Paris for the purpose of settling the terms of peace; and
> "Whereas a committee of the conference has proposed a constitution for a league of nations and the proposal is now before the peace conference for its consideraton: Now, therefore, be it
> "Resolved by the Senate of the United States in the discharge of its constitutional duty of advice in regard to treaties, That it is the sense of the Senate that, while it is their sincere desire that the nations of the world should unite to promote peace and general disarmament, the constitution of the league of nations in the form now proposed to the peace conference should not be accepted by the United States; and be it
> "Resolved further, That it is the sense of the Senate that the negotiations on the part of the United States should immediately be directed to the utmost expedition of the urgent business of negotiating peace terms with Germany satisfactory to the United States and the nations with whom the United States is associated in the war against the German Government, and that the proposal for a league of nations to insure the permanent peace of the world should be then taken up for careful and serious consideration."

Mr. LODGE continued:

> I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of this resolution.
> Mr. SWANSON. I object to the introduction of the resolution.
> Mr. LODGE. Objection being made, of course I recognize the objection. I merely wish to add, by way of explanation, the following:

I ought to say in justice to three or four Senators who are absent at great distances from the city that we were not able to reach them; but we expect to hear from them to-morrow, and if, as we expect, their answers are favorable their names will be added to the list.

My recollection is that four other Senators signified their desire to have their names placed upon that paper, and they were so placed, which would make 41 Senators, or 39, or whatever the number was. At any rate, there being 96 Senators in the Senate, 32 would be one-third, and 37 signed that note, which was 5 more than one-third of the Senate, which number can defeat any treaty under the Constitution.

That was notice to the President and notice to those with whom he was negotiating that more than one-third of the coordinate treaty-making branch of this Government was opposed to the covenant. The notice is here in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, the official publication of Congress. It appeared in all the papers. It no doubt went overseas, if the censorship permitted at that time. Of course, every power which was negotiating with the President knew what the Senate had attempted to do here and how it felt.

Within two or three days after that, if not the very next day, the President of the United States, with that knowledge, departed from Washington for New York, and that night in the city of New York he made an address to his fellow citizens, on the eve of his departure to resume his labors in Paris, and he told them, with this resolution in view, that when he came back he would have the covenant so intertwined with the peace treaty and their relations with each other so interdependent that they could not be separated.

Mr. President, I took occasion publicly to announce at that time that if the President carried out his threat I should unhesitatingly vote against both documents, and I intend to redeem my promise this afternoon.

This country was entitled to peace. The armistice was proclaimed, if my memory serves me, and went into operation over a year ago, on the 11th of November, and for a year the world has been crying for peace. They have been crying peace, peace, where there is no peace, and when crying for peace they have been offered a covenant of force.

Everybody knows that the covenant and the treaty are defective, but there is a certain class of people in this country who, although they know the United States ought not to ratify the terms of the treaty, especially the covenant, have had it held up to them that they can not have peace unless they take along with what they want something they do not want, to wit, the covenant, which is the contrivance of the President. So in every possible way which artifice could suggest and persistent propaganda backed by limitless capital could contrive, every possible imaginable pressure has been started and applied to American Senators, who believe that under their oath of office and their constitutional duty as Senators they ought not to ratify this treaty, to ratify it.

They have been threatened with political extinction; they have been threatened with all sorts of boycotts. Bankers and brokers, exporters and importers, every avenue of high and low finance has been marshaled to apply the strongest kind of pressure at the proper point to secure votes for something that Senators knew it was their duty to reject. The press and the pulpit have been wheeled into line largely in this process, and a persistent propaganda of misrepresentation as to what the document to be approved was has been sedulously and uninterruptedly kept up from the time the President returned to this country.

As stated by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT], who preceded me, very few people in the country have had the opportunity even to see the document. Fewer have had the opportunity to read it. Still fewer have had the information given them as to what it means, and the great number of them of course have not the technical training and education to understand what it means in its implications and far-reaching conclusions if they had read it.

This is no ordinary peace treaty. The President himself calls it not a treaty but a "world constitution," and he describes it as creating, as it does, a new "world order." Here is a document of 536 pages. I wonder how many of the ladies and clergymen and parishioners and people generally who signed petitions and sent them here to us to vote for it without any sort of amendment or reservation which would involve any diplomatic negotiations on the part of other signatories to get their acceptance to them knew what they were asking us to vote for?

The reason this persistent campaign, directed by well-meaning but in my judgment mistaken people, is going to fail is because there are enough Senators who are going to do their duty as they see it under their oath of office, and resist the pressure—that is all—enough Senators who have brains sufficient to make up their own minds how they ought to vote in the greatest crisis that has ever confronted this country and courage enough to vote as they think.

I said before that this country is entitled to peace. This covenant is not necessary to the making of a peace treaty. We would have had peace long ago if the President had not practically told the other powers that he would not participate in the making of a peace treaty unless they let him put his covenant in as a part of it. We have not held up peace. The President has held up peace. It is the insistence upon this covenant, which has nothing to do with peace, the insistence that America shall plunge itself into this world vortex and hereafter live its life in that maelstrom, that has held up peace.

There has not a day gone by since the President sent this covenant to the Senate that a joint resolution declaring peace between the United States and Germany would not have established peace. The fighters were at peace. What is the use of denying that? Hostilities ceased over a year ago. The trenches are being filled up and crops planted. The German Army has demobilized and Germany's fleet is sunk or surrendered. Our own Army is demobilized and gone home.

While, to judge from public prints, Col. House and others abroad have been using their good offices to prevent any setting up of a league of nations which would look as though it could operate without us or any technical condition of peace, delaying it all the time in the hopes of calling us into their artificially contrived scheme, the fact is that we are at peace! Whether or not the attempt will be made to perpetuate the technical condition of war which may exist because we have not ratified this covenant for a league of nations I have no means of knowing. But I do know that this treaty contains a clause which says that whenever the treaty has been ratified by three of the principal allied and associated powers and Germany, all of the powers shall send diplomatic and consular agents to Germany; and I do know that nothing prohibits our trading with all the world, except some war-time statute which can be wiped off the statute books as soon as the President can be induced to proclaim as a fact what everybody knows exists—that is, that we are at peace!

Mr. President, as the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX] this morning so ably stated, I have voted for these reservations because if by any chance the United States should have to join this league, I wanted the United States of America to be protected as well as it could be under the circumstances. But I would not vote for a league of nations based upon the principle that this league is based upon, with all of the reservations that the wit of man could devise, because it would not be safe for my country.

Mr. President, I would cheerfully and happily vote for any association of nations designed to promote the development of international law, to agree upon an international code to govern the relations of nations with each other, and for a great international court composed of men of recognized learning in international law, competent, educated, experienced, the elect of the nations, and for that great international court to promulgate its judgment according to a code agreed upon and acknowledged. I think nations could safely submit their cases to such an elevated tribunal.

But because I would do that, does it follow that, spurred on by the false and misplaced confidence that peace would result from this contraption, I will vote to place the destiny of my country under the control of a politically selected tribunal of nine, a foreign tribunal sitting forever upon foreign soil, without knowledge, or care for the traditions, or the hopes, or the aspirations, or the interests of my country, attended by one delegate appointed by the President of the United States and no doubt satisfactory to him—does it follow that I will agree that this country shall stake everything that it holds dear upon the judgment of a tribunal that is eight to one against us in advance?

Why, Mr. President, I would consider myself a candidate for a madhouse if I were to vote for any such thing. I think that a respectable lawyer who would advise a poor client to do any such thing as that ought to be disbarred. I—but I will not say what I was about to say. I was about to say that I do not believe any Senator here would submit his own affairs to such a tribunal, but I will not say that because it implies that a Senator would imperil his Government when he would not imperil himself or his own affairs. But I can not understand how a reasonable man, especially one who has had experience in the law and with legal tribunals and with juries, and who knows legal propositions, can for a minute propose, for instance, that we assume, as a sacred obligation that we intend to perform, to respect and preserve for all time the territorial integrity and political independence of every member that may join the league for all time.

I can not believe that anybody in this country seriously intends to do any such thing; and if he did, he would know it could not be done without having eternal conscription and an army ready at all times to rush to the aid of whichever boundary might be assailed in Europe, Asia, or Africa. When they get right up to it and confront it, they commence to split hairs about the difference between our legal obligation and our moral obligation. Good God! It is an obligation made in a sacred treaty; it is there. You will be called upon to perform it; you have got to come across or admit that you are a quitter. There is but one way to look the world in the eye, Mr. President, and that is to do what you agree to do, but be careful to what you agree. That of itself, which the President says is the heart of the whole covenant, as it is, is enough to damn the whole thing irretrievably forever.

The President told us at the White House in his interview—and it is all in print, verified by his own stenographer, who was present—that our delegate over there, whoever may be our delegate in the council, will have to vote as he is ordered to vote. If that is true, every other sovereignty's delegate will have to vote as his secretary of state or foreign office orders him to vote. On what sort of a basis are they to vote? Is there any statute or code they are called upon to consult to see what their powers are? There is nothing except what is in the covenant, and they vote as they are ordered.

Mr. President, this document is supposed to usher in the dawn of peace and, as is stated in the preamble, if you will look over its honeyed words, to establish justice and equity. They are to vote as they are ordered. What is the use of anybody appealing to a tribunal to give him justice if the delegate is subject to being pulled by a string by Lloyd-George from behind the screen somewhere or by M. Clemenceau from Paris or by Mr. Wilson from the White House?

But, it is said, no damage can be done, because the decision must be unanimous. Of course, this proposed organization is either impotent or it is a despotism. If the decision has got to be unanimous, the league can not operate in the greatest world crises and emergencies, when there is the most need for it; but every nation estops itself from acting in any other way. And if it is not impotent, then it is a despotism; a despotism to array all the power of the world and turn it loose upon anybody, in its own judgment, controlled by nothing except political expediency, if the delegates are to vote as they are ordered. In the name of heaven, what is the use of going through all this red tape and circumlocution solemnly to summon this tribunal to sit abroad and gather from all corners of the world all the disputes and brief them and file arguments and go through the motions, if they are to vote as they are ordered after it is all done?

There is nothing left but the general secretariat, the chief of which will draw his salary, and then there will be hordes of employees all over the world hunting for trouble and always finding it. If that is all there is to it, Lloyd-George and Clemenceau and Mr. Wilson might just as well exchange wireless messages and stay home where they are and do it themselves instead of having these high-priced gentlemen selected after all this weary work to obey their orders.

It is a perfect chimera, Mr. President. It never could have been let loose on the world at any other time than this. When half of the world is heartbroken, with frazzled nerves and disordered judgment, when they have lost their bearings and are floating around upon an uncharted sea that has only just ceased to be a sea of submarines, and everybody is in a state of nervous exhaustion, somebody appears with this thing, like a young Lochinvar out of the west, and says, "I have got it; here is a miracle; it will cure everything; henceforth God reigns and war is no more!" The people just went wild about it, hypnotized, and praying for anything that would give them peace.

It is nothing but a mind cure, Mr. President. As soon as the people recover from this pipe dream they will see good, old human nature and cause and effect continue to operate and to do business at the same old stand, and that this is nothing more nor less than an ignis fatuus, except as it may be vitally dangerous. It will not accomplish what they say it will accomplish, in my judgment, but it may accomplish a whole lot of things that they will be disavowing and trying to get out from under the responsibility of if it should ever go into operation.

Of course I am glad to know that it is not going into operation, so far as we are concerned, and I think that any time it is attempted to operate it in an emergency, when pressure is applied to it, it will blow up, just like an automobile tire when it is pumped too hard, and those who are riding in the vehicle will have to make other arrangements. [Laughter.] Mr. President, all I want is that we shall not be in that vehicle.

I am absolutely convinced if we can survive the present condition of hysteria for a year and keep out of this thing that nobody will admit that he ever favored it. The people will be so glad that they are out of it when they see the gentlemen who are inside the cage abroad over there that the Senators who vote against the ratification of this treaty, with or without reservations, will have done something for their country that I do not believe they can duplicate in good effect if they live a thousand years.

Let me say to Senators who think that what we write here into these reservations or mild interpretative understandings is going to have any effect on this iron-and-steel juggernaut when it gets moving; that all the reservations that you can write here, after you are received and given the glad hand and escorted to the penitential stool of the league, will melt like the snow before the sun; they will not amount to anything. Our own delegate will arrive amongst his six British associates and call their attention to the little reservation that is written here. They will look at him in a compassionate way, as the gentleman on Broadway views the gentleman just arrived from up State [laughter], and they will say to him, "Why, you are in, are you not? Well, this has all been decided now, and the heart of the world will break if you do not go along. We all made contracts with each other and guaranteed each other's bonds and pooled our financial and other indebtedness, and you call this reservation to our attention. Well, everybody is committed to it in advance." So the machine is moving before our delegate will probably know what has been done. There will be some secret arrangements made—they are made now, no doubt—just as they were made when we tried to concoct this plan. We protested the loftiest fourteen principles that ever were uttered, in the last few thousand years at least, and we have been searching with a microscope to find them here. So it will be when the league begins to operate. They will say, "The understandings that we all arrived at over here have got to go through; that is all there is to it. You can go along with the great powers of the world or you will be isolated, and there are provisions in the covenant for boycotts and similar harsh treatment." If we are quitters now, because we will not come in, what do you think we would be called then if we wanted to get out? And how can we get out after we are hopelessly entangled? Do not worry about their refusal to agree to the reservations; you need not lose a minute's sleep about that. All they want to do is to get us in; they will take care of the reservations after we are in. But you will not get out unless you fight your way out.

But imagine trying to apply this scheme, Mr. President, to this country. We came 3,000 miles to get away from them, to get liberty and justice and an opportunity to govern ourselves and to establish our independence and freedom, to do as we pleased, as we agree with each other here to do. Now we are going to go back and resume our former relations, practically.

As the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX] observed this morning the spirit of this plan to subordinate this great Republic into this international socialistic combine is absolutely in the face and teeth and eyes of our Constitution. Mr. President, I believe our Supreme Court would declare it unconstitutional if we should enter into it, and I have so believed from the beginning. I do not believe the President nor the Congress, until you have amended the Constitution, if you wish to do so, have any authority to meddle in creating a new world order of things. I do not believe we have any constitutional power to tax the American people for money to make the munitions of war, to construct armies and build ships and navies and transport our men to the uttermost ends of the earth for the purpose of preserving peace on the Euphrates River or between Siam and Bengal. In the performance of what constitutional function could this be done?

I have spent 30 years of my life listening to the wail of the Democratic Party that we have no constitutional authority to levy taxes to protect our own American laboring men, our own manufacturers, and our own products, but now they say that forever we have got solemnly to contract in a treaty to use the taxing power of Congress to raise funds to uplift men everywhere. Can that be constitutional, Mr. President? And whether constitutional or not, how long will the voter fall for it? What, in the words of our great Secretary of State, whom I am following now in my course of voting to reject this treaty—in his celebrated words to Mr. Bullitt—"what does it let us in for?" No man can tell; but I know this, that it lets you in for the first step, and the first step on the downward course is the fatal one, Mr. President. The only way to keep out of this vista of calamity that looms like a black thundercloud on the horizon and into which we will be led step after step without our knowledge—because it will all be done in secret—the only way to avoid this endless chain of entanglements, embarrassments, and unconstitutional duties is not to take the first step. We are at the first step to-day.

Now, I know where I stand; I am on American soil, Mr. President; I am looking at the Stars and Stripes back of your chair, sir, with pride, and I am offered a bridge to cross an unknown sea and invited to take my stand under the sickly flag of international socialism; and I decline to do it! I refuse to take the first fatal step, Mr. President.

Talk about its being our duty to stabilize the world! Why, I want to stabilize my own country. Here we have strikes and threats of strikes, riots and race riots, North and South and East and West; and before I go into the stabilizing business abroad I believe in making the foundations of a republican-democratic form of government safe and stable in my own country. I do not believe that the whole world is going to revert to chaos and anarchy because of the lack of this covenant. If they want in Europe to revert to chaos and anarchy, this covenant will not stop their doing it; and although they are in dire distress, and we ought to help them in every way possible, I do not believe it is necessary to merge governments with them to do it.

Mr. President, we ought to have had peace at any time during the last year. We ought to have it now. When this treaty fails to get the constitutional two-thirds we ought to declare that peace exists. If the President wants to veto that, I would let him do it. If he insists on keeping us in a technical condition of war when Congress says we are at peace, I would let him veto it, if it is a joint resolution, and see how the people like to be kept at war, technically or otherwise, unless the President can have the form of treaty that he wants, irrespective of what his equal constitutional partner thinks about the proper kind of a treaty.

What we ought to do, Mr. President, is to pass section 5 of Senate joint resolution 76, introduced by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX], who, away back on the 10th day of June, saw things in their true light. He is a gentleman of experience in these matters, and his vision has not been distorted even by the strenuous times that the world has lately survived. He was trying to get you to declare peace then.

Section 5 reads as follows:

That, finally, it shall be the declared policy of our Government, in order to meet fully and fairly our obligations to ourselves and to the world, that the freedom and peace of Europe being again threatened by any power or combination of powers, the United States will regard such a situation with grave concern as a menace to its own peace and freedom, will consult with other powers affected with a view to devising means for the removal of such menace, and will, the necessity arising in the future, carry out the same complete accord and cooperation with our chief cobelligerents for the defense of civilization.

France will be satisfied with that, Mr. President. All they want to know is that they will be secure. I think we ought to do something for France. We prevented France protecting herself when she was in a position to do it. When they were in the peace conference they and their greatest generals pointed out that with their great inferiority of men, as compared with their German neighbors, the Rhine must be the boundary between France and Germany. Then they would have had the river and the bridgeheads, and no sudden rush could be made against them. They care nothing for this covenant or league.

If you give them their barrier, they will manage to protect themselves; but Mr. Wilson would not agree to that. He made them back down from that position and take this thing as a substitute. Maybe they will not get either now. I do not know. I hope they will.

The President went abroad, however, and he represented to those people, of course—he was his own high commissioner—that he represented the views of America, and that he would get this thing through the Senate, after more than a third of the Senate in writing had said that they would not vote for it. There were a few changes made of very little importance. When he went back, after we had passed this resolution saying that we would not agree to it as the thing stood, and called his attention to the fact that the treaty did not say upon what notice we could get out, he put in a provision that we could get out on notice of two years; but there is no change in article 10. There is that obligation. Of course you know that would not be changed, because, if you will read the President's testimony given to the Foreign Relations Committee at the White House, you will see that that was his own child. He had originated that idea long before the German war broke out. He had originated it before the Niagara Falls conference on the settlement of the Mexican question, and negotiations had been conducted with the diplomatic officials of the various South American Republics, and it was the President's idea that that should be a Pan American doctrine. It fell through. I wish to God it had fallen through when he took it abroad; but he made no change in that, and that has created all the trouble. That it is which, if we should agree to the treaty, would have deprived America of being the judge of its own conduct. That it is which would have transferred the management of our foreign relations from our own country to an international league. That it is which is so abhorrent to the whole American people, and that is the heart of the covenant and the backbone of the league.

As I say, Mr. President, whatever can be done to promote international good will and peace and order in the world, to administer justice and equity according to the methods of civilized tribunals, will have my most hearty support; but I never will vote for this or any other covenant or treaty which is based upon force utterly unrelated to justice or to equity. That is the inherent vice of this alliance, as it was of the ill-fated, historic Holy Alliance.

The Lodge resolution of ratification containing the 14 reservations follows:

Resolved (two-thirds of the Senators present concurring therein), That the Senate advise and consent to the ratification of the treaty of peace with Germany concluded at Versailles on the 28th day of June, 1919, subject to the following reservations and understandings, which are hereby made a part and condition of this resolution of ratification, which ratification is not to take effect or bind the United States until the said reservations and understandings adopted by the Senate have been accepted by an exchange of notes as a part and a condition of this resolution of ratification by at least three of the four principal allied and associated powers, to wit, Great Britain, France, Italy, and Japan:

1. The United States so understands and construes article 1 that in case of notice of withdrawal from the league of nations, as provided in said article, the United States shall be the sole judge as to whether all its international obligations and all its obligations under the said covenant have been fulfilled, and notice of withdrawal by the United States may be given by a concurrent resolution of the Congress of the United States.

2. The United States assumes no obligation to preserve the territorial integrity or political independence of any other country or to interfere in controversies between nations—whether members of the league or not—under the provisions of article 10, or to employ the military or naval forces of the United States under any article of the treaty for any purpose, unless in any particular case the Congress, which, under the Constitution, has the sole power to declare war or authorize the employment of the military or naval forces of the United States, shall by act or joint resolution so provide.

3. No mandate shall be accepted by the United States under article 22, part 1, or any other provision of the treaty of peace with Germany, except by action of the Congress of the United States.

4. The United States reserves to itself exclusively the right to decide what questions are within its domestic jurisdiction and declares that all domestic and political questions relating wholly or in part to its internal affairs, including immigration, labor, coastwise traffic, the tariff, commerce, the suppression of traffic in women and children, and in opium and other dangerous drugs, and all other domestic questions, are solely within the jurisdiction of the United States and are not under this treaty to be submitted in any way either to arbitration or to the consideration of the council or of the assembly of the league of nations, or any agency thereof, or to the decision or recommendation of any other power.

5. The United States will not submit to arbitration or to inquiry by the assembly or by the council of the league of nations, provided for in said treaty of peace, any questions which in the judgment of the United States depend upon or relate to its long-established policy, commonly known as the Monroe doctrine; said doctrine is to be interpreted by the United States alone and is hereby declared to be wholly outside the jurisdiction of said league of nations and entirely unaffected by any provision contained in the said treaty of peace with Germany.

6. The United States withholds its assent to articles 156, 157, and 158, and reserves full liberty of action with respect to any controversy which may arise under said articles between the Republic of China and the Empire of Japan.

7. The Congress of the United States will provide by law for the appointment of the representatives of the United States in the assembly and the council of the league of nations, and may in its discretion provide for the participation of the United States in any commission, committee, tribunal, court, council, or conference, or in the selection of any members thereof and for the appointment of members of said commissions, committees, tribunals, courts, councils, or conferences, or any other representatives under the treaty of peace, or in carrying out its provisions, and until such participation and appointment have been so provided for and the powers and duties of such representatives have been defined by law, no person shall represent the United States under either said league of nations or the treaty of peace with Germany or be authorized to perform any act for or on behalf of the United States thereunder, and no citizen of the United States shall be selected or appointed as a member of said commissions, committees, tribunals, courts, councils, or conferences except with the approval of the Senate of the United States.

8. The United States understands that the reparation commission will regulate or interfere with exports from the United States to Germany, or from Germany to the United States, only when the United States by act or joint resolution of Congress approves such regulation or interference.

9. The United States shall not be obligated to contribute to any expenses of the league of nations, or of the secretariat, or of any commission, or committee, or conference, or other agency, organized under the league of nations or under the treaty or for the purpose of carrying out the treaty provisions, unless and until an appropriation of funds available for such expenses shall have been made by the Congress of the United States.

10. If the United States shall at any time adopt any plan for the limitation of armaments proposed by the council of the league of nations under the provisions of article 8, it reserves the right to increase such armaments without the consent of the council whenever the United States is threatened with invasion or engaged in war.

11. The United States reserves the right to permit, in its discretion, the nationals of a covenant-breaking State, as defined in article 16 of the covenant of the league of nations, residing within the United States or in countries other than that violating said article 16, to continue their commercial, financial, and personal relations with the nationals of the United States.

12. Nothing in articles 296, 297, or in any of the annexes thereto or in any other article, section, or annex of the treaty of peace with Germany shall, as against citizens of the United States, be taken to mean any confirmation, ratification, or approval of any act otherwise illegal or in contravention of the rights of citizens of the United States.

13. The United States withholds its assent to Part XIII (articles 387 to 427, inclusive) unless Congress by act or joint resolution shall hereafter make provision for representation in the organization established by said Part XIII, and in such event the participation of the United States will be governed and conditioned by the provisions of such act or joint resolution.

14. The United States assumes no obligation to be bound by any election, decision, report, or finding of the council or assembly in which any member of the league and its self-governing dominions, colonies, or parts of empire, in the aggregate have cast more than one vote, and assumes no obligation to be bound by any decision, report, or finding of the council or assembly arising out of any dispute between the United States and any member of the league if such member, or any self-governing dominion, colony, empire, or part of empire united with it politically has voted.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. What patriotic American is opposed to these reservations?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE], with a delightful sarcasm and cynicism, has treated us to some rather humorous remarks about this treaty and its supporters. Nothing that he said, however, was more humorous than when he declared that he would not permit his distinguished friend [Mr. LODGE], the leader of his party in the Senate, who stands as the proponent of this resolution of ratification, to lead him into the paths of "international socialism." The spectacle of the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] espousing international socialism, and attempting to lure the Senator from Connecticut in that way, is about as humorous a sight as I can think of.

But, Mr. President, I regret that the shafts of sarcasm and cynicism and the sneers and gibes of a political debate should be the methods used and the weapons adopted in considering the momentous matter that is now before the Senate.

Mr. President, how can Senators view this great attempt to organize the world for peace as a matter of jest and gibe and joke? How can they do so when they know that in the past the world has been organized for war, and that every nation has been organized for war, and that probably the greatest evil that has beset civilization has been war? How can they, when we are only fresh from the terrible experiences of war, look upon a great world-wide attempt to prevent it in the future as a matter for gibe and jest?

Mr. President, the President of the United States has been charged with perverting the desires of this country and misrepresenting them in his work of negotiating this treaty. What are the facts? The facts are that this country long ago was clearly committed to the establishment of a league of nations as a part of this peace settlement and as one of the objects for which we were fighting in this war.

Nearly two years ago, in his speech of January 8, 1918, before the Congress of the United States, the President outlined the purposes for which we fought and the objects we would seek in negotiating peace. One of them read as follows:

A general association of nations must be formed under specific covenants for the purpose of affording mutual guaranties of political independence and territorial integrity to great and small States alike.

More specifically the President mentioned some of the small nations for which we were to guarantee political independence and territorial integrity. He said, for instance:

An independent Polish State should be erected which should include the territories inhabited by indisputably Polish populations, which should be assured a free and secure access to the sea, and whose political and economic independence and territorial integrity should be guaranteed by international covenant.

That was the proclamation of the President of the United States of America before the Congress of the United States January 8, 1918. We all heard it, we all applauded it, and it was eight months after that time before any voice in the United States was raised, in either the House or the Senate, to question that purpose as the policy of the United States and one of the objects in this war. Yet Senators come here now and charge that the President lugged this matter into the peace settlement at Paris without justification.

Mr. President, that is not all. Senators here within the sound of my voice indorsed the proposition; Senators on the other side of the Chamber, before and after the delivery of that address by the President of the United States, supported the plan, and the distinguished leader of the majority in the Senate introduced the following resolution:

That in the opinion of the Senate an independent Polish State should be erected which should include the territories inhabited by indisputably Polish populations, which should be assured a free and secure access to the sea, and whose political and economic independence and territorial integrity should be guaranteed by international covenant.

That was the general position a year ago.

Yet we are now confronted by a declaration adopted by the majority repudiating that moral obligation, and when I speak of the Senator from Massachusetts having made that proposition to guarantee the independence of Poland I could speak of the Senator from Massachusetts having made it with regard to Bohemia, and with regard to the Jugo-Slav State, and I could speak of other Senators on the majority side who here in the Senate during the war made the declaration repeatedly that the United States should unite with our associated nations in this war to guarantee the existence of those little nations that we proposed, as one of the purposes of the war, to bring into existence.

Yet one of the reservations which we are asked to accept in this treaty reads as follows:

The United States assumes no obligation to preserve the territorial integrity or political independence of any other country or to interfere in controversies between nations.

Is that not repudiation? How can the Poles look at it as anything else than repudiation? How can the Bohemians look at it as anything else than repudiation? How can the Jugo-Slavs look at it as anything else than repudiation? How can the Governments associated with us in the war, who have honestly assumed the obligation in ratifying the treaty, look at our action as anything else than repudiation, and an abandonment of them in the enterprise in which we started with them?

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I will yield to the Senator briefly. I have very little time.

Mr. KELLOGG. Will the Senator from Nebraska please explain the difference between the reservation he has read, which was adopted, and the one introduced by the Senator on the 15th of November, 1919?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, that is not a reservation that I proposed, and I did not intend to propose it at the time. I had it printed, but I have not offered it.

Mr. KELLOGG. It was proposed by the Senator and printed.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Yes; I had it printed, but not proposed. I have had a good many things printed that I have not proposed.

Now, Mr. President, we have been charged with an attempt to kill this treaty in voting against unfriendly reservations.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, before the Senator leaves that point with regard to international relations, it is only fair to say that the Democratic platform of 1916 set forth a plan for a league of nations, and President Wilson went before the country on that issue. The plank in the platform embodying it is as follows:

We hold that it is the duty of the United States to use its power, not only to make itself safe at home, but also to make secure its just interests throughout the world, and, both for this end and in the interest of humanity, to assist the world in securing settled peace and justice. We believe that every people has the right to choose the sovereignty under which it shall live; that the small States of the world have a right to enjoy from other nations the same respect for their sovereignty and for their territorial integrity that great and powerful nations expect and insist upon; and that the world has a right to be free from every disturbance of its peace that has its origin in aggression or disregard of the rights of peoples and nations; and we believe that the time has come when it is the duty of the United States to join with the other nations of the world in any feasible association that will effectively serve those principles, to maintain inviolate the complete security of the highway of the seas for the common and unhindered use of all nations.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Yes, Mr. President, that is the plank, and, as I recall it, the Republican platform had a plank to a similar effect, drafted by the distinguished Senator from Ohio [Mr. HARDING].

Now, Mr. President, we are charged with defeating this treaty because we can not accept those reservations, because we claim that they nullify the treaty that they are assumed to clarify. How can we think otherwise? Who made these reservations? Did we have any voice in them, we who were expected to furnish the bulk of the votes for the ratification of the treaty? No. The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE], who has declared that he will never vote for the treaty in any form, was influential in making those reservations. So was the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON], and the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX], and others in and outside of the Foreign Relations Committee who propose never to vote for the treaty. They were the instrumental men, in connection with some 15 others, in making these reservations.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I think the Senator ought to be proud to defeat the treaty. I do not make any charge against him.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. So I say, Mr. President, that we can not view as made in good faith reservations which are dictated by Senators who do not propose to vote for the treaty, who do not believe in the treaty. I do not criticize them. I do not criticize Senators like the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] and the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], who sincerely believe that the league is wrong, but I maintain that they are not the proper ones to draft reservations setting forth the meaning of this treaty. They should not expect us to vote for reservations they prepare.

They have not drafted them for the purpose of helping the treaty. We have had no opportunity, as yet, on this side to get together with the 30 or more Senators on the other side of the aisle who would like to see this treaty ratified in some form. You of the other side have drafted these reservations just as a caucus drafts a platform, and you say to us, as the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE] said, "Take it or leave it; that or nothing." Such a proceeding is not worthy of the Senate of the United States; it is more suited to a political convention. The proper way for the Senate of the United States to act upon the treaty is for those on both sides who want the treaty in some form to get together and see if they can compromise their differences and agree upon reservations that may be properly interpretative of the meaning of the treaty and which protect the interests of the United States.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I ask the Senator to be very brief.

Mr. KNOX. I will be very brief. I only want to know whether that was the spirit which inspired the Senator from Nebraska when he said that this treaty must be ratified without the dotting of an "i" or the crossing of a "t"?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, the Senator misquotes me; but I do not care to discuss that. I have material things that I want to say here.

Mr. President, take these reservations as they are considered. There is the reservation in reference to the right of withdrawal. We admit, we proclaim, that the treaty means that any nation can withdraw at any time on giving two years' notice, and that it, and it only, is the judge of whether or not the prescribed conditions have been met. We offered a fair interpretation. Yet we are charged with opposing this pending reservation. We do so because the draft of it is made by those who are against the treaty. It is offensive and unfair. A properly drawn reservation to that effect would receive the support of this side of the Chamber.

There is in this resolution a reservation in reference to domestic questions. We have never claimed that domestic questions should be the subject of consideration by the league of nations. We believe that the covenant of the league of nations proclaims that they are not. But we are perfectly willing to have a proper reservation incorporated in the resolution of ratification making that clear. But we do not want it put in such offensive language as to make it difficult and objectionable to the nations associated with us.

Mr. President, these reservations are not aimed at our enemy in the war. I do not know whether to say the present war or the late war. They are not aimed at our enemy. They are, however, reservations directed in a spirit of suspicion and animosity against the very nations that fought and sacrificed with us. One of these reservations gives direct and distinct offense to one of the nations, and several of them would be considered highly obnoxious by the various nations that fought with us in the war.

Take the Monroe doctrine, Mr. President. We believe that the Monroe doctrine is distinctly protected in this covenant of the league of nations, but we are willing to have the reservation making that protection more clear to those who doubt. We can not accept the phraseology of the reservation that is put up to us with "take it or leave it." We ought to have some voice if we furnish the votes for the ratification.

Take article 10, relating to the use of the Army and the Navy. When the treaty first came to the Senate it was proclaimed by opponents of the league that the league of nations could control the use of our Army and Navy. Gradually, as objectors were driven from that position, they set up another bogy, namely, that article 10 bound the United States to guarantee all the national boundaries of the world and to participate in all its wars, and so they insert the reservation of repudiation relating to article 10 that "we assume no obligation," although we have committed ourselves during this war to a moral obligation to do certain things. We are perfectly willing to have such a reservation with relation to article 10 as will make it impossible for the league of nations to have anything to do with ordering out our Army and our Navy. We know that this can only be done by an act of Congress. We know that it ought not to be done except by the votes of the representatives of the people of the United States.

So with regard to mandates. We believe, and the President has repeatedly stated, that a mandate can not be forced upon us. We can not be compelled to take Turkey or Armenia. We can not be compelled to take any mandatory. Any mandate offered to any country is a matter for its acceptance or its rejection, and undoubtedly in our country it can only be accepted by an act of Congress approved by the President of the United States. It is a solemn matter.

Another reservation relates to the selection of the American representatives in the league or on commissions. Everybody supposes, and I think the President has assumed, that any American representative would have to be appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate, and there is no need for proclaiming to the world in this treaty that the Senate has an antagonistic attitude toward the President of the United States. It can be stated, of course, if necessary, that the representatives of the United States shall be appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate, and that their duties shall be as provided in an act of Congress. There is no difficulty about that. There is no need to affront the President as is proposed.

So in the matter of the six votes of the British Empire. Mr. President, every possible prejudice in this country has been appealed to by the enemies of this treaty. They have appealed to religious prejudice, they have twisted the British lion's tail, they have appealed to race prejudices by saying that the colored nations of the world were going to dominate this league; they have appealed first to one prejudice and then to another to belittle a great issue.

It is a fact that the British Empire, with its self-governing dominions and colonies, will have 6 votes in the assembly of the league of nations. But nobody supposes, who is a friend of the treaty, that those 6 votes are to be cast when the British Empire or any of its dominions is a party in interest. The President has repeatedly said that they would be disqualified to vote in such cases. We are perfectly willing to have it specifically stated that that is the meaning of the league. I have not any idea that Great Britain would object to that. But the idea of attempting to give 6 votes to the United States, or the idea of trying to disqualify a great nation like Canada, just to the north of us, which suffered and sacrificed in the war more than we did, from casting a vote in the assembly is, to my mind, an absolute outrage. These self-governing, independent colonies of the British Empire ought to vote in the assembly, and it is they who insist on voting. The request did not come from London; it was Canada that insisted, and Australia that insisted, and they did it because they wanted to be independent of the British Empire, because they have interests of their own that they wanted to assert, and they are not willing to trust the British Empire.

Mr. OWEN. And interests against each other, too.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Yes; and interests against each other. So I say, Mr. President, a great bugaboo has been made because of the fact that these self-governing colonies had 6 votes altogether. Is not Canada entitled to a vote? Is not Canada practically a republic like our own? Are not her objects and her civilization similar to ours, and her interests similar to our own? Why should we, an Anglo-Saxon race, object to Canada voting in the assembly?

Yet we are perfectly willing, and I believe it would be entirely justified, to specify in a reservation that when one of the self-governing colonies of or the Empire itself is interested in a dispute with us, the disqualification should apply to them all.

If any nation wanted to complain against another for having a great influence in the assembly it is the United States that might be complained against. The United States is going to be a great and potent power not only in the council but in the assembly of the league of nations.

Look at what happened when we went into this war. Do Senators forget that there is now and has been in existence for a number of years a great Pan American Union, twenty-odd Republics united under the leadership of the United States? Do Senators forget that the influence of the United States with those Republics in the Western Hemisphere is great? I will not say it is commanding, but it is great. Do Senators remember that when the United States declared war that South and Central American Republics, which had remained neutral and refused to declare war against Germany practically at our request, then declared war against Germany, following our example and following our lead? Do Senators remember that besides seven or eight American Republics which declared war in response to our request there were seven or eight others that dissolved diplomatic relations with Germany and that five others of those countries of South America in their congresses, in one house or the other, or by the executive officer himself, approved and commended the action of the United States and assumed toward the United States an attitude of benevolent neutrality?

Do Senators look upon those things and doubt that the United States has a greater influence in the assembly than any other nation in the world? I can not see how they can view the situation without saying that the most potent force in the assembly of the league of nations will be the United States, in association with the Republics of Central and South America, which have always looked to the United States as a friend and a protector.

Mr. President, I have not much more to say. I have said what I have, because I feel deeply that the time has come when in the Senate political convention methods should cease, caucus methods should be abandoned, and the men in the Senate who want a league of nations in some form, who want to ratify the peace treaty in some form, should get together and do it. They should give and take. They should compromise their views, and if possible bring about this great achievement which the world must meet. Is the world to be organized for peace or war?

Suppose we do not make the effort to organize it for peace. Suppose the league of nations fails, what will happen to the world? Inevitably the world will go back to its old state, and war will be on the program again because none of these critics of the league of nations have proposed anything. They have not had a kind word to say for the league of nations. They have not had a kind word to say for the great world effort that has been made to organize for peace and to save the lives of men in the future. They have not proposed anything else. They can not propose anything else. They know the inevitable result will be that every nation will proceed to prepare for war again unless the league of nations is adopted.

Mr. President, I believe that the new hour has come. I believe the time is past when it is impossible for the world to organize for peace. In the fall of the Russian Empire and the German Empire and the Austro-Hungarian Empire and in the development of democracies everywhere modeled somewhat after the United States the whole world has become democratic, and it will remain democratic and government will be stabilized if a method can be found by which they can get together, as they can in the league of nations, by agreement and the promise to abstain from the wars of conquest and not even to have wars to settle disputes, but to have those disputes settled by arbitration.

Yes; I believe the new hour has come, and I urge Senators upon the other side of the aisle who believe in the league of nations, as I know many of them do, to do something to make it possible for the two sides of the Senate to get together in a final settlement of ratification of the treaty by some feasible means. [Manifestations of applause in the galleries.]

The VICE PRESIDENT. Are the doorkeepers going to obey the orders of the Senate or are they not? It does not make any difference whether the disturbance was in the Senators' gallery or any other gallery. The occupants of the Senators' gallery have no higher right than the occupants of the other galleries. The rules of the Senate must be obeyed.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, the passionate appeal of the Senator from Nebraska, asking Senators on this side of the Chamber to compromise and agree on reservations comes a little late and with bad grace. I want to ask him if that has been his attitude for three months when he stood here and announced time after time that the treaty would be ratified without any reservations whatever; if that has been his attitude when, in the public press and in his speeches, he has stated that the treaty must be accepted as it is and the Senate abdicate its right to make reservations or pass upon this great document?

These reservations have not been sprung upon the Senate, as he intimates. Senators have not been notified on the other side of the Chamber that they must take these reservations as they are or not at all. These reservations have not been drawn by the enemies of the treaty. They have been drawn by its friends, who want to save it and who want to preserve a real effective league of nations and a treaty of peace with Germany.

The Senator from Nebraska has stood there like a wall to prevent any compromise, to prevent any agreement upon reasonable reservations which would accomplish what he admits now should be accomplished.

I am tired of this sort of talk. He knows as well as I do that the Senators on this side of the Chamber who desire an effective treaty have tried to obtain a compromise and have endeavored to produce reservations that would leave the treaty an effective document and yet protect the honor and the rights of this country.

I do not propose to vote for a treaty that does not protect our honor, that does not protect our rights, and does not protect our form of government and our institutions from foreign intermeddling. I am otherwise willing to go as far as anyone in establishing an effective league of nations and a treaty of peace.

I wish to refer to some of these reservations. They have been printed from time to time. They have been upon the desks of Senators. They have been discussed in the Senate for weeks and weeks. Only on the 15th day of November the Senator himself proposed a reservation, and if he can point out any difference between the reservation adopted by the Senate and the one which he proposed I should like to have him do it. When asked if he would not propose a different reservation he admitted that he proposed a good many things and has them printed, but does the Senator mean that as the leader of his party he introduces and proposes in the Senate a reservation to article 10 of the treaty as a joke, or did he mean it when he proposed it?

Now, let us see what it is. Its first words are—

The United States does not assume any obligation.

The reservation adopted by the Senate provides that—

The United States assumes no obligation.

Will the Senator point out the difference? There is not another word in the whole reservation changed, except that the word "unless" is changed to "until." Let me read the whole reservation proposed by the Senator from Nebraska:

The United States does not assume an obligation to preserve the territorial integrity or political independence of any other country or to interfere in controversies between nations—whether members of the league or not—under the provisions of article 10, or to employ the military or naval forces of the United States under any article of the treaty for any purpose, until in any particular case the Congress, which, under the Constitution, has the sole power to declare war or authorize the employment of the military or naval forces of the United States, shall by act or joint resolution so provide.

The following is the reservation adopted by the Senate:

2. The United States assumes no obligation to preserve the territorial integrity or political independence of any other country or to interfere in controversies between nations—whether members of the league or not—under the provisions of article 10, or to employ the military or naval forces of the United States under any article of the treaty for any purpose, unless in any particular case the Congress, which, under the Constitution, has the sole power to declare war or authorize the employment of the military or naval forces of the United States, shall by act or joint resolution so provide.

If the Senator proposed it he must have been willing to vote for it. For what other purpose could it have been offered? I can not believe that the Senator proposed it in order to change two or three words, to make it different from the reservation which the President, while in Utah, announced that he would not accept. But if that is the reason, I am perfectly willing the Senator should not abandon it.

As a matter of fact, the salient reservations in this resolution do not differ in legal effect from many of those proposed by the Senator from Nebraska, which have been printed and laid on the desks of Senators.

Mr. President, this reservation was not drawn by the enemies of the treaty. It was drawn by the friends of the treaty who did not wish, in the face of our Constitution, to agree to make war in defense of the territorial integrity of every country on the face of the earth without a vote of the Congress. Would the Senator have this country go to the support of Japan to hold Shantung or Korea? Does the Senator think that we should enter into such a treaty in the face of our Constitution? I say no.

The people of the United States are generous, as was shown in this war when they sent their sons by the millions to foreign soil, sanctifying it with the sacrificial blood of their precious boys, and when they poured out their millions that German oppression and crime might be stopped. But the people of this country desire to protect their constitutional rights, and they say to the world, "Rely upon the good faith and the honor of the American people. We are willing to join a league of nations to insure world peace, but we are not willing to give up the control of our domestic questions, we are not willing to pledge this Nation to go to war and to send its sons abroad without the judgment of the American people which must be expressed through their Congress."

With reference to the reservations as to mandates, the Senator says that no one but Congress can accept a mandate, and that is what we say in the reservation. What objection can there be to that?

The Senator says that he wishes to except from the league of nations all domestic questions; and yet the league of nations submits what is a domestic question to the council, and if the council decides it is not a domestic question, they take jurisdiction of it.

Reservation No. 4, which has been adopted by the Senate, provides that:

4. The United States reserves to itself exclusively the right to decide what questions are within its domestic jurisdiction and declares that all domestic and political questions relating wholly or in part to its internal affairs, including immigration, labor, coastwise traffic, the tariff, commerce, the suppression of traffic in women and children and in opium and other dangerous drugs, and all other domestic questions, are solely within the jurisdiction of the United States and are not under this treaty to be submitted in any way either to arbitration or to the consideration of the council or of the assembly of the league of nations, or any agency thereof, or to the decision or recommendation of any other power.

Situated as we are in the Western Hemisphere, with different questions involved, with different commercial conditions, is this country prepared to say that it will submit any of its domestic or political questions to the arbitration of European nations, with different aspirations, different peoples, different languages, and different governments and traditions? No self-respecting nation could possibly submit to any league of nations or to the council of any league of nations or to any arbitration tribunal any such questions as those. All this reservation does is to make it clear that the American people propose to settle their own questions, to work out their own destiny in their own way. Is there anything offensive in it?

This Republic is the hope of the world. Shall we surrender our aspirations and our Government to the dictation of foreign nations? Such a surrender is not necessary in order to constitute a league of nations to preserve peace. Why does not the Senator accept the reservation? I presume because he did not himself propose it.

The fifth reservation provides:

The United States will not submit to arbitration or to inquiry by the assembly or by the council of the league of nations, provided for in said treaty of peace, any questions which in the judgment of the United States depend upon or relate to its long-established policy, commonly known as the Monroe doctrine.

And so forth.

That is a doctrine which has stood for 100 years as an arm of strength to this Nation against foreign aggression upon the Western Hemisphere. There is not a Senator upon this floor who would surrender it; there is not an intelligent, honest, patriotic American in the United States who would do so. Then, why not say so? Of course, foreign countries are not reconciled to the Monroe doctrine; they have never been friendly toward it, and, of course, if they can get us to do so, they would have us submit that, together with all other questions, to the league of nations. But we do not propose to do so. Why not be honest about it and say so? The feelings of foreign nations are not so easily injured. If there is anything in that reservation which shocks their conscience and feelings, I fail to see it.

Mr. McCORMICK. May I interrupt the Senator from Minnesota a moment, to read a line from Lord Robert Cecil on the Monroe doctrine?

Mr. KELLOGG. Yes; I have no objection.

Mr. McCORMICK. He says:

The amendment—

That is, to the covenant—

may be described as vague in its essence.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, reservation No. 7, which no Senator upon the other side has criticized, was not drawn by the enemies of the treaty, but by its friends. It provides for the appointment of our representatives and for the assignment of their duties. That is clearly the duty of the Congress. Does the Senate of the United States wish the President to appoint these important officers as mere executive agents without confirmation by the Senate or without legal authority invested in them? I repeat, I have heard no objection to this reservation.

Again, reservation No. 13 was drawn by the friends of the treaty. I do not know of anyone who has fought more persistently than has the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER] for this treaty; but he is not willing, I am not willing, and I do not believe the American people are willing to submit the laboring men of this country to the dictation or the meddlesomeness of any commission sitting in Geneva or elsewhere. American labor is dignified; American labor is well paid; American labor lives well and should live well. Is it the object of this world conference of socialists and near socialists to disturb our labor relations and to reduce our labor to the level of European labor? Should it not rather be our object to keep it where it is? For upon the dignity of labor and upon the intelligence of the citizenship of the great mass of the laboring people of this country depends the hope of the Nation. Labor itself does not want any such articles.

Reservation No. 14 was drawn by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT]. Has any Senator risen upon this floor to justify giving a foreign country, with half our English population, six times the voting strength of the United States? No Senator has done so. The friends of the treaty are willing to provide by reservation a clause which will protect us and yet which shall not amend and destroy the treaty.

Mr. President, I have imperfectly discussed some of the reservations which the Senator indicates were drawn and have been offered with a statement that they must be taken as they are. I say they were drawn by the friends of the treaty, that they have been under discussion for weeks, and that the attitude of the Senator has been, "Take the treaty as it is or not at all."

Mr. President, I am sure there is no one within the sound of my voice more anxious than I that this war should end, that this treaty should be ratified, and that a league of nations should come into operation. That has been my earnest desire, and I have labored in every way possible in my humble way to bring about this consummation; but, Mr. President, I wish to accomplish it with honor to this country, safeguarding its institutions, for my first duty is to the American people, the Constitution, the laws, and the institutions of this land.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I am not misled by the debate across the aisle into the view that this treaty will not be ratified. I entertain little doubt that sooner or later—and entirely too soon—the treaty will be ratified with the league of nations in it, and I am of the opinion with the reservations in it as they are now written. There may possibly be some change in verbiage in order that there may be a common sharing of parentage, but our friends across the aisle will likely accept the league of nations with the reservations in substance as now written. I think, therefore, this moment is just as appropriate as any other for me to express my final views with reference to the treaty and the league of nations. It is perhaps the last opportunity I shall have to state, as briefly as I may, my reasons for opposing the treaty and the league.

Mr. President, after Mr. Lincoln had been elected President before he assumed the duties of the office and at a time when all indications were to the effect that we would soon be in the midst of civil strife, a friend from the city of Washington wrote him for instructions. Mr. Lincoln wrote back in a single line, "Entertain no compromise; have none of it." That states the position I occupy at this time and which I have, in an humble way, occupied from the first contention in regard to this proposal.

My objections to the league have not been met by the reservations. I desire to state wherein my objections have not been met. Let us see what our attitude will be toward Europe and what our position will be with reference to the other nations of the world after we shall have entered the league with the present reservations written therein. With all due respect to those who think that they have accomplished a different thing and challenging no man's intellectual integrity or patriotism, I do not believe the reservations have met the fundamental propositions which are involved in this contest.

When the league shall have been formed, we shall be a member of what is known as the council of the league. Our accredited representative will sit in judgment with the accredited representatives of the other members of the league to pass upon the concerns not only of our country but of all Europe and all Asia and the entire world. Our accredited representatives will be members of the assembly. They will sit there to represent the judgment of these 110,000,000 people—more then—just as we are accredited here to represent our constituencies. We can not send our representatives to sit in council with the representatives of the other great nations of the world with mental reservations as to what we shall do in case their judgment shall not be satisfactory to us. If we go to the council or to the assembly with any other purpose than that of complying in good faith and in absolute integrity with all upon which the council or the assembly may pass, we shall soon return to our country with our self-respect forfeited and the public opinion of the world condemnatory.

Why need you gentlemen across the aisle worry about a reservation here or there when we are sitting in the council and in the assembly and bound by every obligation in morals, which the President said was supreme above that of law, to comply with the judgment which our representative and the other representatives finally form? Shall we go there, Mr. President, to sit in judgment, and in case that judgment works for peace join with our allies, but in case it works for war withdraw our cooperation? How long would we stand as we now stand, a great Republic commanding the respect and holding the leadership of the world, if we should adopt any such course?

So, sir, we not only sit in the council and in the assembly with our accredited representatives, but bear in mind that article 11 is untouched by any reservation which has been offered here; and with article 11 untouched and its integrity complete, article 10 is perfectly superfluous. If any war or threat of war shall be a matter of consideration for the league, and the league shall take such action as it deems wise to deal with it, what is the necessity of article 10? Will not external aggression be regarded as a war or threat of war? If the political independence of some nation in Europe is assailed will it be regarded as a war or threat of war? Is there anything in article 10 that is not completely covered by article 11?

It remains complete, and with our representatives sitting in the council and the assembly, and with article 11 complete, and with the assembly and the council having jurisdiction of all matters touching the peace of the world, what more do you need to bind the United States if you assume that the United States is a Nation of honor?

We have said, Mr. President, that we would not send our troops abroad without the consent of Congress. Pass by now for a moment the legal proposition. If we create executive functions, the Executive will perform those functions without the authority of Congress. Pass that question by and go to the other question. Our members of the council are there. Our members of the assembly are there. Article 11 is complete, and it authorizes the league, a member of which is our representative, to deal with matters of peace and war, and the league through its council and its assembly deals with the matter, and our accredited representative joins with the others in deciding upon a certain course, which involves a question of sending troops. What will the Congress of the United States do? What right will it have left, except the bare technical right to refuse, which as a moral proposition it will not dare to exercise? Have we not been told day by day for the last nine months that the Senate of the United States, a coordinate part of the treaty-making power, should accept this league as it was written because the wise men sitting at Versailles had so written it, and has not every possible influence and every source of power in public opinion been organized and directed against the Senate to compel it to do that thing? How much stronger will be the moral compulsion upon the Congress of the United States when we ourselves have indorsed the proposition of sending our accredited representatives there to vote for us?

Ah, but you say that there must be unanimous consent, and that there is vast protection in unanimous consent.

I do not wish to speak disparagingly; but has not every division and dismemberment of every nation which has suffered dismemberment taken place by unanimous consent for the last 300 years? Did not Prussia and Austria and Russia by unanimous consent divide Poland? Did not the United States and Great Britain and Japan and Italy and France divide China and give Shantung to Japan? Was that not a unanimous decision? Close the doors upon the diplomats of Europe, let them sit in secret, give them the material to trade on, and there always will be unanimous consent.

How did Japan get unanimous consent? I want to say here, in my parting words upon this proposition, that I have no doubt the outrage upon China was quite as distasteful to the President of the United States as it is to me. But Japan said: "I will not sign your treaty unless you turn over to me Shantung, to be turned back at my discretion," and you know now Japan's discretion operates with reference to such things. And so, when we are in the league, and our accredited representatives are sitting at Geneva, and a question of great moment arises, Japan, or Russia, or Germany, or Great Britain will say, "Unless this matter is adjusted in this way I will depart from your league." It is the same thing, operating in the same way, only under a different date and under a little different circumstances.

Mr. President, if you have enough territory, if you have enough material, if you have enough subject peoples to trade upon and divide, there will be no difficulty about unanimous consent.

Do our Democratic friends ever expect any man to sit as a member of the council or as a member of the assembly equal in intellectual power and in standing before the world with that of our representative at Versailles? Do you expect a man to sit in the council who will have made more pledges, and I shall assume made them in sincerity, for self-determination and for the rights of small peoples, than had been made by our accredited representative? And yet, what became of it? The unanimous consent was obtained nevertheless.

But take another view of it. We are sending to the council one man. That one man represents 110,000,000 people.

Here, sitting in the Senate, we have two from every State in the Union, and over in the other House we have Representatives in accordance with population, and the responsibility is spread out in accordance with our obligations to our constituency. But now we are transferring to one man the stupendous power of representing the sentiment and convictions of 110,000,000 people in tremendous questions which may involve the peace or may involve the war of the world.

However you view the question of unanimous consent, it does not protect us.

What is the result of all this? We are in the midst of all of the affairs of Europe. We have entangled ourselves with all European concerns. We have joined in alliance with all the European nations which have thus far joined the league, and all nations which may be admitted to the league. We are sitting there dabbling in their affairs and intermeddling in their concerns. In other words, Mr. President—and this comes to the question which is fundamental with me—we have forfeited and surrendered, once and for all, the great policy of "no entangling alliances" upon which the strength of this Republic has been founded for 150 years.

My friends of reservations, tell me where is the reservation in these articles which protects us against entangling alliances with Europe?

Those who are differing over reservations, tell me what one of them protects the doctrine laid down by the Father of his Country. That fundamental proposition is surrendered, and we are a part of the European turmoils and conflicts from the time we enter this league.

Let us not underestimate that. There has never been an hour since the Venezuelan difficulty that there has not been operating in this country, fed by domestic and foreign sources, a powerful propaganda for the destruction of the doctrine of no entangling alliances.

Lloyd-George is reported to have said just a few days before the conference met at Versailles that Great Britain could give up much, and would be willing to sacrifice much, to have America withdraw from that policy. That was one of the great objects of the entire conference at Versailles, so far as the foreign representatives were concerned. Clemenceau and Lloyd-George and others like them were willing to make any reasonable sacrifice which would draw America away from her isolation and into the internal affairs and concerns of Europe. This league of nations, with or without reservations, whatever else it does or does not do, does surrender and sacrifice that policy; and once having surrendered and become a part of the European concerns, where, my friends, are you going to stop?

You have put in here a reservation upon the Monroe doctrine. I think that, in so far as language could protect the Monroe doctrine, it has been protected. But as a practical proposition, as a working proposition, tell me candidly, as men familiar with the history of your country and of other countries, do you think that you can intermeddle in European in European affairs; and, secondly, never to permit Europe to

When Mr. Monroe wrote to Jefferson, he asked him his view upon the Monroe doctrine, and Mr. Jefferson said, in substance, our first and primary obligation should be never to interfere in European affairs; and, secondly, never to permit Europe to interfere in our affairs.

He understood, as every wise and practical man understands, that if we intermeddle in her affairs, if we help to adjust her conditions, inevitably and remorselessly Europe then will be carried into our affairs, in spite of anything you can write upon paper.

We can not protect the Monroe doctrine unless we protect the basic principle upon which it rests, and that is the Washington policy. I do not care how earnestly you may endeavor to do so, as a practical working proposition your league will come to the United States. Will you permit me to digress long enough to read a paragraph from a great French editor upon this particular phase of the matter, Mr. Stephen Lausanne, editor of Le Matin, of Paris?

> When the executive council of the league of nations fixes "the reasonable limits of the armament of Peru"; when it shall demand information concerning the naval program of Brazil; when it shall tell Argentina what shall be the measure of the "contribution to the armed forces to protect the signatures of the social covenant"; when it shall demand the immediate registration of the treaty between the United States and Canada at the seat of the league, it will control, whether it wills or no, the destines of America. And when the American States shall be obliged to take a hand in every war or menace of war in Europe (art. 11), they will necessarily fall afoul of the fundamental principle laid down by Monroe, which was that Americans should never take part in a European war.
> If the league takes in the world, then Europe must mix in the affairs of America; if only Europe is included, then America will violate of necessity her own doctrine by intermixing in the affairs of Europe.

If the league includes the affairs of the world, does it not include the affairs of all the world? Is there any limitation of the jurisdiction of the council or of the assembly upon the question of peace or war? Does it not have now, under the reservations, the same as it had before, the power to deal with all matters of peace or war throughout the entire world? How shall you keep from meddling in the affairs of Europe or keep Europe from meddling in the affairs of America?

Mr. President, there is another and even a more commanding reason why I shall record my vote against this treaty. It imperils what I conceive to be the underlying, the very first principles of this Republic. It is in conflict with the right of our people to govern themselves free from all restraint, legal or moral, of foreign powers. It challenges every tenet of my political faith. If this faith were one of my own contriving, if I stood here to assert principles of government of my own evolving, I might well be charged with intolerable presumption, for we all recognize the ability of those who urge a different course. But I offer in justification of my course nothing of my own save the deep and abiding reverence I have for those whose policies I humbly but most ardently support. I claim no merit save fidelity to American principles and devotion to American ideals as they were wrought out from time to time by those who built the Republic and as they have been extended and maintained throughout these years. In opposing the treaty I do nothing more than decline to renounce and tear out of my life the sacred traditions which throughout 50 years have been translated into my whole intellectual and moral being. I will not, I can not, give up my belief that America must, not alone for the happiness of her own people, but for the moral guidance and greater contentment of the world, be permitted to live her own life. Next to the tie which binds a man to his God is the tie which binds a man to his country, and all schemes, all plans, however ambitious and fascinating they seem in their proposal, but which would embarrass or entangle and impede or shackle her sovereign will, which would compromise her freedom of action, I unhesitatingly put behind me.

Sir, since the debate opened months ago those of us who have stood against this proposition have been taunted many times with being little Americans. Leave us the word American, keep that in your presumptuous impeachment, and no taunt can disturb us, no gibe discompose our purposes. Call us little Americans if you will, but leave us the consolation and the pride which the term American, however modified, still imparts. Take away that term and though you should coin in telling phrase your highest eulogy we would hurl it back as common slander. We have been ridiculed because, forsooth, of our limited vision. Possibly that charge may be true. Who is there here that can read the future? Time, and time alone, unerring and remorseless, will give us each our proper place in the affections of our countrymen and in the esteem and commendation of those who are to come after us. We neither fear nor court her favor. But if our vision has been circumscribed it has at all times within its compass been clear and steady. We have sought nothing save the tranquillity of our own people and the honor and independence of our own Republic. No foreign flattery, no possible world glory and power have disturbed our poise or come between us and our devotion to the traditions which have made us a people or the policies which have made us a Nation, unselfish and commanding. If we have erred we have erred out of too much love for those things which from childhood you and we together have been taught to revere—yes, to defend even at the cost of limb and life. If we have erred it is because we have placed too high an estimate upon the wisdom of Washington and Jefferson, too exalted an opinion upon the patriotism of the sainted Lincoln. And blame us not therefore if we have, in our limited vision, seemed sometimes bitter and at all times uncompromising, for the things for which we have spoken, feebly spoken, the things which we have endeavored to defend, have been the things for which your fathers and our fathers were willing to die.

Senators, even in an hour so big with expectancy we should not close our eyes to the fact that democracy is something more, vastly more, than a mere form of government by which society is restrained into free and orderly life. It is a moral entity, a spiritual force, as well. And these are things which live only and alone in the atmosphere of liberty. The foundation upon which democracy rests is faith in the moral instincts of the people. Its ballot boxes, the franchise, its laws, and constitutions are but the outward manifestations of the deeper and more essential thing—a continuing trust in the moral purposes of the average man and woman. When this is lost or forfeited your outward forms, however democratic in terms, are a mockery. Force may find expression through institutions democratic in structure equal with the simple and more direct processes of a single supreme ruler. These distinguishing virtues of a real republic you can not commingle with the discordant and destructive forces of the Old World and still preserve them. You can not yoke a government whose fundamental maxim is that of liberty to a government whose first law is that of force and hope to preserve the former. These things are in eternal war, and one must ultimately destroy the other. You may still keep for a time the outward form, you may still delude yourself, as others have done in the past, with appearances and symbols, but when you shall have committed this Republic to a scheme of world control based upon force, upon the combined military force of the four great nations of the world, you will have soon destroyed the atmosphere of freedom, of confidence in the self-governing capacity of the masses, in which alone a democracy may thrive. We may become one of the four dictators of the world, but we shall no longer be master of our own spirit. And what shall it profit us as a Nation if we shall go forth to the dominion of the earth and share with others the glory of world control and lose that fine sense of confidence in the people, the soul of democracy?

Look upon the scene as it is now presented. Behold the task we are to assume, and then contemplate the method by which we are to deal with this task. Is the method such as to address itself to a Government "conceived in liberty and dedicated to the proposition that all men are created equal"? When this league, this combination, is formed four great powers representing the dominant people will rule one-half of the inhabitants of the globe as subject peoples—rule by force, and we shall be a party to the rule of force. There is no other way by which you can keep people in subjection. You must either give them independence, recognize their rights as nations to live their own life and to set up their own form of government, or you must deny them these things by force. That is the scheme, the method proposed by the league. It proposes no other. We will in time become inured to its inhuman precepts and its soulless methods, strange as this doctrine now seems to a free people. If we stay with our contract, we will come in time to declare with our associates that force—force, the creed of the Prussian military oligarchy—is after all the true foundation upon which must rest all stable governments. Korea, despoiled and bleeding at every pore; India, sweltering in ignorance and burdened with inhuman taxes after more than a hundred years of dominant rule; Egypt, trapped and robbed of her birthright; Ireland, with 700 years of sacrifice for independence—this is the task, this is the atmosphere, and this is the creed in and under which we are to keep alive our belief in the moral purposes and self-governing capacity of the people, a belief without which the Republic must disintegrate and die. The maxim of liberty will soon give way to the rule of blood and iron. We have been pleading here for our Constitution. Conform this league, it has been said, to the technical terms of our charter, and all will be well. But I declare to you that we must go further and conform to those sentiments and passions for justice and freedom which are essential to the existence of democracy. You must respect not territorial boundaries, not territorial integrity, but you must respect and preserve the sentiments and passions for justice and for freedom which God in His infinite wisdom has planted so deep in the human heart that no form of tyranny however brutal, no persecution however prolonged, can wholly uproot and kill. Respect nationality, respect justice, respect freedom, and you may have some hope of peace, but not so if you make your standard the standard of tyrants and despots, the protection of real estate regardless of how it is obtained.

Sir, we are told that this treaty means peace. Even so, I would not pay the price. Would you purchase peace at the cost of any part of our independence? We could have had peace in 1776—the price was high, but we could have had it. James Otis, Sam Adams, Hancock, and Warren were surrounded by those who urged peace and British rule. All through that long and trying struggle, particularly when the clouds of adversity lowered upon the cause, there was a cry of peace—let us have peace. We could have had peace in 1860; Lincoln was counseled by men of great influence and accredited wisdom to let our brothers—and, thank Heaven, they are brothers—depart in peace. But the tender, loving Lincoln, bending under the fearful weight of impending civil war, an apostle of peace, refused to pay the price, and a reunited country will praise his name forevermore—bless it because he refused peace at the price of national honor and national integrity. Peace upon any other basis than national independence, peace purchased at the cost of any part of our national integrity, is fit only for slaves, and even when purchased at such a price it is a delusion, for it can not last.

But your treaty does not mean peace—far, very far, from it. If we are to judge the future by the past it means war. Is there any guaranty of peace other than the guaranty which comes of the control of the war-making power by the people? Yet what great rule of democracy does the treaty leave unassailed? The people in whose keeping alone you can safely lodge the power of peace or war nowhere, at no time and in no place, have any voice in this scheme for world peace. Autocracy which has bathed the world in blood for centuries reigns supreme. Democracy is everywhere excluded. This, you say, means peace.

Can you hope for peace when love of country is disregarded in your scheme, when the spirit of nationality is rejected, even scoffed at? Yet what law of that moving and mysterious force does your treaty not deny? With a ruthlessness unparalleled your treaty in a dozen instances runs counter to the divine law of nationality. Peoples who speak the same language, kneel at the same ancestral tombs, moved by the same traditions, animated by a common hope, are torn asunder, broken in pieces, divided, and parceled out to antagonistic nations. And this you call justice. This, you cry, means peace. Peoples who have dreamed of independence, struggled and been patient, sacrificed and been hopeful, peoples who were told that through this peace conference they should realize the aspirations of centuries, have again had their hopes dashed to earth. One of the most striking and commanding figures in this war, soldier and statesman, turned away from the peace table at Versailles declaring to the world, "The promise of the new life, the victory of the great humane ideals for which the peoples have shed their blood and their treasure without stint, the fulfillment of their aspirations toward a new international order and a fairer and better world, are not written into the treaty." No; your treaty means injustice. It means slavery. It means war. And to all this you ask this Republic to become a party. You ask it to abandon the creed under which it has grown to power and accept the creed of autocracy, the creed of repression and force.

Mr. President, I turn from this scheme based upon force to another scheme, planned 143 years ago in old Independence Hall, in the city of Philadelphia, based upon liberty. I like it better. I have become so accustomed to believe in it that it is difficult for me to reject it out of hand. I have difficulty in subscribing to the new creed of oppression, the creed of dominant and subject peoples. I feel a reluctance to give up the belief that all men are created equal—the enternal principle in government that all governments derive their just powers from the consent of the governed. I can not get my consent to exchange the doctrine of George Washington for the doctrine of Frederick the Great translated into mendacious phrases of peace. I go back to that serene and masterful soul who pointed the way to power and glory for the new and then weak Republic, and whose teachings and admonitions even in our majesty and dominance we dare not disregard.

I know well the answer to my contention. It has been piped about of late from a thousand sources—venal sources, disloyal sources, sinister sources—that Washington's wisdom was of his day only and that his teachings are out of fashion—things long since sent to the scrap heap of history—that while he was great in character and noble in soul he was untrained in the arts of statecraft and unlearned in the science of government. The puny demagogue, the barren editor, the sterile professor now vie with each other in apologizing for the temporary and commonplace expedients which the Father of his Country felt constrained to adopt in building a republic!

What is the test of statesmanship? Is it the formation of theories, the utterance of abstract and incontrovertible truths, or is it the capacity and the power to give to a people that concrete thing called liberty, that vital and indispensable thing in human happiness called free institutions, and to establish over all and above all the blessed and eternal reign of order and law? If this be the test, where shall we find another whose name is entitled to be written beside the name of Washington? His judgment and poise in the hour of turmoil and peril, his courage and vision in times of adversity, his firm grasp of fundamental principles, his almost inspired power to penetrate the future and read there the result, the effect of policies, have never been excelled, if equaled, by any of the world's commonwealth builders. Peter the Great, William the Silent, and Cromwell the Protector, these and these alone perhaps are to be associated with his name as the builders of States and the founders of governments. But in exaltation of moral purpose, in the unselfish character of his work, in the durability of his policies, in the permanency of the institutions which he more than anyone else called into effect, his service to mankind stands out separate and apart in a class by itself. The works of these other great builders, where are they now? But the work of Washington is still the most potent influence for the advancement of civilization and the freedom of the race.

Reflect for a moment over his achievements. He led the Revolutionary Army to victory. He was the very first to suggest a union instead of a confederacy. He presided over and counseled with great wisdom the convention which framed the Constitution. He guided the Government through its first perilous years. He gave dignity and stability and honor to that which was looked upon by the world as a passing experiment, and finally, my friends, as his own peculiar and particular contribution to the happiness of his countrymen and to the cause of the Republic, he gave us his great foreign policy under which we have lived and prospered and strengthened for nearly a century and a half. This policy is the most sublime confirmation of his genius as a statesman. It was then, and it now is, an indispensable part of our whole scheme of government. It is to-day a vital, indispensable element in our entire plan, purpose, and mission as a nation. To abandon it is nothing less than a betrayal of the American people. I say betrayal deliberately, in view of the suffering and the sacrifice which will follow in the wake of such a course.

But under the stress and strain of these extraordinary days, when strong men are being swept down by the onrushing forces of disorder and change, when the most sacred things of life, the most cherished hopes of a Christian world seem to yield to the mad forces of discontent—just such days as Washington passed through when the mobs of Paris, wild with new liberty and drunk with power, challenged the established institutions of all the world, but his steadfast soul was unshaken—under these conditions come again we are about to abandon this policy so essential to our happiness and tranquillity as a people and our stability as a Government. No leader with his commanding influence and his unquailing courage stands forth to stem the current. But what no leader can or will do experience, bitter experience, and the people of this country in whose keeping, after all, thank God, is the Republic, will ultimately do. If we abandon his leadership and teachings, we will go back. We will return to this policy. Americanism shall not, can not, die. We may go back in sackcloth and ashes, but we will return to the faith of the fathers. America will live her own life. The independence of this Republic will have its defenders. Thousands have suffered and died for it, and their sons and daughters are not of the breed who will be betrayed into the hands of foreigners. The noble face of the Father of his Country, so familiar to every boy and girl, looking out from the walls of the Capitol in stern reproach, will call those who come here for public service to a reckoning. The people of our beloved country will finally speak, and we will return to the policy which we now abandon. America disenthralled and free in spite of all these things will continue her mission in the cause of peace, of freedom, and of civilization.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I have listened with great respect, with great interest, with great pleasure to the beautiful oratory of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH]. I shall not take the time to point out what I regard as the several fundamental fallacies in the various points which he has made, but am compelled to say the arguments advanced are superficial and fallacious. I merely want to say that I deeply desire to see the treaty ratified with the covenant. I can not resist the feeling that the difficulty in arriving at an adjustment of this matter is due largely to pride on either side of the Chamber where the opinions of strong and able men are presented with great force, with great persistence, with great resolution. But the time has at last come when those who are truly and sincerely the friends of the treaty must see that it is necessary, if possible, to compromise their differences.

Mr. President, this great covenant of the league presents the hope and the aspiration of good men of all nations in the world, voiced in many conventions, throughout the world press, attempted to be worked out at The Hague in 1899 and 1907, when an effort was made to provide a means by which international differences should be settled, and urged by the great men of all parties and of all nations. In 1910 a wonderful speech was made by Theodore Roosevelt in his Nobel prize oration declaring for the principles which are now found written in this covenant. I have that address before me. It answers much of the argument which has been made against the covenant of the league which provides arbitration and conciliation, urges respect for the territory and the absolute sovereignty of nations within their own respective limits; urges the development at The Hague of conferences and international courts for the settlement of international differences; urges a species of world federation for international peace and justice; urges that something should be done to check the growth of armaments by international agreement; that the great powers of the world should find no insurmountable difficulty in reaching an agreement that would put an end to the present costly and growing extravagance and expenditure on naval armaments. Finally he said:

It would be a master stroke if those great powers honestly bent on peace would form a league of peace, not only to keep the peace among themselves but to prevent, by force if necessary, its being broken by others.

That is precisely what this league proposes. Roosevelt concluded his speech with this prophetic remark:

The combination might at first be only to secure peace within certain definite limits and under certain definite conditions, but the ruler or the statesman who should bring about such a combination would earn his place in history for all time and his title to the gratitude of mankind.

I ask, without reading, to put the address into the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The address referred to is as follows:

[From an address on "International Peace" before the Nobel Prize Committee, delivered at Christiania, Norway, May 5, 1910, by Theodore Roosevelt.]

(Italics are inserted to emphasize certain proposals.—R. L. O.)

Now, having freely admitted the limitations to our work and the qualifications to be borne in mind, I feel that I have the right to have my words taken seriously, when I point out where, in my judgment, great advance can be made in the cause of international peace. I speak as a practical man, and whatever I now advocate I actually tried to do when I was for the time being the head of a great Nation, and keenly jealous of its honor and interest. I ask other nations to do only what I should be glad to see my own Nation do.

The advance can be made along several lines. First of all, there can be treaties of arbitration. There are, of course, States so backward that a civilized community ought not to enter into an arbitration treaty with them, at least until we have gone much further than at present in securing some kind of international police action. But all really civilized communities should have effective arbitration treaties among themselves. I believe that these treaties can cover almost all questions liable to arise between such nations, if they are drawn with the explicit agreement that each contracting party will respect the other's territory and its absolute sovereignty within that territory, and the equally explicit agreement that (aside from the very rare cases where the nation's honor is vitally concerned) all other possible subjects of controversy will be submitted to arbitration. Such a treaty would insure peace unless one party deliberately violated it. Of course, as yet there is no adequate safeguard against such deliberate violation, but the establishment of a sufficient number of these treaties would go a long way toward creating a world opinion which would finally find expression in the provision of methods to forbid or punish any such violation.

Secondly, there is the further development of The Hague Tribunal, of the work of the conferences and courts at The Hague. It has been well said that the first Hague conference framed a Magna Charta for the nations; it set before us an ideal which has already to some extent been realized, and toward the full realization of which we can all steadily strive. The second conference made further progress; the third should do yet more. Meanwhile the American Government has more than once tentatively suggested methods for completing the court of arbitral justice, constituted at the second Hague conference, and for rendering it effective. It is earnestly to be hoped that the various Governments of Europe, working with those of America and of Asia, shall set themselves seriously to the task of devising some method which shall accomplish this result. If I may venture the suggestion, it would be well for the statesmen of the world, in planning for the erection of this world court, to study what has been done in the United States by the Supreme Court. I can not help thinking that the Constitution of the United States, notably in the establishment of the Supreme Court and in the methods adopted for securing peace and good relations among and between the different States, offers certain valuable analogies to what should be striven for in order to secure, through The Hague courts and conferences, a species of world federation for international peace and justice. There are, of course, fundamental differences between what the United States Constitution does and what we should even attempt at this time to secure at The Hague, but the methods adopted in the American Constitution to prevent hostilities between the States and to secure the supremacy of the Federal court in certain classes of cases are well worth the study of those who seek at The Hague to obtain the same results on a world scale.

In the third place, something should be done as soon as possible to check the growth of armaments, especially naval armaments, by international agreement. No one power could or should act by itself, for it is eminently undesirable, from the standpoint of the peace of righteousness, that a power which really does believe in peace should place itself at the mercy of some rival which may at bottom have no such belief and no intention of acting on it. But, granted sincerity of purpose, the great powers of the world should find no insurmountable difficulty in reaching an agreement which would put an end to the present costly and growing extravagance of expenditure on naval armaments. An agreement merely to limit the size of ships would have been very useful a few years ago, and would still be of use, but the agreement should go much further.

Finally, it would be a master stroke if those great powers honestly bent on peace would form a league of peace, not only to keep the peace among themselves but to prevent, by force if necessary, its being broken by others. The supreme difficulty in connection with developing the peace work of The Hague arises from the lack of any executive power, of any police power, to enforce the decrees of the court. In any community of any size the authority of the courts rests upon actual or potential force, on the existence of a police, or on the knowledge that the able-bodied men of the country are both ready and willing to see that the decrees of judicial and legislative bodies are put into effect. In new and wild communities where there is violence an honest man must protect himself, and, until other means of securing his safety are devised, it is both foolish and wicked to persuade him to surrender his arms while the men who are dangerous to the community retain theirs. He should not renounce the right to protect himself by his own efforts until the community is so organized that it can effectively relieve the individual of the duty of putting down violence. So it is with nations. Each nation must keep well prepared to defend itself until the establishment of some form of international police power, competent and willing to prevent violence as between nations. As things are now, such power to command peace throughout the world could best be assured by some combination between those great nations which sincerely desire peace and have no thought themselves of committing aggressions. The combination might at first be only to secure peace within certain definite limits and certain definite conditions; but the ruler or statesman who should bring about such a combination would have earned his place in history for all time and his title to the gratitude of all mankind.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, the Democratic platform of 1916 enunciated similar principles. Without reading, I ask to have printed in the RECORD an extract from that platform.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The extract referred to is as follows:

INTERNATIONAL RELATIONS.

The Democratic administration has throughout the present war scrupulously and successfully held to the old paths of neutrality and to the peaceful pursuit of the legitimate objects of our national life which statesmen of all parties and creeds have prescribed for themselves in America since the beginning of our history. But the circumstances of the last two years have revealed necessities of international action which no former generation can have foreseen. We hold that it is the duty of the United States to use its power not only to make itself safe at home but also to make secure its just interests throughout the world, and, both for this end and in the interest of humanity, to assist the world in securing settled peace and justice. We believe that every people has the right to choose the sovereignty under which it shall live; that the small States of the world have a right to enjoy from other nations the same respect for their sovereignty and for their territorial integrity that great and powerful nations expect and insist upon; and that the world has a right to be free from every disturbance of its peace that has its origin in aggression or disregard of the rights of peoples and nations; and we believe that the time has come when it is the duty of the United States to join with the other nations of the world in any feasible association that will effectively serve those principles, to maintain inviolate the complete security of the highway of the seas for the common and unhindered use of all nations.

The present administration has consistently sought to act upon and realize in its conduct of the foreign affairs of the Nation the principle that should be the object of any association of the nations formed to secure the peace of the world and the maintenance of national and individual rights. It has followed the highest American traditions. It has preferred respect for the fundamental rights of smaller States even to property interests, and has secured the friendship of the people of such States for the United States by refusing to make a mere material interest an excuse for the assertion of our superior power against the dignity of their sovereign independence. It has regarded the lives of its citizens and the claims of humanity as of greater moment than material rights, and peace as the best basis for the just settlement of commercial claims. It has made the honor and ideals of the United States its standard alike in negotiation and action.

Mr. OWEN. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] made a famous speech at Union College in which he argued strongly that the nations of the world must get together, as men would get together, for the preservation of peace. Nothing has happened since that time that justifies the change of opinion on the part of the Senator from Massachusetts who stands to-day regarded as opposed to the covenant of the league and determined to kill it by parliamentary maneuver.

Mr. President, many of these reservations I regard as harmless. To a number of them I can cheerfully agree, am willing to agree; but those which are destructive of the meaning of the treaty I should regard as injurious and undoing in part what has been accomplished at Paris and defeating the covenant under color of approving it.

Over in Paris were gathered together the leading men from all the nations of the world. In good faith for weeks and months they worked out this covenant in order to provide means of saving the world against the recurrence of the great World War which killed so many millions of men and maimed so many millions more; which cost unspeakable wealth, running into the hundreds of billions of dollars, raising the cost of living all over the world, causing famine and distress from one end of the earth to the other. Those chosen statesmen of the world did the best they could do to perfect this instrument. They have done well. It is a great instrument; the beginning of a greater instrument. The open door to world-wide democracy, world liberty, and world peace and prosperity.

After all the debate and all the discussion and all the partisan desire to find fault with this treaty of peace, not a single amendment could find the support of a majority in this Chamber. Other nations accepted it apparently without question. They did not raise the fine and technical points of skilled and trained lawyers against this word and that phrase in order to bring about distrust of this instrument.

There is one great difference, I think, between those who favor this league and those who are opposed to it. Those who favor this league believe in the common honesty and common sense of mankind, and they believe that when a question shall come before the council it will meet with the judgment of upright men, of learned men, of patriotic men, of God-fearing men, of men who love their fellow men, and who desire to promote the welfare of the world.

We have reached the point, Mr. President, where we are departing entirely from the ancient rule of autocracy and military dynasties in the world to establish the rule of democracies. The rule of democracies is comparatively recent, as nations go. Democracy has grown up in the last hundred years, due to the printing press, due to freedom of the press, and to freedom of speech. Books by the million going everywhere throughout the world and teaching men the art of self-government; teaching men the art of liberty; teaching to all mankind the doctrines upon which our great Government was established. There is hardly a nation in the world now that has not now constitutional government based upon the conceptions upon which our own Government was founded.

Democracies are growing; autocracies are going. The Hohenzollerns, the Hapsburgs, the Bourbons, and the Romanoffs have been swept off the map by the blazing fires of war and in their place are arising new democracies—Poland, Czechoslovakia, Bohemia, Jugo-Slavia, all of them with their new constitutions, all of them democracies, all of them ready and willing and anxious to pledge their faith to the maintenance of democratic doctrines throughout the world. Even the mandatories which are criticized so severely here are pledged, every one of them, to carry out the principles of liberty and to see to it that the interests and welfare of the backward peoples who are to be governed shall be the first consideration of the mandatory and of the league. We are moving forward along the line of democratic government throughout the world, along the line of liberty, along the line of justice; and on liberty and on justice the peace of the world will be based and world wars be obviated. But the world must also be prepared to use force where it is necessary in order to make effective those principles.

Mr. President, I intend to vote against this present resolution of ratification because it contains in itself that which seriously weakens the covenant and makes the possibility of war more likely and will, moreover, prevent the consummation of the treaty, because it is unfair to the Entente Allies. I do not believe there will be another Great World War with or without the league; but with this league, with 50 nations pledged to each other to preserve the territorial integrity of every member, there can be no serious danger in future of any extended war throughout the world.

Senators say there is war now; but the Great War between the Teutonic allies and the Entente Allies has been brought to a close. The flames are still burning in Europe in a comparatively small way; but, when this covenant of the league is established and the organized power of mankind is able to be exerted through the league, those smaller fires will be extinguished and the world will see a new era, an era of universal peace based upon liberty and justice.

Mr. President, in voting against this resolution of ratification I do so because I believe that the majority of this Chamber desire to have a covenant which will secure the peace and happiness of mankind and the protection of this country. I feel perfectly assured that there will be found in this body two-thirds of its Members who will be able to agree upon the ratification of this covenant and that the reservations can be agreed on that will be satisfactory to them. With that faith and with that hope, I shall vote against the pending resolution.

Mr. ASHURST. I call for the question. I presume it is not necessary to call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I still have four short minutes of time to my credit, and in this treaty crisis—yes, in this world crisis—I feel it my duty to utilize that time to the last second in an earnest plea to the Members of the other side of the Chamber, who wish to ratify a treaty, that they stand by their convictions and refuse to be carried away by an idle spirit of vexation.

Will you have the courage to stand by your guns and fight this battle to an honorable and a successful conclusion, or will you retreat because you have suffered some minor reverses? Will you stand by your own ship and, though battered somewhat in this conflict, bring it into port, or will you scuttle your ship?

Every one of these reservations represents a compromise between conflicting opinions. You have known from the very beginning that reservations were necessary, and, with the possible exception of the preamble, these reservations are just as mild and inoffensive as could possibly be obtained and yet command enough votes on this side of the Chamber as, added to all you could muster on that side, would make the necessary two-thirds vote for ratification.

And, Mr. President, contrary to allegations, the heart has not been taken out of article 10. That article still reads:

> The members of the league undertake to respect the territorial integrity and existing political independence of all members of the league.

That is both the heart and the soul of this article, a hundredfold more effective than all the teeth you could put into it under the second clause relating to the guaranty by military power.

If the nations entering into that compact honorably keep that agreement, then there will never be any occasion for the second clause. If national honor is at such a low ebb as many of the opponents of this league seem to think and nations will not honorably keep their compact, then they will not honorably keep the second provision to furnish armies against a recalcitrant nation.

Again, article 12 remains. That article reads:

> The members of the league agree that if there should arise any dispute likely to lead to a rupture they will submit the matter either to arbitration or to an inquiry by the council. And they agree in no case to resort to war until three months after the award by the arbitrators or the report by the council.

If the signatory nations keep that compact it will end war between them, because they must either submit their differences to an arbitration tribunal outside the league or to an investigation by the council. And this agreement will prevent war.

There is still left every sentence of article 15, which provides, first—

> The council shall endeavor to effect a settlement of any dispute.

Time must be given for this. Second—

> If the dispute is not settled the council * * * shall make and publish a report containing a statement of the facts of the dispute and the recommendations which are deemed just and proper in regard thereto.

The moment that disturbance is brought before the council there is turned upon the quarrel the light of the intelligence and moral sentiment of the whole world, and in that light truth will prevail and war will cease, because the people of no nation, when the truth is brought home to their heart and conscience, they will not allow their country to defy the moral sensibilities of the whole world.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the resolution of ratification. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CURTIS (when Mr. FALL's name was called). I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of the senior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL]. Were he present, he has directed me to state, he would vote "nay."

Mr. KENDRICK (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL], but I am informed that he would vote "nay" on this question, so I am at liberty to vote. I vote "nay."

The roll call resulted—yeas 39, nays 55, as follows:

Fall.

So the resolution of ratification was rejected, two-thirds of the Senators present not having voted in favor thereof.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote just taken.

Mr. LODGE. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. KENDRICK (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as to my pair, I withhold my vote.

The roll call having been concluded, it resulted—yeas 63, nays 30, as follows:

The VICE PRESIDENT. On the motion to reconsider the vote whereby the resolution of ratification of the treaty of peace with Germany, with reservations, was rejected by the Senate, the yeas are 63 and the nays are 30. So the vote is reconsidered, and the treaty of peace with Germany is in the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I move that the Senate adjourn, and on that I ask the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. KENDRICK (when his name was called). I make the same announcement as to my pair, and withhold my vote.

The roll call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 42, nays 51, as follows:

YEAS—42.

NOT VOTING—2.

Fall	Kendrick

So the Senate refused to adjourn.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I offer the following reservations to the proposed resolution of ratification.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I rise to a question of order.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Will the Senator let me offer it?

Mr. LODGE. No; I rise to a question of order and I am entitled to be heard.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, a point of order is not debatable under the last paragraph of Rule XXII.

Mr. LODGE. I am not debating it, but I can state it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state his point of order.

Mr. LODGE. I respectfully make a point of order against the ruling of the Chair that the vote to reconsider takes the question back in Committee of the Whole. The motion to reconsider, unless by unanimous consent, can not possibly take the question beyond the stage of the vote at which it was reconsidered.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I make a point of order——

Mr. LODGE. I respectfully appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I make a point of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair overrules the point of order of the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. LODGE. On that I appeal.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I demand the yeas and nays on the appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Unfortunately, these questions are not debatable. The Chair can not give his reasons and the Senator from Massachusetts can not give his.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. Is the appeal from the decision of the Chair debatable?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Not under the rule.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Not under this rule of cloture. The rule says:

> Points of order, including questions of relevancy, and appeals from the decision of the Presiding Officer, shall be decided without debate.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Will the Chair state what is the question?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It was the decision of the Chair that the vote whereby the rejection of the resolution of ratification was ordered puts the treaty back into the Committee of the Whole. The question is whether that shall be the decision of the Senate.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. Has business intervened since the ruling of the Chair was made?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Not that the Chair would consider it, for this purpose.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I make a parliamentary inquiry. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair be sustained?

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is it. Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate?

Mr. LODGE. Those who support the appeal will vote with me, "nay."

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is correct.

Mr. ROBINSON. I make the point of order that debate is out of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Senators ought to know how to vote without the Senator's advice.

Mr. BRANDEGEE and Mr. HITCHCOCK. Let the roll be called.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. KENDRICK (when his name was called). Making the same announcement of my pair as before, I withhold my vote.

The roll call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 42, nays 51, as follows:

YEAS—42.

Ashurst	Henderson	Phelan	Stanley
Bankhead	Hitchcock	Pittman	Swanson

NOT VOTING—2.

Fall	Kendrick

So the Senate did not sustain the decision of the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It appears that the Chair did not know the law.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. We are now still in the Senate and not in Committee of the Whole.

The VICE PRESIDENT. You are right where you were. You have decided that you are not where I thought you were.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I offer the following resolution of ratification——

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Wisconsin will state it.

Mr. LENROOT. May I ask the Chair whether he has stated the question before the Senate now pending?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair has stated nothing. The Chair was overruled by the Senate.

Mr. LENROOT. Is it not in order to state the question before the Senate?

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is not any question so far as the Chair knows. The Senator from Nebraska is about to present one.

Mr. LODGE. Am I mistaken in supposing that the question before the Senate is exactly what it was before the motion to reconsider was acted upon and that that question is the resolution of ratification?

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, a point of order.

Mr. LODGE. I have a right to make a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. ROBINSON. Certainly.

The VICE PRESIDENT. I suppose the Chair might as well state now as at any time that this parliamentary situation arises from the part of the rule of the Senate touching treaties which suffers and permits all questions, except the final vote, to be decided by a majority vote in derogation if not in violation of the Constitution of the United States. It would not have been here if we had adopted all that was agreed to by a two-thirds vote. Then we would have known where we were. The Chair believes that since the reconsideration of the vote, and so rules, that other amendments may be offered, or rather a resolution of ratification may be offered if the majority of the Senate so wants to proceed.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I should like to have my question stated. There is nothing before the Senate.

Mr. LODGE. I am making the point of order that it is not in order.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The Senator does not know what it is.

Mr. LODGE. No motion is in order now unless you are going to move to reconsider the previous vote.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. That has been carried. Then the motion is on my resolution.

Mr. LODGE. Then the motion is on my resolution.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. What is your resolution?

Mr. LODGE. To ratify the treaty with reservations.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. LENROOT. Can anything be offered unless there is a question before the Senate?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It has to be offered in order to be a question before the Senate.

Mr. LENROOT. Can any amendment be offered to any proposition that is not before the Senate?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair evidently has not been understood by the Senate. This, of course, is a question for the Senate to decide by a majority vote. The Chair has tried to express his opinion that other resolutions of ratification are now in order, or amendments to the present resolution of ratification are in order, or an unqualified resolution of ratification is now in order, or a motion to recommit the treaty to the Committee on Foreign Relations, a motion to table the treaty, or a motion indefinitely to postpone the treaty, or a motion to send it to the President with notice that the Senate will have nothing to do with it. That is what the Chair has been trying to express as the opinion of the Chair.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I desire to make a point of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. What is the point of order?

Mr. POINDEXTER. The point of order is that Rule XXXVII, relating to the ratification of treaties, found in the middle of page 43 of the Senate rules, provides that:

The decisions thus made—

Referring to amendments or reservations—shall be reduced to the form of a resolution of ratification, with or without amendments, as the case may be, which shall be proposed on a subsequent day, unless by unanimous consent, the Senate determine otherwise; at which stage no amendment shall be received, unless by unanimous consent.

The point of order is that under that rule the proceedings referred to having been had and having been reduced to a resolution of ratification, and that now being before the Senate upon the vote of the Senate for reconsideration, no amendments are in order under the express and explicit provisions of the rule.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Unfortunately, under the cloture rule, the Chair can not make an argument and a Senator can not argue the question. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. LODGE. I appeal from the ruling of the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Massachusetts appeals from the ruling of the Chair on the point of order. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate?

Mr. REED and Mr. LA FOLLETTE called for the yeas and nays.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, the resolution of the Senator from Nebraska has not been read.

Mr. LODGE. That does not make any difference.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. It can not be read.

Mr. LODGE. It can not be read.

Mr. ROBINSON. I suggest that the resolution should be read before a point of order can be made to it.

Mr. LODGE. The point of order is not to it.

Mr. ROBINSON. I make the point of order that since the resolution of the Senator from Nebraska has been offered, it is the pending question, and before another point of order can be made that question must be disposed of, either by a point of order or a vote of the Senate. I ask that the resolution be read.

Mr. LODGE. A ruling has been made.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair overrules the point of order, and will try to maintain good humor so that the question may be settled.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, at this time can I make a parliamentary inquiry?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks not. Let us vote on these questions. It is up to the majority of the Senate.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, will the Chair state the proposition?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. An appeal is pending now from the ruling of the Chair.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. On that appeal, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The yeas and nays have been requested. Is there a second?

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. KENDRICK (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as heretofore concerning my pair, I withhold my vote.

The roll call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 43, nays 50, as follows:

YEAS—43.

Ashurst	Henderson	Owen	Smith, S. C.
Bankhead	Hitchcock	Phelan	Stanley

Fall	Kendrick

So the decision of the Chair was not sustained.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I desire to submit a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, before the inquiry is made, may I ask to have stated the question before the Senate?

Mr. ROBINSON. I desire to submit a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. LODGE. Very well.

Mr. ROBINSON. Does the cloture rule of the Senate providing that points of order shall be determined without debate preclude the Presiding Officer of the Senate from stating the reasons for his decision? Does not that rule apply solely to the debates of the Senate? Is it applicable in any sense to the Presiding Officer? Is not the Presiding Officer at liberty in every deliberative assembly of the world and under the cloture rule of the Senate to state the reasons for his decision?

The VICE PRESIDENT. About other bodies the Chair does not know, but here the Chair thinks he has a perfect right to give the reasons for his decision. The Chair now recognizes the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. LODGE. I desire to ask that the Chair have the kindness to state the question now before the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair understands that the Senate has decided that the resolution of ratification is before the Senate.

Mr. POINDEXTER and others called for the yeas and nays.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, the Senators on this side are ready to vote again, and they are ready to vote substantially as they did before——

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Then let us vote.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. And we will vote without very much discussion.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Vote!

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I am ready to vote, but I am going to relieve myself of some sentiments before I vote.

Mr. PENROSE. Regular order!

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. McCUMBER. I was going to move an amendment, but if the Senator has the floor I will withhold it until he concludes.

Mr. PITTMAN. I will yield to the Senator for the purpose of offering an amendment, and will take the floor after that is disposed of.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment to the first reservation.

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I make a point of order against that, that it is out of order.

Mr. McCUMBER. I desire a ruling of the Chair as to whether I can offer the amendment.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The point of order is the same as that which I stated previously and which was ruled upon by the Chair and by the Senate upon an appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from North Dakota can offer it, at least. There is no great hurry now.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, before the vote is taken I offer the following amendment to reservation numbered 1: Strike out all after the word "ratification," on line 3, down to and including the word "Japan," on line 9.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I make the point of order——

Mr. KNOX. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Has the proposed amendment been proposed before and read?

Mr. McCUMBER. Oh, yes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It has been proposed before and read.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I make the point of order that under the decision of the Senate five minutes ago, the question before the Senate being the resolution of ratification, the Senate has just decided that amendments are not in order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It takes three votes to satisfy the Chair. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I appeal from the decision of the Chair, and ask for the yeas and nays on the appeal.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the ruling of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate? On that question the yeas and nays have been called for and ordered. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. KENDRICK (when his name was called). Making the same announcement of my pair as heretofore, I withhold my vote.

The roll call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 43, nays 50, as follows:

YEAS—43.

Ashurst	Henderson	Owen	Smith, S. C.

NOT VOTING—2.

Fall	Kendrick

So the ruling of the Chair was not sustained.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which reservation No. 1 was adopted.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I call for the yeas and nays on that, Mr. President.

Mr. REED. The Senator from North Dakota can not do that.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I inquire when reservation No. 1 was adopted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair does not know.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The motion to reconsider must be made within two days, of course.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I raise the further point of order that the Senator from North Dakota did not vote for reservation No. 1, and therefore is not able to make the motion to reconsider.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair, unfortunately, is not in possession of the record.

Mr. PENROSE. The charge seems to be admitted, so the case will be dropped.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I address myself to the resolution.

The Senate is now proceeding in violation of all the precedents with which I am familiar and to which my attention has been called. After overwhelmingly defeating the resolution of the Senator from Massachusetts with reservations, the vote being 39 in favor of the resolution and 55 against it, the Senate, in disregard of its parliamentary precedents, well established throughout the history of the Senate, is now called upon to vote again upon the identical proposition that it defeated a few moments ago. If the decision upon the point of order be adhered to by the Senate, we may continue indefinitely to vote upon the resolution of the Senator from Massachusetts with the reservations agreed to by the majority.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

Mr. ROBINSON. Indeed, Mr. President, if this situation be not relieved by a reversal of the action of the Senate respecting the point of order, the Senate never can reach an agreement concerning the treaty of peace.

I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator is an excellent parliamentarian. He must know that no other motion to reconsider can be in order. It is set forth in Rule XIII.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I have not yet stated the reasons for my assertion that the Senate is violating its precedents.

Mr. LODGE. I have them all here, if they will be of any service to the Senator.

Mr. ROBINSON. I do not question, no Senator has questioned, the propriety of a motion to reconsider; but I want to point out to the Senator from Massachusetts and to my colleagues that in all of the precedents with which I am familiar, the result of a motion to reconsider a resolution of ratification with amendments, when that motion to reconsider is agreed to by the Senate, is to restore the treaty to the Committee of the Whole and is to make admissible the consideration of other amendments or reservations than those embraced in the original resolution; and it is to that proposition that I desire to address myself.

Let me say that any other rule would be unreasonable. It is the policy of the rules of the Senate that we shall pursue a course which will enable this body to reach a decision. The effect of the erroneous decision imposed upon this body by a majority of the Senate a few moments ago is to deprive the Senate of the power to reach a decision.

Mr. President, I call attention to Crandall on Treaties, Their Making and Enforcement. At page 82, section 43, I find this expression:

> Reconsideration by Senate: All motions in the Senate in the consideration of a treaty, except to postpone indefinitely and to give its final advice and consent to the ratification, both of which require a two-thirds vote, are decided by a majority.
> A resolution advising the ratification of a treaty with amendments may fail to receive the required two-thirds vote, be reconsidered, and, with different amendments, be agreed to.

Mr. President, there are many decisions sustaining that proposition, which is the doctrine applicable to this case, the case being exactly in point.

I call attention first to a case reported in Ninth Executive Journal, at pages 306 and 312. In that case the Senate disagreed to a resolution of ratification embracing amendments. Subsequently that resolution was reconsidered, as the resolution of the Senator from Massachusetts has been reconsidered. In that case the Senate proceeded in the Committee of the Whole, after the reconsideration, to adopt other amendments, and to ratify the treaty.

Another precedent is found to the same effect at pages 139 and 144, Tenth Executive Journal. In that case the vote upon a resolution of ratification with amendments was 20 to 14, so the resolution was not agreed to.

Subsequently a motion to reconsider was made and carried. The treaty was then held to be in the Committee of the Whole and subject to amendment. It was amended, and, as reported, at page 144 of the same book, the treaty was ratified with other amendments than those embraced in the original resolution of ratification.

I find another precedent in the Thirteenth Executive Journal, at pages 416 and 423.

Another in the Twenty-fourth Executive Journal, at pages 141 and 205.

Another in the Twenty-seventh Executive Journal, pages 469 and 470.

The last precedent which I wish to cite is contained in the Thirtieth Executive Journal, at pages 358, 359, 377, and 378. In all these cases, or in nearly all of them, I find language analogous to this:

The Senate proceeded to consider the motion submitted by Mr. Hill on the 13th instant, that the resolution of the Senate advising or consenting to the ratification of the convention concluded at the city of Buenos Aires, September 26, 1896, between the Governments of the United States and the Argentine Republic, providing for the extradition of criminals, with amendments, be reconsidered.

Thereupon the said convention was again considered as in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment.

That language is used practically in all the precedents.

So, Mr. President, whenever a resolution of ratification incorporating amendments or reservations has been defeated for lack of a two-thirds vote, and that vote has been reconsidered, the effect is not to bring before the Senate the resolution of ratification with the identical amendments, but it is to bring back into the Committee of the Whole the treaty open to amendment. The decision of the Chair was right. I ask the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] to cite his precedents in contradiction of the authorities which I have set forth. It is not a question, sir, of the right or propriety of reconsideration. It is a question as to the legal effect or result of carrying a motion to reconsider. Here we have the amazing spectacle of what we sometimes proudly call the greatest deliberative body in the world consuming month after month in the consideration of a treaty. A resolution of ratification incorporating reservations is proposed; it does not even command a majority of the Senate; it is defeated by a vote of 39 in favor of it to a vote of 55 against it; and yet the position of the leader of the majority, and those who support his contention, is to the effect that the Senate is powerless to vote on any question save that same old question, which I maintain has been determined.

The Senate as an institution of this Republic under the Constitution is entitled to an opportunity to ratify this treaty. Can it be maintained that a minority of the Senate can prevent our consideration of reservations when the resolution incorporating the reservations adopted by the majority have failed to receive, not only the necessary two-thirds vote for ratification, but have failed to receive a majority vote of the Senate? The sensible thing to do, Mr. President, is that which the rules and precedents of the Senate contemplate shall be done, the thing that the decision of the Vice President contemplates shall be done. The decision of the Senate, made a few moments ago in haste, has the effect of depriving the Senate of the opportunity of reaching an agreement on this very important subject.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I am familiar with all of the precedents read by the Senator from Arkansas, and I do not think the Senator from Arkansas stated to the Senate the fact that in every case he cited the action was taken by unanimous consent. The Senate, of course, can always do anything that it chooses by unanimous consent.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President——

Mr. LENROOT. I do not yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. Will the Senator not yield?

Mr. LENROOT. I do not yield, because my time is nearly gone.

Mr. ROBINSON. Very well; but the Senator has misquoted me.

Mr. LENROOT. The Senate can do anything it chooses by unanimous consent. Let me cite just one precedent of a reconsideration.

Mr. Hale moved that the resolution be reconsidered February 26, 1864.

On motion of Mr. Sumner, the Senate proceeded to consider the motion submitted by Mr. Hale on the 28th instant, which was agreed to.

The question recurring on the said resolution of ratification, it was determined in the affirmative.

With all due respect to the Chair, I say there is nothing more elementary in parliamentary law than that when a motion to reconsider prevails it brings the question back to exactly the stage in which it was immediately before the vote was taken. The question as put by the Chair was, Shall the resolution of ratification be adopted? The question properly before the Senate was that question, and not others, and the Senate was entirely correct in overruling the Chair as it did.

There is a way by which they can get back to these various reservations, of course, but they can not do it by violating elementary principles of parliamentary law, and nothing is more elementary, as I am sure the Senator from Arkansas must know, because he is a good parliamentarian, than that a vote to reconsider brings the question back to exactly where it was before the vote was taken, and if there is anything prior to that that it is determined to change, a reconsideration must be had of each question by itself.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I did not intend to detain the Senate, but we have reached a point in the most important business that confronts the people of the United States where I believe we might as well have a clear understanding of the position on each side of this Chamber, and I propose to try to interpret what that position is.

More than a year ago the American soldiers won peace on the battle fields of Europe. For more than a year the American people have been demanding that the victories won in Europe should be written on the books of the world, and that the peace of the world should be proclaimed.

The President of the United States has negotiated a treaty of peace. Twenty-six nations sat at the peace table. It is idle for any man to assume that the contract made at that peace table was not a question of compromise and could not in itself reflect the entire sentiment of any nation which signed the contract.

The American people are not deceived in reference to that question. But they do demand peace. They demand peace at the hands of the Senate of the United States, and since the month of May, nearly six months ago, a treaty of peace has been pending before this Chamber.

This side of the Chamber is not responsible to the country for the action that the Senate will take. The majority rests in the hands of the Republican Party. The Republican Party is responsible to the people of the United States for the peace of the Nation, and what a spectacle is presented to the country to-night as to the way the Republican Party is exercising the power intrusted to it by the people of the United States.

After months of debate, months of delay, the majority party has presented to the Senate a resolution of partial ratification of the treaty of peace, a resolution proposing certain reservations that, as the President of the United States himself has said, is a nullification of this treaty and not a ratification. With what result? The resolution comes before the Senate of the United States for final action, and is defeated by a vote of 55 to 39. Although the resolution requires a two-thirds vote, under the Constitution of the United States, for its ratification, it commands but little over a third of the membership of this body in favor of its adoption.

It may be said that some gentlemen in this Chamber have voted against the ratification resolution for one reason and some have voted against it for another, but the makers of the Constitution were so careful that a treaty should reflect the mature sentiment of the people of the United States that they required that its ratification should receive the vote of two-thirds of the membership of this body.

But here, after months and months of struggle, the final resolution comes before us and commands but little over one-third of the membership of this body, a large majority defeating this attempted exercise of power. The vote of the Senate has been a repudiation of the exercise of power by the other side of the Chamber, and with what result? One would think that the gravity of the situation is so great that when the leadership that were entitled to control the situation found that they could not command a majority vote, that they had been discredited in their own house, they would at least have allowed those in opposition who commanded a majority to make a proposal to the country.

That is true in every other legislative body in the world. Is there a legislative body in the world where the leadership finds that it has lost control of the majority that it does not recognize that the new majority has its right to make its proposal and submit its proposal to the electorate of the legislative body?

Mr. McCORMICK. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I yield.

Mr. McCORMICK. Is there any other democracy in the world in which the executive has been repudiated at an election of the people where it does not surrender its power?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. That is just about the class of answer that we have gotten in reference to this treaty all along the line. How far does the question of the Senator from Illinois answer the question that is before the Senate? He knows as well as I do that the President of the United States is elected for four years. He knows as well as I do that the President himself was not an issue, but it was the control of the legislative branches of Congress, and he assumes, because the people elected a Republican majority in the two Houses of Congress, that they have repudiated the President of the United States.

I am not going into that argument. If the Senator from Illinois wishes to theorize on that question, he may do so; but it is just about as clear as any answer that has been made to the propositions which have been pending before the Senate in reference to the ratification of the treaty.

Mr. President, where are we coming to in this matter? As I said a moment ago, it makes no difference what the reason is; it makes no difference why I voted against the Lodge resolution and why the Senator from Illinois voted against the Lodge resolution, as I think he did. The former majority lost control of this Chamber, and yet, after losing control, it being clearly demonstrated that they not only could not command the constitutional majority of two-thirds but that they could not even command a bare majority, and they stood here defeated by 16 majority; and then through parliamentary license they move to reconsider for the purpose of bringing a repudiated and defeated resolution again before the Senate.

For what purpose? For the purpose of idling away the time of the country, for the purpose of playing football with the greatest problem that confronts the American people, or perchance was it for the purpose of trying to drive an unwilling majority to accept the dictates of a small minority? That is the problem. Is that what you are trying to do? Are you trying to coerce the Senators on this side who voted against the Lodge resolution to vote for it? Are you trying to coerce the Senators on this side of the Chamber who voted for the Lodge resolution to ratify under the pretense that if they do not vote for ratification the treaty of peace is repudiated?

Ah, Mr. President, let a great political party—and the Republican Party has been a great party in this country—go before the country with a simulated issue of that kind, and there is no question as to what will be the verdict of the American people on their action. The will of the majority in this Chamber is entitled to honest recognition and is not getting it. It is not given an opportunity to honestly register its verdict, and it is entitled to do so.

Where is the proposal of the leader of the majority carrying us? Repudiated on the floor of the Senate, he by parliamentary tactics is bringing us back again to the same vote on his repudiated resolution. Does he think for one moment that he can drive Senators into accepting a resolution of nullification, a resolution that could not mean anything but delay if adopted, because nobody can know better than the proponent of the resolution that after the reading of the President's letter which the Senator sent to the desk to-day, if his resolution were adopted the President would be compelled to refuse to accept the action of the Senate; and nobody knows better than the proponent of this resolution that if the President of the United States accepted it and sent it back to Paris it would not be recognized or accepted.

We in this resolution repudiate the contract of other nations and then compel them to accept that repudiation in order that we can obtain peace. In other words, the proponents of this resolution propose to force an unwilling majority here to accept their terms of peace, and then, with that supreme ego that is unequaled anywhere that I have ever seen under God's canopy, they propose to force the balance of the world to repudiate its contract in order that the United States of America and its people may have peace. The position is absurd. It is untenable. It could not be maintained before any people on God's footstool.

Mr. President, we might as well recognize this proposition and look it in the face. The men who voted against the resolution of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] on this side of the Chamber, possibly with one or two exceptions, have been from the very beginning in favor of peace, in favor of the ratification of the treaty of peace.

It was not many months ago when most of the men who proposed this legislation from the Committee on Foreign Relations had signed a round robin repudiating the action of the President of the United States and saying that he could not get peace on those terms. They had a perfect right to express their views, and they did so. But they can not conceal that their purpose is to defeat the treaty, and not to ratify it. If they wanted to defeat the treaty, no one criticized them for making the attempt, but where the criticism does lie, and legitimately lies, is when they ignominiously failed in their attempt to pass their resolution that they should now try to shackle the hands of the Senate and prevent action by a real majority of the Senate that would look to the consummation of a real treaty of peace.

There can be no doubt that Senators on this side of the Chamber who repudiated that resolution two hours ago would be unworthy to bear the name of Senators if they do not repudiate it again when it comes before the Senate, and I have no doubt that they will. Their votes alone are enough to defeat it, but I do not doubt either that the men on the other side of the Chamber who voted hold the same convictions now that they did two hours ago and will vote the same way, which means the repudiation again of the resolution. That situation lies ahead of us as soon as this debate is closed.

Then what is the position that confronts us? We shall maintain that we are entitled to offer other resolutions of ratification, other proposals. The Chair has already ruled, and correctly ruled, that we have a right to do so, but a majority have destroyed his ruling. Where we are coming to when this resolution is voted down again is to face the fact as to whether a partisan majority which can be controlled to vote affirmatively on its own measure intends to destroy the treaty of peace by an indirect measure, to say to the Senate, "You shall ratify the treaty of peace as we, the minority, command you, or it shall not be ratified at all; that we will defeat peace."

That is the issue, and so far as I am concerned for one I am perfectly willing to meet it. I am not fearful that it will be misunderstood by the American people.

I am not fearful that it will be misunderstood by the American people. They know who stand for the ratification of this treaty of peace, and they know who wish to destroy it. When the final vote on the resolution of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] comes and is defeated, then we have merely been indulging in child's play and must take up the real resolution that may ultimately result in the ratification of the treaty, or the Senator from Massachusetts must introduce a resolution informing the President that the Senate will take no further action in this matter and send him back the treaty. Do that if you will, but do not think for one moment when you attempt to send this treaty back to the President or adjourn without action on it that the country is going to misunderstand who are in favor of the ratification of the treaty and who are opposed to it. Do not think for one moment that you can fool the great business interests of this country, which are crying and pleading for peace; do not think for one moment that you can fool the toiling masses of America who are crying and pleading for peace. If you want peace, there is but one way to get peace, and that is to keep this treaty before the Senate until we can secure, in one way or another, fairly and justly a vote for its ratification. You can not accomplish that by choking off the consideration of the treaty and continuing to force before this body a resolution that has been repudiated by a majority of 16 within the afternoon.

Mr. HARDING. Mr. President, I have been content to allow the final disposition of the pending measure without any further remarks, but I could not well be content to permit the statement of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] to go unchallenged. I quite agree with him that no one can fool the country; and, in order that we may make the situation clear to the country to-night, when all of the United States is watching the action of this body no less intently than are those who honor us with their presence, and when all the world is watching to see what this great Republic will do, I am in favor of doing what may be expressed in a well-understood sporting term as "laying all the cards on the table, face up."

We have been witnesses, Senators, to many months of discussion and debate and delay in dealing with this treaty; and it ill becomes any Senator of the minority to say that there has been no opportunity for compromise or accommodation or adjustment. I was personally a witness to the long-drawn-out discussion of reservations in the Foreign Relations Committee when we sought in a more intimate study of the treaty to accommodate our differences there, because there was not a Member of the Senate and there was but one man in the United States of America who did not know that this treaty could never be ratified without reservations. With that perfectly plain understanding of the situation, the committee set itself to work out reservations which would safeguard the interests of the United States of America and make ratification possible.

I speak, Mr. President, for one who has maintained that position. I have not liked this treaty; I think, as originally negotiated, it is the colossal blunder of all time; but, recognizing the aspirations of our own people and the people of the world to do something toward international cooperation for the promotion and preservation of peace and a more intimate and better understanding between nations, I have wished to make it possible to accept this covenant. I could, however, no more vote to ratify this treaty without reservations which make sure America's independence of action, which make sure the preservation of American traditions, which make sure and certain our freedom in choosing our course of action, than I could participate in a knowing betrayal of this Republic.

Mr. President, in letting the public understand let us review the situation. In the Senate there are four distinct schools of thought in dealing with this treaty: One is the unconditional-ratification school, those who either through their own conscientious convictions or the lash of the Executive—choose as you will—want this treaty ratified without a single modification or reservation. That is group No. 1. In direct opposition is the so-called irreconcilable group, those who are unalterably opposed to any ratification. That is group 2. The third is the group, to which I choose to belong, if I may, who are agreed to bring about the ratification of this treaty if they are convinced that reservations have been adopted which are sufficient to safeguard the interests of the United States of America. There still remains another group—or, rather, a group within a group—popularly known as the "mild reservationists," those who are anxious to ratify, who are anxious to safeguard the interests of this Republic, but at the same time desire to make the reservations as little offensive as possible to those who assumed to negotiate the treaty in contempt of the Senate.

We have had the four groups to deal with; and in the progress of the debate and after much discussion we have finally come to an understanding on this side alone—because on the other side there were those who took the position that there could be no reservations at all—and have accommodated our differences to the extent that the majority has agreed upon a program of reservations.

The Senator from Alabama, Mr. President, who is himself, if I remember correctly, an advocate of cloture and a strong advocate of the policy of the majority doing business, makes a rather doubtful statement when he challenges the ability of the majority to do business in this Chamber, because again and again the majority has demonstrated its determination to support the reservations reported to this body. That is why they are added to the resolution. If a man is the advocate of the majority in a legislative body performing its functions, he must accept the dictum of the majority of this body.

That leads me, if you please, to indulge in a little reflection. The whole trouble with the treaty, Senators, is that it was negotiated upon a misunderstanding upon the part of the Executive. No one doubts for a moment that the President, in that disregard for the Senate which grew out of war conditions, in that little consideration for this body which followed a state of submergence, undertook to negotiate a treaty, which was his towering ambition, notwithstanding he knew the opposition of a majority and in defiance of the expressed wish or the expressed opinion of a sufficient number to defeat ratification, under the Executive impression that no modification or alteration could be effected except by a two-thirds majority vote of the Senate.

Mr. McCORMICK. And he so stated.

Mr. HARDING. He himself not only so stated, but those who have been students of the whole negotiation and the aftermath have clearly seen that the Executive proceeded on that theory. But it develops, Mr. President, that there is still a United States Senate and a majority, of course, in the Senate which is determined to reassert itself.

It was all right, Senators, to submerge ourselves as members of the Government commissioned by the people, as we did submerge ourselves during the period of the war; I was a participant in the submergence; but when the war ended and the greatest document in importance ever negotiated in the world came to this body for consideration, then it was becoming, indeed, for the United States Senate again to assume its constitutional authority.

It is in that assumption of authority that Senators on this side in the majority—not all in accord, let it be said, but Senators on this side in the majority—determined, with practical unanimity, that there could be no ratification without ample American reservations.

The members of the minority have known of the processes employed in framing the reservations. There have been weeks and months of opportunity to accommodate any differences and to meet us on common ground and negotiate acceptable reservations; but, in spite of that existent opportunity and in spite of the waste of time, when you on the other side have been clamoring about delay, never a single effort has been made until the majority has demonstrated its determination to submit reservations which must be accepted.

Now, you who talk about peace—though our attitude in dealing with the treaty, which dealing has little to do with the peace already established—you who are anxious to get this document out of the way, why not recognize a situation that can not possibly be changed?

We are content to give you your league of nations, doubtful as we are about the wisdom of the great experiment. We recognize that we are not giving it to you in the fullness of the ambitions of the Chief Executive who negotiated it; we realize and regret that it must be reported to the nations of the world with something very much akin to humiliation. That is not the fault of the Senate; that is the fault of him who negotiated it without recognizing that there is a Senate. It is a very great misfortune, and I am sorry about it; but I tell you, Senators, the independence of action and the preserved inheritance of this Republic are infinitely more important than the wounded feelings of him who negotiated it without admitting the existence of the Senate. So we in the majority are agreed to preserve American freedom of action and enter upon a league of nations, a league with such reservations that leave us our choice of action, the exercise of American conscience, the determination to do that which we think is our part in the promotion and preservation of civilization and peace without the surrender of things essentially American.

If this ratification is made with the reservations which have been adopted, there remains the skeleton of a league on which the United States can, if it deems it prudent, proceed in deliberation and calm reflection toward the building of an international relationship which shall be effective in the future.

The trouble with the whole league covenant is that it was hastily negotiated to be made the foundation of a treaty of peace, when there ought to have been a treaty of peace negotiated with a league of nations created in the deliberate aftermath.

Under these circumstances, recognizing conditions, without discussing the partisan phase of it or any political advantage, we have this arrangement, and we must meet it as it exists; and those on the majority side, those against it irreconcilably, and those for the league want these reservations to go to the nations of the Old World to assert and make certain America's freedom of action in the future, and leave a semblance of a league on which to build.

If those on the other side of the Chamber are agreed to accept such a thing as that, well and good. If you are determined that a minority of the Senate shall follow the same blind insistence that characterized the action of the Executive in negotiating, I warn you now, you are certain to go to defeat; and if I can speak for one, in accepting the challenge of the Senator from Alabama, I welcome the moment when we can go to the people of the United States on the issue as to who is responsible therefor.

I know, Mr. President, that in this covenant we have originally bartered American independence in order to create a league. We have traded away America's freedom of action in order to establish a supergovernment of the world, and it was never intended to be any less. I speak for one who is old-fashioned enough to believe that the Government of the United States of America is good enough for me. In speaking my reverence for the Government of the United States of America, Senators, I want the preservation of those coordinate branches of government which were conceived and instituted by the fathers; and if there is nothing else significant in the action of this day, you can tell to the people of the United States of America and to the world that the Senate of the United States has once more reasserted its authority, and representative government abides.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I always enjoy listening to the Senator from Ohio. He is always a delightful speaker, plausible in his arguments, and most plausible to-night; but there are two things that I want the RECORD to show and have emphasized.

The Senator from Ohio insists that he and his side represent a majority of the Senate, because they commanded a majority in favor of certain reservations or amendments to the treaty of peace that he admits, and the RECORD clearly shows, were defeated by a majority of 16 votes when they came to be registered as the action of the Senate. Why, the Senator might as well contend, because he had offered 14 amendments to a pending bill, and his amendments had received a majority vote, although the bill itself as amended had been defeated by the Senate, that his side commanded a majority of the Senate.

On the question as to whether this treaty should be ratified unconditionally or ratified with reservations, some of us in the Senate are in favor of unconditional rejection, some of us are in favor of unconditional ratification, some of us are in favor of ratification with amendments or reservations; but that is not the issue that is presented to the American people. I should have welcomed an opportunity to vote on unconditional ratification; and if I had had the opportunity, and it was defeated, I should have been glad to join with my brother Senators in securing some other way and some other method of writing the peace treaty of the world. But when the proposal of the writers of these reservations is rejected, not by the constitutional majority but by an actual majority of the Senate, it is idle to say that they represent a majority of this body, and that if they can not have their way they are going to destroy the treaty.

Now, that is the issue. That is the issue. If you can not have your way, if you are defeated again——

Mr. HARDING. Mr. President, will the Senator permit an interruption?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Surely.

Mr. HARDING. Take it out of my time if you like. Is not the converse true, that if a minority can not have the reservations that it wants, it is going to defeat the treaty?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. It has not done so yet.

Mr. HARDING. But it voted that way.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Well, it voted its convictions. Suppose it did, that does not mean that the minority is not willing to stay here and do business, and I understand it is announced that the other side of the Chamber will not stay here and do business; that if they can not succeed, they are going to adjourn the Senate to-morrow and tell the country that they can not have a treaty of peace.

I say that if the majority party in this Chamber seeks to adjourn the Senate after it is defeated by a majority of the Senate in its proposal, without staying here and making further attempts to write a treaty of peace, it and it alone is responsible for the condition in which the country finds itself.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to interrupt him for just a moment?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Surely.

Mr. LODGE. I merely want to relieve the Senator's mind from one anxiety. There will be no adjournment sine die, there will not even be an adjournment, if I can help it, until we vote upon the treaty again.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I am delighted to hear that news. It relieves my spirit, because I do think we should write a treaty of peace.

Mr. LODGE. I said until we had voted on it again.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Oh, well——

Mr. LODGE. When we vote on it again—be under no misapprehension—it is final. You can not make another motion to reconsider.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Of course, I know that is the interpretation of the Senator, and that is what I said I understood—that he was going to put the treaty of peace before us. In all human probability it will not command an actual majority, much less a two-thirds majority, and then he is going to insist that the proposal of a minority that can not control a majority of this body shall be accepted as the final defeat of the treaty of peace of the world.

Mr. LODGE. I advise the Senator to read Rule XIII upon reconsideration.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Oh, well, I am not engaged in discussing technical points of parliamentary law. I have no doubt the Vice President was correct in his ruling and that we can proceed, but the Senator knows that if he claims that this treaty is rejected it is his duty to notify the President—send it to the President—and when he does, if he gives the President a chance, it will be sent back here, and the peace of the world will not be stopped. The fact is that there are men in this Chamber who desire, through one method or another, to say that the treaty of Versailles shall never, in any form, become the law of the world.

Now, just one more word.

My good friend from Ohio a while ago described so accurately what has been done with the treaty of peace and the league of nations that I just want to emphasize it to the Senate. He stated that they had adopted a number of reservations, that according to his lights they had improved the treaty, and then he said, "But they left a skeleton of the league of nations for the benefit of the world." A skeleton of the league of nations. A skeleton is a dead man. They left a dead league of nations for the world to function under.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, while I have always believed that the treaty, particularly that part embracing the covenant of the league, carried with it practically all of the interpretations that were offered by the group referred to by the Senator from Ohio as the mild reservationists, I have never brought myself to the point where I would oppose this treaty, if there were reasonable reservations incorporated in the resolution of ratification. The only question that appeals to my mind to-night is this: Are there reservations included in the resolution of ratification that will not be accepted by those Governments that must accept those reservations to make our participation under the treaty legal?

The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER] has stated on the floor that in his opinion Great Britain, France, and Italy can not in honor accept the committee reservation with regard to Shantung. Are there other Senators on that side who agree with the Senator from North Dakota? If so, then those Senators can not sincerely vote for this resolution of ratification, if they are in favor of the ratification of the treaty. Surely they do not desire to consummate an act that, while it will not kill the treaty to-night, will result in the death of the treaty two months or three months hence.

Those are the questions. We on this side who favor this treaty have not asked you to make any violent changes in your reservations, have we? We have asked you to make reasonable reservations, and we ask you now not to make any unnecessary reservations that will threaten the acceptance of this treaty by those Governments whose acceptance is necessary.

The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER], who has just been referred to by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. HARDING] as one of the most sincere advocates of this treaty, the other day begged the Members on his side of the Chamber who favor this treaty not to force this Shantung reservation upon the treaty. He went further than that. He has tried time and time again to persuade the Members on his side not to require the formal acceptance of these reservations by Great Britain, France, England, and Japan. Why? Because he believed that such requirement in the resolution of ratification endangered the acceptance of our reservations.

But it appears that those on the other side who are pretending to be for this treaty are more interested in the political situation than they are in the warnings that have been given to them by the Senator from North Dakota. I want to read what the Senator from North Dakota said about this Shantung amendment. I am reading from the RECORD of November 15. He said this:

> Mr. President, I desire to address my remarks mainly to those Senators who really want a treaty, and a treaty that would be agreed to by the other nations. While I regret that it is just at the lunch hour, and I can not have those Senators present while that feature of the case is being presented, I feel it my duty to present it before this proposed reservation is voted upon.
> We, of course, know that any change in the Shantung provision will eliminate Japan. Knowing that, we voted by a very large majority that we would not make the treaty dependent upon Japan agreeing to any of these reservations; but we did make it incumbent upon Great Britain, France, and Italy, by an exchange of notes, to agree to them. Now, Mr. President, are we sure that we are not by this reservation making it almost impossible, if not absolutely impossible, for Great Britain and France and Italy formally to assent to these reservations without compromising their own national honor and credit?
> I am certain that every Senator must agree with me that if the reservation adopted by the Senate on the Shantung feature is equivalent to a rejection of the Shantung articles, then Great Britain, France, and Italy can not honorably assent to it. They can not break their war treaty with Japan.
> Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President——
> The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Nevada?
> Mr. McCUMBER. I yield for a question.
> Mr. PITTMAN. Does the Senator believe that the language of the Lodge reservation is equivalent to an expression of a rejection by the United States?
> Mr. McCUMBER. I do; and I expect to show it.

Permit me to say that the Senator from North Dakota did show, beyond controversy, that the action of the Senate on the Lodge reservation with regard to Shantung was an absolute denunciation of the Shantung provision.

Has the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER] changed his mind in this matter? Has the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON], who has collaborated in all these treaty matters with the Senator from North Dakota, changed his mind on these matters? Has the mild reservationist from Oregon [Mr. McNARY] changed his mind with regard to these matters? Has the junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG], who presented the McCumber reservations, changed his mind? No; they have not changed their minds with regard to these matters. They were bound by some understanding or some agreement, in their party affiliations. I am not saying this in any way derogatory to them whatever, but nevertheless they are now voting for these things which they formerly opposed upon principle.

But what happened? Why was the Shantung provision put into the resolution? Because a majority of the Republican members of the Foreign Relations Committee, that framed these reservations, were and are now against the treaty. They have always been against the treaty from beginning to end, and they had the power in the committee to frame reservations that in their belief would kill it. They were not able upon the floor of the United States Senate, on a straight vote, to kill the league of nations and the treaty, but they hoped to kill it by subterfuge and they forced these reservations upon the Senate.

On the other side you cast to-night 13 votes against the resolution of ratification. You who on the Republican side favor the treaty have barely more than one-third of the Members of the Senate. You have never had a majority on the other side in favor of this treaty. We have more Members on this side in favor of this treaty; and yet you Republicans on the other side who favor this treaty, who do not constitute as many as we Democrats on this side who favor this treaty, will not stand by us in any amendment or any change that we offer to any one of these abominable reservations that were written by the "treaty killers" on the other side.

The Senator from Ohio [Mr. HARDING] says we have made no offer of a compromise. Take the very first amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE]. The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] offered an amendment. He moved to strike out all that part of reservation No. 1 after the word "ratification" in the third line.

What does that mean? With the amendment adopted as offered by the Senator from North Dakota, it would read this way:

The reservations and understandings adopted by the Senate are to be made a part and a condition of the resolution of ratification.

That is where it would have ended. It would not have been dependent upon a formal acceptance by France, Great Britain, Italy, or Japan, as it now is. Who voted for the amendment offered by the Senator from North Dakota? Every Democrat on this side, except four, voted for it. Who voted for it on the other side of the Chamber? The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] and possibly the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON]. I am not sure, but I think they were the only two on the other side. Now, tell me, in fairness, was there not an effort to compromise on the part of the Senators on this side? We voted for that amendment.

But that is not all. If the Senator had had the support of the so-called mild reservationists on the other side, this reservation numbered 1, which was put into this resolution for the very purpose of killing it, would not be in the form that it is in to-night, and many of us on this side would be in a better position to vote for those reservations.

The Shantung reservation is as follows:

"7. The United States withholds its assent to articles 156, 157, and 158, and reserves full liberty of action with respect to any controversy which may arise under said articles between the Republic of China and the Empire of Japan."

I offered the following substitute, which was rejected:

"Provided, That in advising and consenting to the ratification of said treaty the United States understands that the German rights and interests, renounced by Germany in favor of Japan under the provisions of articles 156, 157, and 158 of said treaty, are to be returned by Japan to China at the termination of the present war by the adoption of this treaty, as provided in the exchanged notes between the Japanese and Chinese Governments of date May 25, 1915."

That is not all. You not only put the Shantung provision in here so as to offend Japan, so as to make England in honor bound to stand by Japan under her treaties, but you went further and you put a clause in here with regard to the Monroe doctrine that to-day is arousing the press of South America.

Why did you put that in there? You put it in there because the members of the Foreign Relations Committee on the Republican side are opposed to any league of nations or any treaty at all, and to-night they proved it by their votes; and after they put it in there you did not have nerve to stand against the leaders of your own party, or you would have taken it out. That is all it amounts to. You had a chance to take it out on the floor of the Senate.

You say that the Democrats have made no attempt to compromise on reservations. There was a reservation offered in place of the Monroe doctrine reservation. That reservation was drawn by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] and concurred in by all the mild reservationists on the other side. I offered that in the very language in which it was prepared by the mild reservationists on the other side, and how did the vote stand when it came to a vote? There were 55 against it and 35 for it, and the only votes for it, outside of the vote of the Senator from North Dakota, were of the Senators on this side. The Democrats, if they had had the support of the so-called mild reservationists on the other side, would have carried the substitute of the mild reservationists for the reservation of the majority on the other side with regard to the Monroe doctrine.

I ask consent to place that in the RECORD without reading it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. POINDEXTER in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

The committee Monroe doctrine reservation is as follows:

"6. The United States will not submit to arbitration or to inquiry by the assembly or by the council of the league of nations, provided for in said treaty of peace, any questions which in the judgment of the United States depend upon or relate to its long-established policy, commonly known as the Monroe doctrine; said doctrine is to be interpreted by the United States alone and is hereby declared to be wholly outside the jurisdiction of said league of nations and entirely unaffected by any provision contained in the said treaty of peace with Germany."

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I offer the following substitute for reservation numbered 6.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

"That the national policy of the United States known as the Monroe doctrine, as announced and interpreted by the United States, is not in any way impaired or affected by the covenant of the league of nations and is not subject to any decision, report, or inquiry by the council or assembly."

Mr. PITTMAN. I offer the following amendment as a substitute for reservation numbered 6.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

"The United States does not bind itself to submit for arbitration or inquiry by the assembly or the council any question which in the judgment of the United States, depends upon or involves its long-established policy commonly known as the Monroe doctrine, and it is preserved unaffected by any provision in the said treaty contained."

The Secretary read as follows:

"The following notice is presented by Mr. SMITH of Georgia to be read in compliance with the provisions of rule 22, applicable to closing debate:

"Second. Amend the sixth reservation by striking out the words 'Is to be interpreted by the United States alone and.'"

All the foregoing substitutes were rejected.

Mr. PITTMAN. That is not all. All the way through, from the very beginning to the end, there were offered on the other side by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER], or there were offered on this side by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] or other Democratic Senators, substitute reservations for practically every reservation offered by the majority, and in nearly every case those reservations which were offered as substitutes were the reservations that had been prepared by the so-called mild reservationists on the Republican side, and yet the Democrats are said not to have offered any opportunity for compromise. The Democrats voted for them in every case, while the Republicans voted against them in every case.

I contend now, and the RECORD will disclose, that every reservation contained in the Republican resolution of ratification was dictated and framed by the identical men who voted to-night to kill the treaty. There was not a case but what, if those men had not voted against the substitutes for the Republican reservations, the substitutes would have carried.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. PITTMAN. For a question.

Mr. PENROSE. I would like to ask the Senator what profit there is in explaining to the Senate how Republicans voted according to their convictions, when every Democrat voted under orders from the White House?

Mr. PITTMAN. I was in hopes, Mr. President——

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I deny that.

Mr. PENROSE. The Senator from Colorado is about the only one who can deny it.

Mr. THOMAS. I deny that also.

Mr. PITTMAN. I am very sorry that the Senator from Colorado took up my time to reply, because any remarks made by the Senator from Pennsylvania do not require any answer whatever in times like these.

I simply am going on to show, if you please, that we offered a compromise reservation for practically every reservation offered by the "treaty killers" on the other side, and that the Democrats voted for such compromises every time, and they got no help from the other side. I want to tell you that in every case of a compromise reservation, the substitute for the reservation of the committee would have been adopted except for the 13 votes of the Republican Senators who are now openly against the treaty and who always have been against it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Any treaty.

Mr. PITTMAN. And every league of nations. Yet on the other side there is a pretense on the part of some Senators that they are sincerely in favor of the adoption of this treaty and the league of nations, with reservations. They have most consistently and persistently refused to accept any form of reservation that in their opinion would tend to the ratification of this treaty.

Does anyone charge, in his own mind, the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] with ever desiring to vote for a reservation that, in his opinion, would aid in the ratification of this treaty? Does anyone believe that the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX] ever helped frame these reservations in the Committee on Foreign Relations for the purpose of facilitating the ratification of this treaty? Yet it was those men, the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX], the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON], and the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. MOSES] who in the Committee on Foreign Relations used all of their great skill as international lawyers to frame this beautiful thing that is now laid before us.

Yet we have the Senator from Ohio, in that suave, easy, gentle manner of his, saying, "We have laid something before you—something good."

The idea of a reservation which would aid in the ratification of this treaty receiving the vote of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH]. To suggest such a thing would be an insult to the Senator from Idaho that I would not participate in for one single moment.

When you unmask all of the hypocrisy surrounding this whole transaction, when you see the leaders of the great Republican Party, representing the people of this country, pretending that they are doing everything in God's world to ratify a treaty, and at the same time you see them call to their aid to prepare the reservations the men who are killing the treaty, and you see them acting with them for the purpose of defeating amendments of Senators like the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER], who they admit are honestly for the treaty, their interest and sincerity and consistency at least are open to suspicion on the part of the people of the country.

But they say that we have offered no compromise. I say to you that we have offered compromises on the floor of the Senate which even the Senator from North Dakota would admit would have been accepted two months ago. Why will they not be accepted to-day? Conditions have not changed in the world. The reservations are just the same. The reasons they will not be accepted to-day, and he will admit it, are purely political reasons, and nothing else on earth. Then if he will not accept them on the ground of political reasons he need not appeal to us on the high ground that they are trying to ratify a treaty with those countries for the sake of humanity throughout the world.

I ask leave to print in the RECORD as a part of my remarks these various amendments that were offered and voted down, so as not to take up the time to read them.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

1. The reservations and understandings adopted by the Senate are to be made a part and a condition of the resolution of ratification, which ratification is not to take effect or bind the United States until the said reservations and understandings adopted by the Senate have been accepted by an exchange of notes as a part and a condition of said resolution of ratification by at least three of the four principal allied and associated powers, to wit, Great Britain, France, Italy, and Japan.

Mr. MCCUMBER offered following substitute:

The SECRETARY. It is proposed, in what is known as reservation No. 1, in line 3, after the word "ratification," to strike out the remainder of the reservation in the following words:

"Which ratification is not to take effect or bind the United States until the said reservations and understandings adopted by the Senate have been accepted by an exchange of notes as a part and a condition of said resolution of ratification by at least three of the four principal allied and associated powers, to wit, Great Britain, France, Italy, and Japan."

Mr. MCCUMBER. Mr. President, in the first reservation I move to strike out all after the word "ratification," where it first occurs, in line 3, down to the end of the reservation, and to insert in lieu of the words stricken out the following:

"The acceptance of such reservations and understandings by any party to said treaty may be effected by an exchange of notes."

Mr. BORAH. On line 7 I move to strike out the words "three of," so that the reservations will read that the reservations and understandings adopted by the Senate must be accepted "by at least the four principal allied and associated powers, to wit, Great Britain, France, Italy, and Japan."

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I offer the following amendment to the paragraph under consideration: Insert, after the word "ratification," on line 7, the following words:

"Or by participating in any of the proceedings authorized by said treaty."

So that it will read:

"The reservations and understandings adopted by the Senate are to be made a part and a condition of the resolution of ratification, which ratification is not to take effect or bind the United States until the said reservations and understandings adopted by the Senate have been accepted by an exchange of notes as a part and a condition of said resolution of ratification or by participating in any of the proceedings authorized by said treaty"—

And so forth.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, upon further consideration of the amendment submitted a few moments ago, I am inclined to think the suggestion made by the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] indicates that there was quite a serious imperfection in that amendment. I offer this as a substitute for it:

"Or by recognizing the United States as a party to the treaty."

So that it will read:

"Which ratification is not to take effect or bind the United States until the said reservations and understandings adopted by the Senate have been accepted by an exchange of notes as a part and a condition of said resolution of ratification, or by recognizing the United States as a party to the treaty, by at least three of the four principal allied and associated powers, to wit"—

And so forth.

The SECRETARY. Reservation of the committee No. 7 is as follows:

"7. The United States withholds its assent to articles 156, 157, and 158, and reserves full liberty of action with respect to any controversy which may arise under said articles between the Republic of China and the Empire of Japan."

Mr. MCCUMBER. I read the substitute. The offer is of my No. 1 of that which was printed the other day:

"The United States refrains from entering into any agreement on its part in reference to the matters contained in articles 156, 157, and 158, and reserves full liberty of action in respect to any controversy which may arise in relation thereto."

Mr. PITTMAN (offers substitute).

The Secretary read as follows:

"Provided, That in advising and consenting to the ratification of said treaty the United States understands that the German rights and interests, renounced by Germany in favor of Japan under the provisions of articles 156, 157, and 158 of said treaty, are to be returned by Japan to China at the termination of the present war by the adoption of this treaty as provided in the exchanged notes between the Japanese and Chinese Governments of date May 25, 1915."

Mr. PITTMAN. I call for the yeas and nays.

The Secretary read committee reservation numbered 8, as follows:

"8. The Congress of the United States will provide by law for the appointment of the representatives of the United States in the assembly and the council of the league of nations, and may in its discretion provide for the participation of the United States in any commission, committee, tribunal, court, council, or conference, or in the selection of any members thereof and for the appointment of members of said commissions, committees, tribunals, courts, councils, or conferences, or any other representatives under the treaty of peace, or in carrying out its provisions, and until such participation and appointment have been so provided for and the powers and duties of such representatives have been defined by law, no person shall represent the United States under either said league of nations or the treaty of peace with Germany or be authorized to perform any act for or on behalf of the United States thereunder, and no citizen of the United States shall be selected or appointed as a member of said commissions, committees, tribunals, courts, councils, or conferences except with the approval of the Senate of the United States."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read reservation numbered 9.

The Secretary read as follows:

"9. The United States understands that the reparation commission will regulate or interfere with exports from the United States to Germany, or from Germany to the United States, only when the United States by act or joint resolution of Congress approves such regulation or interference."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read reservation numbered 10.

The Secretary read as follows:

"10. The United States shall not be obligated to contribute to any expenses of the league of nations, or of the secretariat, or of any commission, or committee, or conference, or other agency, organized under the league of nations or under the treaty or for the purpose of carrying out the treaty provisions, unless and until an appropriation of funds available for such expenses shall have been made by the Congress of the United States."

The SECRETARY. Reservation No. 11:

"If the United States shall at any time adopt any plan for the limitation of armaments proposed by the council of the league of nations under the provisions of article 8, it reserves the right to increase such armaments without the consent of the council whenever the United States is threatened with invasion or engaged in war."

The Secretary read as follows:

"12. The United States reserves the right to permit, in its discretion, the nationals of a covenant-breaking State, as defined in article 10 of the covenant of the league of nations, residing within the United States or in countries other than that violating said article 10, to continue their commercial, financial, and personal relations with the nationals of the United States."

"13. Nothing in articles 296, 297, or in any of the annexes thereto, or in any other article, section, or annex of the treaty of peace with Germany, shall, as against citizens of the United States, be taken to mean any confirmation, ratification, or approval of any act otherwise illegal or in contravention of the rights of citizens of the United States."

"14. The United States declines to accept, as trustee or in her own right, any interest in or any responsibility for the government or disposition of the overseas possessions of Germany, her rights and titles to which Germany renounces to the principal allied and associated powers under articles 119 to 127, inclusive."

The SECRETARY. Reservation No. 15, which will now become No. 14, is as follows:

"14. The United States reserves to itself exclusively the right to decide what questions affect its honor or its vital interests and declares that such questions are not under this treaty to be submitted in any way either to arbitration or to the consideration of the council or of the assembly of the league of nations or any agency thereof or to the decision or recommendation of any other power."

[Rejected.]

The SECRETARY. On page 2 of the bill-size print, line 4, the following reservation:

"3. The United States assumes no obligation to preserve the territorial integrity or political independence of any other country or to interfere in controversies between nations—whether members of the league or not—under the provisions of article 10, or to employ the military or naval forces of the United States under any article of the treaty for any purpose, unless in any particular case the Congress, which, under the Constitution, has the sole power to declare war or authorize the employment of the military or naval forces of the United States, shall by act or joint resolution so provide."

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I desire to offer as a substitute for the third reservation, just read, the second reservation heretofore offered by the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER], found on page 15 of Senate Document 150, which I will ask the Secretary to read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read:

The SECRETARY. Reading from page 15 of star print of Document 150, line 7, as a substitute for the proposed reservation just read, the following:

"2. That the suggestions of the council of the league of nations as to the means of carrying the obligations of article 10 into effect are only advisory, and that any undertaking under the provisions of article 10, the execution of which may require the use of American military or naval forces or economic measure, can under the Constitution be carried out only by the action of the Congress, and that the failure of the Congress to adopt the suggestions of the council of the league or to provide such military or naval forces or economic measures shall not constitute a violation of the treaty."

Mr. BORAH. I send to the desk a substitute, which I offer in lieu of reservation numbered 3, as reported by the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will report the amendment proposed by the Senator from Idaho.

The SECRETARY. In lieu of the reservation reported by the committee known as reservation numbered 3, substitute the following:

"3. The United States assumes no obligation, legal or moral, under article 10 and shall not be bound by any of the terms or conditions of said article."

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I move to strike out from the reservation the following words, appearing in lines 11, 12, and 13, on page 2, namely, "or authorize the employment of the military or naval forces of the United States."

* * * * * * * *

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I ask that the amendment which I send to the desk may be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment offered by the Senator from Montana will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add at the end of reservation No. 3 the following:

"And the United States hereby releases all members of the league from any obligation to it under article 10 and declines to participate in any proceeding by the council authorized thereby."

Mr. KING:

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out from the last portion of the amendment offered by the Senator from Montana these words:

"And declines to participate in any proceeding by the council authorized thereby."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the amendment proposed by the Senator from Montana, and then the amendment as it would read if the amendment proposed by the Senator from Utah were adopted.

The SECRETARY. The Senator from Montana proposes to add, at the end of what is known as reservation No. 3, the following:

"And the United States hereby releases all members of the league from any obligation to it under article 10, and declines to participate in any proceeding by the council authorized thereby."

The Senator from Utah proposes to strike out the words "and declines to participate in any proceeding by the council authorized thereby," so that, if amended, the amendment will read, "and the United States hereby releases all members of the league from any obligation to it under article 10."

The SECRETARY. The Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] proposes the following amendment to the proposed committee reservation No. 3, as follows: On page 2, line 4, after the word "obligation," insert the words "beyond the expiration of five years from the ratification of this treaty," so that if amended the paragraph will read:

"The United States assumes no obligation beyond the expiration of five years from the ratification of this treaty to preserve the territorial integrity or political independence of any other country."

Mr. WALSH of Montana:

The SECRETARY. Add at the end of the proposed reservation No. 3 the following:

"Provided, however, That the United States assumes for the period of five years with other members of the league, the obligation of said article 10 as to the following Republics, to wit: Poland, Czecho-slovakia, and the Serb-Croat-Slovene State."

Mr McKELLAR:

The SECRETARY. Add at the end of the proposed reservation of the committee No. 3 the following:

"Provided, however, That the United States assumes for the period of five years with the other members of the league the obligation of said article 10 as to the Republic of France in maintaining her sovereignty over Alsace-Lorraine."

Mr. HITCHCOCK. To that reservation I offer the following substitute.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the proposed substitute

The SECRETARY. In lieu of the words proposed by the Committee on Foreign Relations known as reservation No. 3 insert the following:

"That the advice mentioned in article 10 of the covenant of the league which the council may give to the member nations as to the employment of their naval and military forces is merely advice which each member nation is free to accept or reject, according to the conscience and judgment of its then existing government, and in the United States this advice can only be accepted by action of the Congress at the time in being, Congress alone under the Constitution of the United States having the power to declare war."

Mr. OWEN:

The SECRETARY. In lieu of reservation numbered 3, proposed by Mr. LODGE, the Senator from Oklahoma offers the following substitute:

"The United States in assuming the obligation to preserve the territorial integrity or existing political independence of any other country, or to interfere in controversies between nations, whether members of the league or not, under the provisions of article 10, or to employ the military or naval forces of the United States, does so with the understanding that the advice or recommendation of the council or assembly under articles 10 and 15 is purely advisory and absolutely subject to such judgment and action as the Congress of the United States may find justified by the facts in any case submitted."

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, while Senators who are supporting the pending reservation seem to be voting more because of pledges than from preference, I desire to offer what I send to the desk, to be added to the pending reservation proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], and to say that its author is the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX].

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the amendment proposed to the reservation by the Senator from Nebraska.

The SECRETARY. As an addition to reservation No. 3 it is proposed to add:

"But, finally, it shall be the declared policy of our Government, in order to meet fully and fairly our obligations to ourselves and to the world, that the freedom and peace of Europe being again threatened by any power or combination of powers, the United States will regard such a situation with grave concern as a menace to its own peace and freedom, will consult with other powers affected with a view to devising means for the removal of such menace, and will, the necessity arising in the future, carry out the same complete accord and cooperation with our chief cobelligerents for the defense of civilization."

Mr. GORE:

The SECRETARY. On line 14, after the word "freedom," it is proposed to insert the words "of the seas and the freedom," so that it will read:

"But, finally, it shall be the declared policy of our Government, in order to meet fully and fairly our obligations to ourselves and to the world, that the freedom of the seas and the freedom and peace of Europe being again threatened by any power or combination of powers"—

"6. The United States will not submit to arbitration or to inquiry by the assembly or by the council of the league of nations, provided for in said treaty of peace, any questions which in the judgment of the United States depend upon or relate to its long-established policy, commonly known as the Monroe doctrine; said doctrine is to be interpreted by the United States alone and is hereby declared to be wholly outside the jurisdiction of said league of nations and entirely unaffected by any provision contained in the said treaty of peace with Germany."

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I offer the following substitute for reservation numbered 7.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

"That the national policy of the United States known as the Monroe doctrine, as announced and interpreted by the United States, is not in any way impaired or affected by the covenant of the league of nations and is not subject to any decision, report, or inquiry by the council or assembly."

Mr. PITTMAN. I offer the following amendment as a substitute for reservation numbered 6

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

"The United States does not bind itself to submit for arbitration or inquiry by the assembly or the council any question which, in the judgment of the United States, depends upon or involves its long-established policy commonly known as the Monroe doctrine, and it is preserved unaffected by any provision in the said treaty contained."

The Secretary read as follows:

"The following notice is presented by Mr. SMITH of Georgia to be read in compliance with the provisions of rule 22, applicable to closing debate:

"Second. Amend the sixth reservation by striking out the words 'Is to be interpreted by the United States alone and.'"

Mr. PITTMAN. I simply want to say this in conclusion, because my time is nearly up, that if Senators on the other side who favor the treaty—and I do not know how many of you there are, and I doubt if there are very many of you—if those of you there who are honest and sincere, if those of you there who hold your country above your party, are willing to join us on this side, I feel assured we can get you enough votes to ratify this treaty with reservations that you yourselves would have accepted two months ago.

If you had adopted the amendment of the Senator from North Dakota with regard to the preamble, if you had adopted his suggestions with regard to article 1, if you had adopted his reservation with regard to the Monroe doctrine, if you had adopted his first suggestion with regard to Shantung, which I offered as a substitute, although there is very little left of the original covenant, and while we are simply standing in the league as advisors, and while we have thrown off the burden of responsibility, there would be something left that possibly when we come into our own senses we could later rectify.

It would be the foundation upon which Republicans and Democrats later on could build a better edifice than the Republican Party have left. Change it in those particulars and I will vote for your reservations, and I will vote for your resolution of ratification, bad and insignificant and destructive as it is.

On the other hand, if you do not cut out of the resolution of ratification those reservations that you know will destroy the treaty, if you persist in that fraud upon the American people and that fraud upon the world, then I tell you there are enough fearless Democrats on this side of the Chamber to prevent its ratification until the American people understand. We may adopt the policy of isolation, and profit; we may decide to remain in an existence of selfishness, greed, and war, but we will not stand for national cowardice, pretense, and dishonesty.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is upon the resolution of ratification——

Mr. REED. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Gerry	McKellar	Smith, Ga.
Ball	Hale	McLean	Smith, Md.
Bankhead	Harding	McNary	Smith, S. C.
Beckham	Harris	Moses	Smoot
Borah	Harrison	Myers	Spencer
Brandegee	Henderson	New	Stanley
Calder	Hitchcock	Newberry	Sterling
Capper	Johnson, Calif.	Norris	Sutherland
Chamberlain	Jones, Wash.	Nugent	Swanson
Colt	Kellogg	Overman	Thomas
Cummins	Kendrick	Page	Townsend
Curtis	Kenyon	Penrose	Trammell
Dial	Keyes	Phipps	Wadsworth
Dillingham	King	Pittman	Walsh, Mass.
Edge	Kirby	Poindexter	Walsh, Mont.
Elkins	Knox	Reed	Warren
Fernald	La Follette	Robinson	Watson
Fletcher	Lenroot	Sheppard	Williams
France	Lodge	Sherman	Wolcott
Frelinghuysen	McCormick	Shields
Gay	McCumber	Simmons

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-two Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, in reference to the resolution now before the Senate, it must be distinctly understood that those who oppose the resolution in its present form are not thereby committed to the proposition that they are opposed to any reservations whatever to the treaty. It must be understood that there are reservations involved in the resolution which are regarded by those who are friendly to the treaty as unobjectionable.

There are quite a number among the friends of the treaty, I am sure, who would really raise no question concerning quite a few of the reservations embodied in the present resolution, but it is perfectly plain also that the resolution includes reservations which make it as it stands practically destructive of the very life and heart of the treaty, and it is on that account that many of us—I do, speaking for myself—find ourselves utterly unable to support the resolution.

It seems to me an illustration may be made of the position in which the United States is sought to be put by this resolution by this simple statement: Suppose four gentlemen on the other side and I are about to enter upon an important enterprise. Certain arrangements are needed—the supply of a small amount of capital with certain supervision and direction, details of management to be provided, and certain obligations are to be incurred. Finally the agreement is reduced to writing and it is submitted to each of us. The four parties sign it and then bring it to me.

I say I am perfectly willing to enter into this arrangement. I make this contract with you; I embark upon this great enterprise with you, but upon the condition and the understanding that I am to get out when I get ready; that I am to do what I like to do about it; that I will pay in as much capital as I see fit to put in; that I will cancel all obligations when I get ready to cancel them; that I am to be the sole judge of when I shall rescind that contract and in what way I shall recede from it and the right to abandon the undertaking when I like.

In an ordinary, everyday business transaction if that sort of proposition were put up as between five men, the other four men would have absolutely no respect whatever for the selfish individual who desired to have entirely in his control and at his own option the right to quit whenever he desired and to determine for himself alone on what terms and conditions he would get out or continue. No man with decent self-respect would put himself into such a position. No individual with any sense of justice and honor and duty and proper consideration for his associates would undertake to make such a contract with his fellow citizens. It would be regarded as a rank absurdity to even offer to enter into covenants whereby one of the parties would reserve to himself the unconditional and absolute determination as to how much he would contribute to the joint enterprise; that if it proved profitable and worth while he would go on with it; but if there were troubles and difficulties ahead he would get out whenever it suited him to do so. Such a proposition as that would in itself brand any individual who suggested it as selfish and designing, if not dishonest, and certainly as unreliable and untrustworthy.

That is the position the movers seek or propose to put the United States in under this resolution; that is what is offered to all our associates and allies with whom we have joined forces in conducting to victory the greatest war since the beginning of time, with whom we ought yet to be cooperating, and to whom we still owe debts of gratitude and everlasting sympathies.

You wish to say to them, "We are willing to enter upon this contract and this arrangement so as if possible to secure the peace of the world, in order that we may, if we can, carry out our original purpose and undertaking when we entered the fight, namely, to secure a righteous and permanent peace"; that is what we said we would do; not only secure a righteous peace, but a permanent peace as the ultimate goal. We say to our associates, "We are willing that you shall put in all of your resources; that you shall bind yourselves; that you shall contribute whatever is needful on your part to protect humanity against such a calamity in all the years to come, and we will go with you just as far as we see fit to go; we will quit you whenever we like to quit you; we will abandon the enterprise if for any reason it occurs to us to be to our interest to do so, or whenever there are any problems or difficulties ahead that we do not care to be responsible for or to solve or overcome. We will notify you now that we will determine for ourselves when we are free and at liberty to abandon you, and we will abandon you whenever we desire so to do without regard to your interests or obligations."

I say that is an undignified position to occupy before the world. It is not honest; it is not just; it is not fair; it is not the part that any responsible nation ought to play in the affairs of mankind. It is based upon the idea that international affairs, so far as we are concerned, constitute a game of solitaire, and we will play it alone. We do not propose to deal any cards to any other people in the world in the conduct of this game. The attitude now assumed is consistent with that idea; it is utterly selfish.

I shall not take up the time to argue the reasons why I think the treaty ought to be ratified, and this league ought to be approved, but from that standpoint alone I would appeal to every Senator upon this floor—and I think it would meet favorable response in the breast of every American in the land—that we say to our friends, "This is an important enterprise; it is worthy your contribution and our contribution; we have been with you up to this time; we will go with you to the end; we will endeavor to do our part, and we will not shirk any responsibility; we will not ask anything for ourselves that we are not willing to give to you, and we will go on and try this experiment out in the effort to see that there shall never again come to the world such destruction of life and property, such distress and suffering as we have just gone through with."

Mr. President, seven and a half millions of the bravest and best young men of the world lie buried, killed in battle; over 10,000,000 more are crippled and maimed and wounded, and $186,000,000,000 has been the cost in dollars and cents up to this time. Do we sit idly here contemplating the possibility of continuing upon a plan of competitive armaments looking again to a war that must come because we assume it can not be avoided? Ought we not make every effort on our part at least to see to it that so far as it can be accomplished we shall put an end to that sort of thing in the future?

So I say, Mr. President, that it is a great pity, in my judgment, that the resolution proposes to put this country in such a selfish, domineering, inexcusable, indecent attitude before the world; and it is a pity that at this time we are unwilling to forego this determination to accomplish a plan which was determined upon when the Foreign Relations Committee was appointed at the beginning of this session; that we are unwilling to proceed to do our best here instead of relying upon technicalities and parliamentary this and parliamentary that in order to stifle a full and fair expression of views upon this floor; that we are unwilling to do what this great occasion demands of every Senator who loves his flag, who loves his country, and who has a feeling of good will toward his fellow men everywhere.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks, without reading, a clipping from the Post with reference to the cost of the war.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

COST OF WAR $337,612,542,530—ESTIMATE REACHED IN REPORT OF CARNEGIE ENDOWMENT FOR INTERNATIONAL PEACE.

The first comprehensive report on the direct and indirect costs of the war has just been made by the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace and published in a volume of that title. After taking each of the countries separately on both sides and summarizing the total direct and total indirect costs, the report gives the direct cost as $186,000,000,000, and states that the indirect costs "have amounted to almost as much more.

The capitalized value of soldier human life, which is given among the "indirect" costs, is placed at $33,551,276,280. The property losses are divided as follows: On land, $29,960,000,000; on sea, $6,800,000,000. Loss of production is an indirect cost of the war, which has meant to the nations $45,000,000,000. War relief added $1,000,000,000. The loss to neutrals through indirect cost is placed at $1,750,000,000. Total indirect costs to all nations, including neutrals, is $151,612,542,560.

The report was gathered from reliable sources by Ernest L. Bogart, professor of economics, University of Illinois. Estimating the "capitalized value of human life," he fixes the worth of the individual at figures ranging from $2,020 in Bulgaria, Turkey, Greece, Japan, Roumania, Serbia, and several other countries up to $4,720 for the United States, where the economic worth of the individual to the nation is placed at the highest.

In addition to the $33,551,000,000 given as the economic worth of those who lost their lives or were injured in actual warfare, an equal amount is allowed for civilian losses. The number of known dead is placed at 9,998,771 and the presumed dead at 2,991,800.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I wish to call the attention of the Senate to an analysis of the vote on this resolution of ratification. There were 55 votes against the resolution of ratification. Of that number 13 Republicans voted against it because they were hostile to the treaty on any basis whatever; two others, whose position I am not absolutely clear about, supported that position, leaving 40 who voted against that form of resolution who really are in favor of the treaty, and nearly all of them—I think all of them without exception—are willing to agree to some kind of reservations of an interpretative character, and some of them may go further than that. On the other side there were 39, of whom 4 were Democrats, who voted for the somewhat extreme reservations of the so-called Lodge resolution. Those 39 Senators added to the 40 Senators makes 79 Senators who, so far as this vote is concerned, are in favor of the treaty with reservations of some kind. This body can be controlled by a majority, and that 79 far transcends a majority. If they will, those who have voted for the reservations can cooperate with those who are not willing to accept reservations going so far, and it is a question merely of the adjustment of differences of opinion. It seems to me that the 39 Senators who voted for the resolution with its reservations can hardly be expected to be regarded as earnest friends of the treaty itself if they refuse to permit a parliamentary method by which the differences may be conciliated and adjusted.

We are now face to face with a parliamentary situation under which the leader on the other side of the aisle has brought about an impasse, and we are informed that we must either vote for the treaty and the covenant with these objectionable reservations or the whole matter will be disposed of; in other words, it is a proposal to coerce the 40 Senators on this side who are in favor of the treaty and in favor of adjusting these differences by 39 on the other side, cooperating with, or some of them on that side cooperating with the irreconcilable enemies of this covenant. I merely wanted to put that analysis in the RECORD.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, as a friend of the treaty and of some league of nations, I think I am qualified to speak briefly in reply to some of the suggestions made by the Senator from Oklahoma, as well as the suggestions made by other Senators.

It seems to me, as I have listened to this discussion, that the opposition to the reservations already adopted arises largely out of a contention for mere form and a mere form of words—a form of procedure and a form of words.

Take the preamble of the reservations. It provides that acceptance of the reservations shall be signified by an exchange of notes by three of the allied powers. It is simply, then, a question of the form of acceptance. Shall it be by acquiescence in acts or conduct, or the acquiescence that arises after the lapse of a long period of time, in which we will be uncertain as to what will be done by the allied powers in regard to these reservations; or shall the acceptance be signified by an exchange of notes?

That is the difference. I agree with the committee that the acceptance should be by an exchange of notes, whereby we and the world would know, and would know speedily, as to whether or not these reservations were agreed to.

The other side, those who oppose this preamble, must have an acquiescence. They will agree that there must be an acquiescence to these reservations, but they want it to rest in conduct, in acts, or in lapse of time. Which is the better for all parties concerned—the acceptance by acquiescence or the acceptance by an exchange of notes?

I want to ask Senators on the other side who oppose this first reservation, the preamble, if they, on such a slight pretext, are willing to imperil so great a cause?

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I should like to say on my own behalf that I believe that agreeing to that would result in a defeat of the treaty itself, and for that reason we would not get the peace which I believe we all desire.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I can not agree with the Senator from Oklahoma for a single moment in that respect. I think that the allied powers would be only too glad to make the exchange of notes, signifying their acceptance of these reservations and our joining with them in this treaty.

Now, Mr. President, to call attention to another point, to show that this is largely a mere matter of words and form for which those opposed to these reservations are contending: Now, I refer to the reservations with regard to withdrawal, and I quote here and read into the RECORD the reservation of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER]. The opposition has been inclined to look very favorably upon the reservations proposed by him:

> That the United States understands, and so construes article 1, that in case of notice of withdrawal from the league of nations, as provided in said article, the United States shall be the sole judge as to whether all its international obligations and all its obligations under the said covenant have been fulfilled.

The only addition—the rest is in substance almost word for word the same—the only addition in the committee reservation is this:

> And notice of withdrawal by the United States may be given by a concurrent resolution of the Congress of the United States.

A word here in passing in regard to this reservation relating to withdrawal, and in answer to the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER]. He thinks that we are practically out of the league, that we are not doing our share under the terms of that reservation, in saying we will quit when we please. We want, Mr. President, to be in that position. This principle is involved—the principle of national sovereignty. If we can not determine when we have fulfilled our obligations but must leave it to this superpower, the council of the league of nations, we have lost so much of our sovereignty, and it is one of the greatest attributes of sovereignty, I think, that a nation may determine its international relations and when it has fulfilled its obligations to the other nations of the world. I think it essential that we should preserve the reservation in regard to withdrawal.

Who shall give a notice of withdrawal, the Executive of the United States, or Congress by joint resolution, or Congress by concurrent resolution? What will be the situation, Mr. President? Our representatives on the league of nations, in the assembly, and in the council, will be the appointees of the President of the United States. A joint resolution here to withdraw from the league of nations might be vetoed by the President. It might be vetoed on representations made by his appointees on the council of the league of nations, or the league, or the assembly; and I think it highly important that it should be left to Congress alone, who represent and speak for the people of the United States, to determine whether or not we shall withdraw from the league of nations.

Now, Mr. President—I will be very brief—I come to the next, the second, reservation. I want to read into the RECORD here three different forms of reservation. One Senator, the distinguished Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG], this morning began that good work, but did not conclude it; and I intend that these three different forms of reservations shall be read here in the RECORD together. I have before me the one proposed by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK]. It reads as follows:

> The United States does not assume an obligation to preserve the territorial integrity or political independence of any other country or to interfere in controversies between nations—whether members of the league or not—under the provisions of article 10, or to employ the military or naval forces of the United States under any article of the treaty for any purpose, until in any particular case the Congress, which, under the Constitution, has the sole power to declare war or authorize the employment of the military or naval forces of the United States, shall by act or joint resolution so provide.

That was proposed by the leader on the minority side and the leader of the discussion on that side. He must have believed in it or he would not have proposed it for discussion and consideration here.

In this same connection I want to read the reservation on this same subject proposed by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER]. We will see how much, in substance or in essence, they differ:

> The United States assumes no obligation to preserve the territorial integrity or political independence of any other country or to interfere in controversies between nations, whether members of the league or not, under the provisions of article 10, or to employ the military and naval forces of the United States under any article of the treaty for any purpose, unless in any particular case the Congress, which, under the Constitution, has the sole power to declare war or authorize the employment of the military and naval forces of the United States, shall, by act or joint resolution, so declare.

In substance it is the same as the reservation proposed by the Senator from Nebraska.

Now I am going to read the reservation, which has already been adopted, proposed by the committee:

> The United States assumes no obligation to preserve the territorial integrity or political independence of any other country or to interfere in controversies between nations, whether members of the league or not, under the provisions of article 10, or to employ the military or naval forces of the United States under any article of the treaty for any purpose, unless in any particular case the Congress, which, under the Constitution, has the sole power to declare war or authorize the employment of the military or naval forces of the United States, shall by act or joint resolution so provide.

In every element the three reservations are the same. It is left at last to the determination of Congress as to whether or not we shall intervene in any European controversy under the provisions of article 10 of the covenant.

Mr. President, they say that is the heart of this covenant. It has been the storm center of this discussion, and yet here are the three reservations substantially the same. Where will be the responsibility for the defeat of this treaty if it depends upon how we construe these reservations in regard to the most vital feature of the covenant and of this discussion? Where will the responsibility be?

Mr. President, it has been urged that there is a great moral obligation under article 10. If I remember correctly the interview between the members of the Foreign Relations Committee and the President of the United States, he said that it was simply a moral obligation that it imposed; that it had no legal sanctions; and for that reason was a moral obligation only. I agree with the President. It is a moral obligation. But, Mr. President, where else may we find a moral obligation? We will find the most sacred moral obligation growing out of the issue of peace or war, the issue that arises when the question comes as to whether or not the United States will intervene in any controversy between European nations or any controversy relating to the territorial integrity or political independence of any other nation. Would the maintenance of the status quo, for example, between any nation and its colonies or its dependencies lead to a system of oppression and injustice? Would we be obliged, Mr. President, under the moral obligation imposed by article 10 to further a system of inequality, oppression, and injustice?

It is for that reason, Mr. President, that we decline to subscribe to article 10, and provide that until Congress has so declared we shall not intervene with armed forces or by resort to economic pressure to bring any alleged recalcitrant nation to terms.

Mr. President, the controversy in which we are asked to intervene is the soul of the thing, not the mere obligation to protect the political independence or territorial integrity of another nation member of this league, but the character of the controversy determines whether or not there is a moral obligation or not for us to go to the aid of another nation which complains that its territory is invaded or its political independence is menaced. It is then that Congress in its deliberations will test the question as to whether it is right or wrong for the United States to equip an army for foreign service and go to war. Is it just, or will it work injustice? Is it moral or unmoral for us to intervene?

We could not subscribe for a moment, Mr. President, to the idea of guaranteeing the political independence and the territorial integrity of any other nation in the world unless we knew what the issues at stake were, what questions of morals are involved.

The determination of our attitude should necessarily rest in the hands of Congress. So, Mr. President, to this extent it is plain that the objections made by the other side, who seek to charge us with the responsibility of defeating this treaty, are not objections to salient and essential things in the reservations but are objections of mere form or as to phraseology.

I ask again, how can you on a pretext so slight as that which you have so far offered imperil a cause so great and important as that involved in the ratification of this treaty?

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, before the vote is taken I wish to say just a word.

Much has been said concerning compromise and negotiation. The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] this evening said that as to many of the reservations it was a mere matter of form, but that the reservation upon article 10 was vital, that it cut the heart out of the league.

I want to say to the other side that that reservation, as most of the other reservations, was drawn not by the enemies of the treaty but by its friends, and article 10 being the crucial point of difference between the two sides of the aisle, upon that article there can be no compromise, there can be no negotiation that will change the substance of that reservation. If the other side of the aisle and the President of the United States desire a ratification of the treaty they must take the reservation upon article 10 in substantially its present form.

That being true, there can be no advantage or good accomplished by further negotiation or talk about compromise. We might as well settle it now.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, it is indeed very distressing to me to hear a Senator of the United States say, in this crucial hour of the world's history, that there can be no compromise. I dislike to think that when we are considering a treaty which was intended to bring to an end all hostilities in the world growing out of the war, and which has already been ratified by four of the great powers of the world—namely, Great Britain, France, Italy, and Japan—when everything is in the balance, the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] should notify the American people that there can be no compromise. To what extremes have we come politically that we dare to thus jeopardize the peace of the world?

My distinguished colleague [Mr. HARDING], for whom I have the profoundest respect, in an eloquent speech which he made a short time ago in substance said that these reservations were prepared by the committee as friends of the treaty.

Senators, let me call your attention to the personnel of the Republican side of the Committee on Foreign Relations. Bear in mind that it is said that these reservations were prepared by the friends of the treaty, and yet when it comes to the ratification of this treaty with these reservations contained in it, out of the Republican membership of that committee Senator BORAH, Senator BRANDEGEE, Senator KNOX, Senator JOHNSON of California, and Senator MOSES all voted against these reservations, which the Senator from Wisconsin says were prepared by the friends of the treaty.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. If the Senator will permit me, he has left one out. Senator FALL also was against the treaty.

Mr. POMERENE. Yes. I was going to refer to him. Senator FALL, though he was not here to vote, made the statement upon the floor of the Senate that he was opposed to the treaty.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? I will be glad to have him answer out of my time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. POMERENE. I yield.

Mr. LENROOT. Does the Senator know that not one of the reservations that have been discussed to-night was prepared by any of those gentlemen he has named?

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I know what reservations were reported by that committee. There were 15 of them reported by that committee to the Senate for its consideration. It may be that some of the Senators who were friends of the treaty were consulted as to the final form of the reservations. I will not question that statement. But how often have there been conferences between the mild reservationists on the other side of the Chamber and those who favor the treaty on this side of the Chamber? And when I make that statement I am not finding more fault with the Members on the other side of the Chamber than I am with some Members on this side of the Chamber. I have long been of the opinion that there ought to be a compromise, and I say now there ought to be a compromise.

Senators, it is proposed to-night to insist upon a vote upon the Lodge resolution, and then Senators take the position that because we have voted the second time upon it, from a parliamentary standpoint we are foreclosed from taking any other action. My distinguished colleague said, in answer to the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], "We are willing to go to the country upon that issue." I say to him, and to all others who think like him, we will meet you at Philippi on that proposition.

Mistake not, Senators. The American people, who spent nearly $20,000,000,000, who raised an army of 4,000,000 of soldiers, and left 50,000 of their best sons on the battle fields of France and of Flanders, are not going to be deceived by parliamentary tactics.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. POMERENE. I yield.

Mr. PENROSE. I am curious to know whether Philippi is located in Oklahoma, where the recent congressional contests were held. [Laughter in the galleries.]

The VICE PRESIDENT. The occupants of the galleries have been warned sufficiently, so that if they want to obey the rules of the Senate they can. As there is no way to distinguish the good from the bad, the Chair will be obliged to have all punished pretty soon.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, for aught I know Philippi may be located in the City of Brotherly Love.

Mr. PENROSE. I do not recall any such place in Pennsylvania. There is one in New Jersey that I remember, and, I suppose, in Oklahoma, and in Kentucky.

Mr. POMERENE. It may be in any of those States, but I suspect it will be in all of those States where Senators who have been fighting this treaty present themselves for reelection.

Mr. President, are Senators going to be satisfied that they have exhausted all means of coming together so that we may get the necessary two-thirds to ratify this treaty? Do Senators who come from sovereign States believe that their people will approve, whether those Senators are Republicans or Democrats, if we are to cease our labors now and make no further effort toward adjusting our differences? I do not believe so, and I do not think that the treaty which has been the subject of so much consideration and debate for a period of six months and more ought to be thus lightly cast aside.

If there has been any undue exhibition of temper on this side of the Chamber I am sorry for it. I think there has been some on both sides of the Chamber. I think a good many things have been said in the Senate that ought not to have been said. They have ruffled the feelings of some Senators. Both sides are in that respect to blame.

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. POMERENE. I yield for a question.

Mr. McCORMICK. I was going to ask the Senator in the best of good humor if it was only in the Senate of the United States that things have been said which it would have been better to have left unsaid, and by persons more distinguished than Senators of the United States?

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I am willing to overlook the temper of the distinguished Senator from Illinois. I recognize the fact that there is one man in American history who can not even be mentioned in his presence but it irritates him. I am quite willing to assume, for the sake of the argument, that he is the repository of all virtue, and that the other distinguished gentleman is the repository of all vice, if that will soothe him.

But, Mr. President, that is not the question before us. It is simply another exhibition of the fact that it is not the treaty that is being considered so much by some Senators as perhaps it is one of the draftsmen of that treaty.

Perhaps it would not be in order at this time, but I am going to present a motion to the Senate. It may be that under the holding of the Chair it is out of order just now, but I shall ask that it be considered later, and I am going to present it for the information of the Senate.

I move that the treaty, the resolution of ratification, and the reservations heretofore presented to the Senate be referred to a committee of conciliation composed of six Senators to be appointed by the President of the Senate, among whom shall be the leader of the majority, the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], who shall be chairman of the committee, and the leader of the minority, the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK], and that said committee be instructed to prepare and report to the Senate such a resolution of ratification and reservations as in their judgment will meet the approval of not less than two-thirds of the Senate.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I think that is clearly out of order under the rule, and I make the point of order against it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. This is the rule, Rule XXII:

When a question is pending, no motion shall be received but—
To adjourn.
To adjourn to a day certain, or that when the Senate adjourn it shall be to a day certain.
To take a recess.
To proceed to the consideration of executive business.
To lay on the table.
To postpone definitely.
To postpone to a day certain.
To commit—

And so forth. The Chair understands that this is a motion to commit to a special committee.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I move to lay the motion on the table.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is in order. The question is on laying the motion of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] on the table.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE and Mr. ASHURST called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. KENDRICK (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before with reference to my pair with the senior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL], I withhold my vote.

Mr. CURTIS (when Mr. NELSON'S name was called). I was requested to announce that the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] is unavoidably detained from the Senate. He is paired with the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON].

The roll call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 48, nays 42—as follows:

So Mr. POMERENE'S motion was laid on the table.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I move that the treaty be referred to the Committee of the Whole with instructions to report it back to the Senate with the following reservations, which I ask to have read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read.

The Secretary read as follows:

That any member nation proposing to withdraw from the league on two years' notice is the sole judge as to whether its obligations referred to in article 1 of the league of nations have been performed as required in said article.

That no member nation is required to submit to the league, its council, or its assembly, for decision, report, or recommendation, any matter which it considers to be in international law a domestic question such as immigration, labor, tariff, or other matter relating to its internal or coastwise affairs.

That the national policy of the United States known as the Monroe doctrine, as announced and interpreted by the United States, is not in any way impaired or affected by the covenant of the league of nations and is not subject to any decision, report, or inquiry by the council or assembly.

That the advice mentioned in article 10 of the covenant of the league which the council may give to the member nations as to the employment of their naval and military forces is merely advice which each member nation is free to accept or reject according to the conscience and judgment of its then existing Government, and in the United States this advice can only be accepted by action of the Congress at the time in being, Congress alone under the Constitution of the United States having the power to declare war.

That in case of a dispute between members of the league if one of them have self-governing colonies, dominions, or parts which have representation in the assembly, each and all are to be considered parties to the dispute, and the same shall be the rule if one of the parties to the dispute is a self-governing colony, dominion, or part, in which case all other self-governing colonies, dominions, or parts, as well as the nation as a whole, shall be considered parties to the dispute, and each and all shall be disqualified from having their votes counted in case of any inquiry on said dispute made by the assembly.

Mr. LODGE. On that I ask the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. KENDRICK (when his name was called). Making the same announcement concerning my pair as heretofore, I withhold my vote.

Mr. CURTIS (when Mr. NELSON'S name was called). I desire to announce that the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] is paired with the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON].

The roll call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 41, nays 50, not voting 4, as follows:

So Mr. HITCHCOCK'S motion was rejected.

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. President, on the 15th day of November, when the cloture rule was up for consideration, the Vice President made the following statement:

The Chair believes that after one resolution of ratification containing reservations has been rejected by the Senate, if a majority of the Senators so desire they may present other resolutions of ratification, in the hope in some way, with reservations, that the treaty may be ratified. It is always within the power of the majority of the Senate to construe its rules, and thus it is within the power of the majority of the Senate to keep this treaty before the Senate. It can dispose of it by taking up other business, by recommitting it to the Committee on Foreign Relations, by referring it to a special committee, or by sending it back to the President and saying that it will not have anything to do with it; but so long as a majority of the Senators want to try to ratify in some way, as it is usually expressed, this treaty, the majority of the Senate has it within its power to to act. The adoption of the cloture rule, if adopted, will not prevent the majority from attempting to ratify the treay in some way, although it will end the debate within the period of time provided by that rule.

Mr. President, the friends of the treaty upon this side of the Chamber had every reason to believe that the friends of the treaty on the other side of the Chamber would join with us in securing such reservations as would be acceptable to the other signatories to the treaty. Is it possible that the friends of the treaty on the other side of the Senate are now unwilling to join with us as Americans, not Republicans or Democrats, to ratify this treaty and get our country back to a normal basis and our industries restored as they should be?

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I should like to answer at that point that the friends of the treaty upon this side of the aisle have voted, and are ready again to vote, for the ratification of the treaty; and if the friends of the treaty on the other side will do likewise, we shall soon have it disposed of.

Mr. HENDERSON. Yes; Mr. President, but the apparent friends of the treaty on the other side would defeat it, for they are asking us to do something we are unwilling to do—to ratify it absolutely on their own terms, with too drastic reservations. I am not willing to vote for a resolution of ratification that will in any way tend to offend the sensibilities and injure the national pride and feelings of any nation unless it is absolutely necessary so to do. In one of these reservations, Mr. President, that is what is done, and particularly with reference to some of the South American Republics.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nevada yield to me?

Mr. HENDERSON. I yield.

Mr. EDGE. On what basis does the Senator from Nevada assume that the resolution of ratification now before the Senate would not be accepted by the necessary number of nations? Adding to the question, under the disposition we have made of the resolution of ratification by adding reservations to it, do we in any way deny the same privilege to the nations abroad? Can not they also make reservations to the treaty, applying to local or domestic questions, as we have done?

Mr. HENDERSON. Certainly they can if they wish. What I had in mind particularly was in reference to the motion made by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] the other day to strike from section 5 the clause relating to the Monroe doctrine, in the words "said doctrine is to be interpreted by the United States alone."

Mr. President, there is no useful purpose that can come from leaving that sentence in the reservation. The reservation is just as strong and just as effective without it. I wish to say that, so far as the United States is concerned, the Monroe doctrine is our policy, but when applied it affects other nations of the Western Hemisphere, and I do not think we should incorporate language in any reservation that might wound the national pride or feelings of any of our sister republics on the Western Hemisphere.

There are other reasons, Mr. President. Why do we do useless and unnecessary things? The President has notified us that the present reservations nullify the treaty. If we adopt it, he will likely return it. If we reject it, it is still before us, unless he calls for it, and then it will come before us again. Why not make an earnest effort to get it with protecting reservations that will answer every purpose and be acceptable to the other nations? I shall oppose any adjournment until this treaty is disposed of to the satisfaction of the American people.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I voted for the resolution now pending, and if it comes to a vote I shall vote for it again; but we do not seem to be making any progress. I believe more than two-thirds of the Senate favor ratifying the treaty; I am sure they do. I believe with modifications that would not really affect their value or their strength the present reservations might be changed that the requisite two-thirds vote for ratification could be obtained.

A few moments ago the resolution introduced by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] was before the Senate referring the treaty back to the Committee of the Whole and directing the Committee of the Whole to report with certain reservations. If the Committee of the Whole had reported to the Senate as directed by the resolution of the Senator from Nebraska, then the whole subject would have been open before the Senate for additional reservations. When I voted for the motion of the Senator from Nebraska it was not because I was satisfied with the reservations he had incorporated in his motion, but because I desired the subject again to be freely before the Senate.

I realize that the Senate seems to be in a deadlock, but I believe it is possible still to do something. Shall we go forward and kill the treaty by having the resolution of ratification again rejected or shall we adjourn until to-morrow, and see if it is possible to get together? I do not desire to make the motion. Unless Senators on the other side are willing to give it some such direction, it is hardly worth while to make it. I throw out that suggestion as one who has voted for the reservations, as one who will vote for them again if the question comes before the Senate simply upon them, but as one who feels that, if some modifications not losing the value of the reservations in their power to protect the United States and the people of the United States may be agreed upon, it is greatly to the interests of our country that this matter should be decided before we adjourn, and that the treaty should be ratified before we adjourn. Of course, if we adjourn with no action, the treaty goes back to the President; he can send it to us again when we meet in December, and then there will be great delay and more trouble. I believe it to be to the interest of the country to ratify the treaty with proper reservations. That can only be done if Senators upon the other side are willing to give some such direction to it as I have suggested.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Vote!

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. BRANDEGEE and Mr. LA FOLLETTE called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. KENDRICK (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as to my pair, I withhold my vote.

Mr. CURTIS (when Mr. NELSON'S name was called). I make the same announcement as before with regard to the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON]. He is paired wtih the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON]. I will let this announcement stand for the day.

So the Senate refused to adjourn.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, I have voted for the ratification of this treaty with the reservations adopted by the Senate. That resolution has been defeated. I have voted repeatedly for parliamentary procedure which would give my party associates upon this side of the Chamber an opportunity to present a program embodying a ratification resolution with such reservations as they desired. It seems to me the time has come when we should talk plainly about our final attitude on this important question.

I believe that the reservations which have been added in the Senate have improved the treaty and covenant, have strengthened it, and have aroused a public sentiment in this country which has helped the whole principle of a league of nations, and which it much needed. I think we have lost sight of the fact that to make this league of nations a success the American people must be enthusiastically behind the league of nations; and if I am any judge of public sentiment in America, the American people want to try out this league of nations, but they also want the reservations which have been proposed in the Senate adopted in order to have no future misunderstanding or uncertainties as to our rights and obligations in this league.

What is the objection made to these reservations? The only objection that can be made, in the last analysis, is this, that our allies will not accept this covenant with these reservations. The only thing the American people have asked out of this war is a union of the nations of the earth, organized to prevent ever again the occurrence of world wars, and to end thereby poverty, misery, suffering, murder, famine, and starvation. That is the only thing the American people have asked or are asking. They have given to the Allies every single other thing they wanted at the peace conference. Can it be said now that our allies will refuse to accept the reservations which the American Congress has added to this covenant? Is that the attitude of our allies? Is that the position which we are to assume—that our allies will not listen to reservations offered by the people of America to help strengthen this league and get behind it the whole public sentiment of America?

There is much sentiment in America against this whole proposition of a covenant for a league of nations. There are many people, and the number is increasing daily, who honestly believe that this is a compact for the maintenance of world peace upon the theory that "might makes right." There are many people in this country who honestly believe that the necessary principles of justice and righteousness and fair dealing that should underlie this league are removed and that it is the purpose of some of our allied nations to enforce peace by the methods of the oppressor. I say that sentiment has been increasing and growing steadily in this country.

Yet I believe that we owe something to our soldiers. We promised again and again that they were fighting the last war, and that the end of wars had come with this war, and that there never again would be the bloodshed and the misery on earth that came out of this recent war. I therefore have sacrificed some of my convictions and opinions about many of the provisions of this covenant and of this treaty in the hope of accomplishing the end sought. I was willing to go a long way to hold out the chance of ending wars and establishing a permanent peace. I was willing to sacrifice here and there and to give here and there, in order that we might join with the other nations and try the experiment of a union of the nations of the world to end war.

Mr. President, I appeal to the Senators in this Chamber tonight to vote for this treaty and these reservations. How can we, how can any man in public life, defend an attack upon one of these reservations? Are they not all American? Do they not all seek, here and there, to safeguard and protect America's interests, to clarify doubts, to make certain and secure just what America is guaranteeing, and just what America is promising and assuring?

There is little difference between us. It is a difference of form and words, and not of principles. So it seems to me that we should come together, and that we should support the resolution that is pending. I, for one, feel that I have done my duty, and that I can face my constituents and my countrymen and say that I have supported the ratification of this treaty and the covenant for a league of nations with reservations which, though not absolutely satisfactory—I would have had some others added to those that have been added—yet do something to clarify and remove misunderstandings, something to bring about a league of nations for the purpose of ending wars. The resolution in this form at least gives us the chance of an opportunity of trying that experiment; and I, for one, do not want the responsibility of casting my vote in any manner or way here which may possibly deny the American people that opportunity, provided American rights are secure.

If we differed on principle, if there was one reservation here that any American could say was not in the interest of our country, we might have reason to hesitate, reason to fence over position or place.

But I refuse to anticipate that our allies, with whom we have fought, for whom we have suffered, for whom we have sacrificed, to whom we have given so much, will refuse the requests of the American Senate to safeguard and protect American interests by certain reservations. Let us vote to ratify this treaty. Let us vote for these reservations, and let us go home to our constituents and say, "With all its imperfections and all its limitations, we have adopted the treaty and decided to try this experiment." When I say difficulties, I appreciate the tremendous difficulties that our President and his associates had in Paris, and I do not think for one moment it is any criticism of him to be able to find here and there a line, a phrase, an article, that can be amended, changed, or strengthened. We are removed from the atmosphere that he was in. We are here on American soil, as American Senators, and who would deny us the right here to say, "That language is not strong enough," "That is not certain enough," "That is not definite enough"? That is what we have done, and everything about which there has been a substantial difference of principle in this treaty or covenant has been written into the reservations now before us.

Mr. President, I feel it my duty and in the interest of America to vote for the ratification of this treaty with the reservations which have been offered, and I believe if we do that we will make the league of nations more popular in America, we will get behind it a public sentiment that will give it life and vitality, which it needs; give it support, for without the public sentiment of America behind this league it is a failure from the start. Without these reservations it has the sting of death in it.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I should myself prefer to vote for this covenant and treaty without the reservations and without amendment. I supported, however, the reservations which were offered by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] and voted for them. Still I am not willing to be left in the position of defeating the treaty by rejecting the resolution supported by those who have been demanding stronger reservations in the treaty, and if I am confronted with the necessity of either finally voting for the treaty with the Lodge reservations or defeating the present ratification of the covenant, I shall vote to ratify.

Mr. President, when conciliation is sought on either side of this Chamber there must be shown some one willing to make concessions, and I say flatly that I am willing to make great concessions if it is necessary to secure the ratification of the treaty. But I do insist it is only fair for those who are truly the friends of the treaty to pursue the parliamentary procedure under which these matters of difference may be considered and by some mutual concessions an arrangement effected that shall command the requisite two-thirds. The friends of the treaty have been divided and conquered by the enemies of the treaty; party and personal pride and prejudice played upon with sad results.

The pending vote can not obtain the necessary two-thirds, and in voting for the Lodge reservations, which are subject to several very serious objections, I do so in a spirit of conciliation with the hope that my example and that of others may break down the barriers of excessive party and personal pride in the interest of our beloved country. We are all Americans, and in foreign affairs we should not divide as Republicans and Democrats, whose divisions are based on domestic differences alone. If I and other of my colleagues make great concessions to you, can you not make some concessions to those of us who very strongly believe in more carefully drawn reservations and who find some few of your reservations too extreme? Will my colleagues from mere pride on both sides of the Chamber refuse to cooperate or to yield in the slightest respect to the sentiments and strong opinions of each other? At a great sacrifice of strongly held opinions I yield much in the hope of promoting the ratification of the treaty.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution of ratification offered by Mr. LODGE. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CURTIS (when Mr. NELSON'S name was called). The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] is necessarily detained from the Senate, and is paired with the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON]. If present and not paired, the Senator from Minnesota would vote "aye."

The VICE PRESIDENT. On the resolution of ratification the yeas are 41 and the nays 51. The resolution not having received the constitutional two-thirds, it is rejected.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, Rule XIII of the Senate provides that—

> If the Senate shall refuse to reconsider, or upon reconsideration shall affirm its first decision, no further motion to reconsider shall be in order unless by unanimous consent.

The Senate has therefore taken final action. It is still open to the President, under the rule of the Senate, to withdraw the original treaty which he sent in and to resubmit it. So far as the treaty now submitted goes, the final vote has been taken, and I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of legislative business.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, before that motion is put, I desire to make the point of order that the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts is not in order. Of course, I realize that he has taken the position that the defeat of his resolution, not of the Senate's resolution but his resolution, has ended the life of the treaty so far as the Senate is now concerned. The Chair some days ago, and to-day, ruled that the defeat of this resolution would not prevent the offering of other resolutions for consideration. I think the Chair was right. The Senate to-day determined otherwise, but the real issue before the Senate now is whether the Senator from Massachusetts is right and the final action of the Senate has been taken, or whether the Chair was right in holding that further procedure could take place.

I think that before the question passes from the Senate, the Senate should decide the question itself. I contend that the action of the Senate has not disposed of the treaty of peace, and if it has not, under the cloture rule the motion of the Senator is not in order, because there is no business in order until the treaty has been disposed of, under cloture rule. Of course, if this is a final disposition of the treaty, then the Senator's motion would be in order. I want the Senate to vote on it and decide it as a Senate, and therefore I send to the Secretary's desk and move the adoption of an unconditional ratification of the treaty of peace.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I make no point of order, if we can take the vote at once.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the resolution submitted by the Senator from Alabama.

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved (two-thirds of the Senators present concurring therein), That the Senate do advise and consent to the ratification of the treaty of peace with Germany concluded at Versailles on the 28th day of June, 1919.

Mr. UNDERWOOD and Mr. LODGE called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. KENDRICK (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the senior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL], and because of his absence I withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I would vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CURTIS. I desire again to announce the absence of the senior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL]. If present, he would vote "nay." I also desire to announce the necessary absence of the senior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON].

The result was announced—yeas 38, nays 53, as follows:

So the resolution of ratification offered by Mr. UNDERWOOD was rejected.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, under the ruling made by the Chair, as I understand it, and under the view that I take of the parliamentary situation, the treaty can only be disposed of by the Senate by a two-thirds vote; that is, by ratification or by a two-thirds vote to indefinitely postpone. The Senate rules expressly provide that it requires a two-thirds vote to indefinitely postpone. I take it there must be some meaning attached to that.

Again, I believe that it is not within the power of a majority of the Senate to terminate the action of the Senate when it is expressly required that there shall be a two-thirds vote either to ratify the treaty or to dispose of it. I think the treaty is before the Senate now; and, as the ratification resolution presented by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] has not received the necessary votes, I do not think it is within the power of the Senate to place the treaty out of this body in any such manner.

I therefore offer a resolution of ratification which I ask may be read and acted on.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I make the point of order—it is clear to my mind—that the treaty is not in the Senate. I yielded to the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] and reserved the point of order then. I now make the point of order, and on that I ask for the ruling of the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks the Chair has ruled on every possible situation. The Chair ruled that the treaty is before the Senate and has been overruled by the Senate three times. The Chair does not think that the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] raises any new question at all that the Senate has not already passed upon.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. Is the pending motion the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts to go into legislative session?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The pending motion is the motion to go into legislative session.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I ask for the yeas and nays on that.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I rise to a point of order——

Mr. LODGE. One moment. I yielded to the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] and did not make the point of order, as I might then have made it, but I desire now to make a motion in connection with the treaty.

I move to reconsider the vote by which the Senate rejected the resolution of ratification moved by the Senator from Alabama, and pending that motion I move to lay the motion to reconsider on the table. On that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and, having been taken, resulted—yeas 48, nays 42, as follows:

YEAS—48.

So Mr. LODGE's motion to lay the motion to reconsider on the table was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. I now renew my motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of legislative business.

Mr. FLETCHER. I make the point of order that the business next in order would be to communicate to the President the various resolutions and action thereon relative to the treaty.

Mr. LODGE. That order is not necessary. It was so held by the Senate in the case of the Chamberlain-Bayard treaty, which was rejected as this has been.

Mr. FLETCHER. I observe that nearly all the precedents are to the contrary.

Mr. LODGE. It has been done many times, but it was held in the case of that treaty that it was not necessary, and it is not necessary. I am sure the President will take official notice of the action of the Senate.

Mr. FLETCHER. I should like a ruling of the Chair on the point of order as made anyway.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Well, the Chair overrules the point of order.

RETURN TO LEGISLATIVE SESSION.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I renew my motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of legislative business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts that the Senate proceed to the consideration of legislative business.

The motion was agreed to.

END OF WAR WITH GERMANY.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I desire to offer a concurrent resolution, which I ask to have read and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution submitted by the Senator from Massachusetts will be read.

The resolution (S. Con. Res. 17) was read and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, as follows:

Whereas by resolution of Congress adopted April 6, 1917, and by reason of acts committed by the then German Government, a state of war was declared to exist between that Government and the United States; and

Whereas the said acts of the German Government have long since ceased; and

Whereas by an armistice signed November 11, 1918, hostilities between Germany and the allied and associated powers were terminated; and

Whereas by the terms of the treaty of Versailles Germany is to be at peace with all the nations engaged in war against her whenever three Governments, designated therein, have ratified said treaty: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the said state of war between Germany and the United States is hereby declared to be at an end.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had passed a concurrent resolution extending the time within which the Joint Special Committee on the Pilgrim Tercentenary shall report to January 10, 1920, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to a resolution giving the consent of the House of Representatives to an adjournment sine die of the Senate at any time prior to December 1 when the Senate shall so determine.

The message further announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 2961) authorizing the county of Accomac, Va., to construct certain bridges to connect Chincoteague Island and the mainland, with amendments, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolution, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice President:

S. 425. An act to establish the Zion National Park in the State of Utah;

S. 3319. An act to provide for the reimbursement of the United States for motive power, cars, and other equipment ordered for railroads and systems of transportation under Federal control, and for other purposes;

S. 3332. An act authorizing the board of county commissioners of the county of Hartford, in the State of Connecticut, to construct a bridge across the Connecticut River between Windsor Locks and East Windsor, at Warehouse Point, in said county and State; and

H. J. Res. 249. Joint resolution to continue the control of imports of dyes and coal-tar products.

RAILROAD CONTROL.

Mr. CUMMINS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 3288, which is commonly known as the railroad-control bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3288) further to regulate commerce among the States and with foreign nations and to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, as amended.

Mr. CUMMINS. I now ask that the bill be temporarily laid aside.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ACTION OF FEDERAL RESERVE BOARD.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, the Federal Reserve Board and the officials of the Federal reserve bank have been charged unfairly with causing a panic in the stock market, and for that reason I asked for a statement of the facts. I submit to the record the letter of the Federal Reserve Board, which fully explains the matter, and to which I invite the attention of the Senate. I ask unanimous consent that the letter, which is of importance to the country, may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

FEDERAL RESERVE BOARD,
OFFICE OF THE GOVERNOR,
Washington, November 17, 1919.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Receipt is acknowledged of your letter of the 14th instant.

The Federal reserve act is intended for the benefit of commerce and industry and not for the stimulation of the investment market or of speculative movements. The short title of the act reads, as follows:

"An act to provide for the establishment of Federal reserve banks, to furnish an elastic currency, to afford means of rediscounting commercial paper, to establish a more effective supervision of banking in the United States, and for other purposes." Section 13 of the act provides, in part, that Federal reserve banks may discount notes, drafts, and bills of exchange arising out of actual commercial transactions; that is, notes, drafts, and bills of exchange issued or drawn for agricultural, industrial, or commercial purposes, or the proceeds of which have been used, or are to be used, for such purposes. It provides further that nothing contained in the act shall be construed to prohibit such notes, drafts, and bills of exchange, secured by staple agricultural products, or other goods, wares, or merchandise from being eligible for such discount; "but such definition shall not include notes, drafts, or bills covering merely investments or issued or drawn for the purpose of carrying or trading in stocks, bonds, or other investment securities, except bonds and notes of the Government of the United States."

The board has repeatedly called attention to the fact that resources obtained from the Federal reserve banks should not be used for speculative purposes, and at various times when there has been unusual speculative activity it has issued public warnings as to the bad effect of such activities upon the banking situation. The first warning of this kind was issued as long ago as October, 1915, and the warning has been repeated on several occasions since that date when conditions made it necessary.

On June 10, 1919, the board made public a letter, which it had addressed to all Federal reserve agents, reading as follows:

The Federal Reserve Board is concerned over the existing tendency toward excessive speculation, and, while ordinarily this could be corrected by an advance in discount rates at the Federal reserve banks, it is not practicable to apply this check at this time because of Government financing. By far the larger part of the invested assets of Federal reserve banks consists of paper secured by Government obligations, and the board is anxious to get some information on which it can form an estimate as to the extent of member-bank borrowings on Government collateral made for purposes other than for carrying customers who have purchased Liberty bonds on account, or other than for purely commercial purposes.

This letter was sent out for the purpose of ascertaining to what extent Government obligations were being used to secure loans from the Federal reserve banks for other than commercial purposes or for carrying subscriptions.

In its monthly publication, the Federal Reserve Bulletin, the board has called attention repeatedly since that date to the dangerous speculative tendencies which have been prevalent.

In a printed statement during the summer, the board made the specific announcement that it would not sanction any policy which would require the Federal reserve banks to withhold credits demanded by commerce and industry for the processes of production and distribution in order to enable member banks to furnish cheap money for speculative purposes.

In ordinary circumstances and normal times one check would have been to advance discount rates, but owing to the fact that the Government has sold over $21,000,000,000 of Liberty bonds and Victory notes, many of which securities have been sold to persons who were unable to pay for them in full but were obliged to pay for them in installments out of savings or accrued incomes, it was felt that an advance in the discount rate on notes secured by Government obligations should, so far as possible, be avoided.

The speculative movement continued, its demands on the banks for credit coming on top of commercial requirements, of the seasonal crop-moving demand, and of demands arising out of the unusual congestion of export commodities at ports owing to the delays in transportation. As a consequence of these conditions, the reserves of the Federal reserve banks began to decline, and those of the Federal Reserve Bank of New York in particular dropped to such an extent that the board about two weeks ago approved an increase in discount rates of that institution averaging about one-half of 1 per cent. All other Federal reserve banks shortly afterwards expressed the desire to put into effect a similar advance in their rates, which the board approved.

The Federal Reserve Bank of New York on November 2, the date on which the advance in its rates was made public, issued the following statement supplementing the repeated warnings of the board:

The reason for the advance in rates announced to-day by the Federal Reserve Bank of New York is the evidence that some part of the great volume of credit, resulting from both Government and private borrowing, which war finance required, as it is released from time to time from Government needs, is being diverted to speculative employment rather than to reduction of bank loans. As the total volume of the Government's loans is now in course of reduction corresponding reductions in bank loans and deposits should be made in order to insure an orderly return of normal credit conditions.

Notwithstanding this notice, activities on the exchanges continued and the reserves of the Federal reserve bank still declined. During the week ending November 8 the Federal Reserve Board sold to other Federal reserve banks $90,000,000 of acceptances for account of the Federal Reserve Bank of New York, but in spite of this action the reserves of the New York bank fell to 40 per cent. In these circumstances, in order to prevent further expansion, it became necessary to call the attention of the large rediscounting banks to the situation.

The high rates for call money which have prevailed continuously for the past two weeks and intermittently for several months past were in themselves very clear indications of the strained position into which the unbridled speculation had thrown the stock market and rendered a readjustment inevitable unless the resources of the Federal reserve banks were to be indirectly drawn upon for stock-market purposes. The public has had ample notice of the board's policy.

You are so familiar with the Federal reserve act that it is hardly necessary to call your attention to that paragraph of section 4 which treats of the duties of the board of directors of a Federal reserve bank, and which provides that "said board shall administer the affairs of said bank fairly and impartially and without discrimination in favor of or against any member bank or banks and shall, subject to the provisions of law and the orders of the Federal Reserve Board, extend to each member bank such discounts, advancements, and accommodations as may be safely and reasonably made with due regard for the claims and demands of other member banks." This would, of course, afford means for a strict rationing of credits should such an extreme course ever become necessary. It is interesting to note that there no longer exists in the mind of the public or. in fact, a connection between call-money rates and the commercial paper market, and it must be gratifying to all those interested in sound banking methods that the events of the past week have had no effect upon the market for commercial paper.

Very truly, yours,

W. P. G. HARDING, Governor.

Hon. R. L. OWEN,
United States Senate.

PROPOSED FINAL ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate adjourn sine die.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts that the Senate adjourn sine die.

Mr. ROBINSON, Mr. LODGE, and others called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and, having been taken, resulted—yeas 5, nays 84, as follows:

YEAS—5.

So the Senate refused to adjourn sine die.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I made the motion to adjourn sine die forgetting a promise I had made to several Senators to have an executive session in order to dispose of certain important nominations. It was for that reason that I changed my own vote and asked other Senators to do likewise.

I now move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 35 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

RAILROAD CONTROL—VETO MESSAGE.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WADSWORTH in the chair). The Chair lays before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which will be read.

The Secretary read the veto message of the President, as follows:

To the Senate:

I return herewith without my approval Senate bill 641, entitled "An act to amend section 10 of an act entitled 'An act to provide for the operation of transportation systems while under Federal control, for the just compensation of their owners, and for other purposes,' approved March 21, 1918."

This bill deprives the Government of the United States, while still charged with the exclusive responsibility for operating the railroads during Federal control, of any power to make any change in any intrastate rate, fare, charge, classification, regulation, or practice without having first secured the approval of the proper State regulating tribunal, whereas under the Federal control act as originally enacted the Government of the United States had the same power to determine these intrastate matters as it had to determine similar matters of an interstate character.

The immediate effect of such a change in the law would be to deprive the Federal Government of the ability to cope promptly, and decisively with operating emergencies which are now arising and must continue to arise during the existing period of heavy traffic. Recently the Railroad Administration found that refrigerator cars were being unduly detained by consignees at a time when there was urgent demand for an enlarged transportation use of such cars. The Railroad Administration was able substantially and promptly to correct this situation by the imposition of an emergency charge. Such step could not have been taken promptly if it had been necessary to consult also the State authorities throughout the Union. Since the authorities of each State would under this bill have the full power to exercise an independent judgment, the probable result would have been, if this bill had been in effect, to prevent any uniform practice at all, notwithstanding the fact that the Federal Government was the sole operator of the railroads and as such conducting the intrastate operations as well as the interstate operations.

At the present time the Railroad Administration is proceeding with an important measure to secure the heavier loading of cars with grain and grain products so as to meet more fully the urgent need for a greater transportation of those commodities. If it should be necessary to obtain the independent judgment of each State tribunal, the delay would probably be so great as to defeat the purpose of the plan.

The matters I have mentioned are illustrative of pressing practical emergencies which must be dealt with promptly if they are to be dealt with effectively, and while the Federal Government alone is responsible for railroad operation it ought to have within itself the power to deal with these problems. The practice of the Railroad Administration to secure the advice of the Interstate Commerce Commission upon matters of importance reasonably insures an adequate representation of the public interest and avoids the divided action and inevitable delay which would result if each State authority should have exclusive and final power as to regulation of all matters of intrastate traffic within its borders.

Beyond these pressing practical exigencies I feel that it is a far sounder general principle to vest in the Federal Government the power to raise the revenue to operate the railroads when the Federal Government alone is responsible for paying the bills for their operation.

In a country of such great extent it is undoubtedly desirable to get the fullest practicable benefit of local advice upon local matters, and this is equally as much to be desired in respect of local interstate rates and practices in a given portion of the country as in respect of intrastate rates and practices covering a similar extent in the same locality. It is the policy and practice of the Railroad Administration, which I heartily indorse, to secure, as far as practicable, the full benefit of the suggestions of the State authorities, both as to intrastate rates and as to local interstate rate, but in the last analysis, while the Federal Government is solely responsible, it seems to me that entirely independent and final power as to a large proportion of these vital matters should not be transferred to the respective States.

The broad question of general principle which I have just discussed might perhaps be waived in view of the short duration of Federal control, but the practical emergencies to which I have first referred are matters with which the Federal Government must deal day by day in the discharge of its responsibility, and I do not think its ability to deal with them promptly and conclusively should be impaired even during a brief period of Federal control.

The leading principle of this bill, which is to give the Interstate Commerce Commission power, pending its decision thereon, to suspend rates, practices, etc., initiated by the President, is entirely acceptable to me, although if in the future the bill should be recast I should hope to see some modification in detail which would avoid attaching a presumption of unreasonableness (as this bill appears to do) to changes so initiated in rates, practices, etc. I should also hope to see another modification which would avoid any possibility of bringing in question the validity of orders which already have been made by the Railroad Administration in the discharge of its responsibilities.

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE,
18 November, 1919.

Mr. CUMMINS. I ask that the message may lie on the table and be printed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. JONES of Washington presented a petition, signed by 1,818 Minute Men, of Seattle, Wash., praying for the deportation of certain aliens, which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

He also presented petitions and telegrams in the nature of petitions from sundry citizens of Tacoma, Northbend, Chehalis, Bellingham, and Tonasket, all in the State of Washington, praying for the enactment of legislation providing punishment for persons who advocate the overthrow of the Government and stir up strife and labor strikes, and praying for the deportation of those aliens who hold such principles, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. HALE presented a memorial of the Central Labor Union, of Rumford, Me., remonstrating against the passage of the so-called Cummins bill providing for private ownership of railroads, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. COLT presented a petition of sundry World War veterans and citizens of the State of Rhode Island, praying for the enactment of legislation granting an additional bonus to discharged soldiers and sailors, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. ELKINS presented a memorial of Local Division No. 190, Brotherhood of Railway Conductors, of Grafton, W. Va., remonstrating against the passage of the so-called Cummins bill providing for private ownership of railroads, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. SMOOT presented a petition of Robert E. Lee Chapter No. 737, United Daughters of the Confederacy of the State of Utah, praying for the ratification of the proposed league of nations treaty, which was ordered to lie on the table.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. STERLING, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, to which was referred the bill (S. 848) to reimburse Isaiah Stephens, postmaster at McMechen, Marshall County, W. Va., for money and postage stamps stolen, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 307) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (S. 849) to reimburse S. S. Buzzerd, postmaster at Berkeley Springs, Morgan County, W. Va., for cash stolen, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 308) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (S. 1739) for the relief of Joel J. Booth, submitted an adverse report (No. 309) thereon, which was agreed to, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. CALDER, from the Committee on Commerce, to which was referred the bill (S. 3418) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the lading or unlading of vessels at night, the preliminary entry of vessels, and for other purposes," approved February 13, 1911, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 306) thereon.

EMPLOYMENT OF ASSISTANT CLERK.

Mr. CALDER, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to which was referred Senate resolution 225, submitted by Mr. LODGE on the 10th instant, reported it favorably without amendment, and it was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the resolution of the Senate No. 49, agreed to on June 6, 1919, authorizing the Committee on Foreign Relations to employ an assistant clerk, to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate, during the present session of Congress be, and the same hereby is, extended and continued in full force and effect during the remainder of the present Congress.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED.

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. THOMAS:

A bill (S. 3450) to provide for the organization and training of a railroad army reserve force, to aid in the operation of the railroads of the United States in time of emergency, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. JONES of Washington:

A bill (S. 3451) authorizing the United States Shipping Board to adjust the equitable claims of wooden-ship builders arising out of the prosecution of the war; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. NEWBERRY:

A bill (S. 3452) granting the consent of Congress to the city of Detroit, Mich., a municipal corporation, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the American channel of the Detroit River to Belle Isle; to the Committee on Commerce; and (By request.) A bill (S. 3453) to punish violation of the eighteenth amendment to the Constitution by American citizens in certain foreign countries; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

By Mr. WATSON:

A bill (S. 3454) granting an increase of pension to Frank Pender (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. OWEN:

A bill (S. 3455) conferring jurisdiction on the Court of Claims for adjudging the rights of the Otoe and Missouria Tribes of Indians for compensation on a basis of guardian and ward, and conferring jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to adjust the claims between the Otoe and Missouria Tribes of Indians and the Omaha Indians to certain moneys received by the Omaha Indians; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. ELKINS:

A bill (S. 3456) granting an increase of pension to Jess Musgrave; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. McLEAN:

A bill (S. 3457) to amend section 165 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, act of July 12, 1870; to the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment.

By Mr. FLETCHER:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 127) to authorize the Secretary of War to permit the temporary use and occupancy of Camp Johnston at Jacksonville, Fla., or any portion thereof by the University of the South, of Sewanee, Tenn.; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

SENATE PAGES.

Mr. CALDER submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 234), which was read and referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the 21 pages for the Senate Chamber now in the employ of the Senate be retained and continued as such pages aforesaid from the day after the adjournment of the present session of the Congress to the 30th day of November, 1919, at the rate of $3 per day each, to be paid from the miscellaneous items of the contingent fund of the Senate.

Mr. CALDER subsequently, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to which was referred the foregoing resolution, reported it favorably without amendment, and it was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

WAR CLAIMS AND CONTRACTS.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I present a letter from Hon. C. F. Kelley, of Montana, president of the Anaconda Copper Mining Co., written in reply to some charges made against copper companies with which he is connected and against other copper companies, growing out of transactions with the Government during the war, made in a report of a subcommittee of the House of Representatives on the expenditures of the War Department. The report of that subcommittee was given publicity through the House, and I ask that Mr. Kelley's letter may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NOVEMBER 15, 1919.

Senator HENRY L. MYERS,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR MYERS: On November 11, 1919, Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois, from the Select Committee on Expenditures in the War Department, submitted a report, designated as Report No. 463, to which I wish to invite your attention in connection with some of the statements made therein. The report says:

"The subcommittee, among other matters, has investigated the following settlements of war claims and contracts, to wit."

Here follows a list of contracts, together with the names of the corporations with whom they were made, concluding with "The United Metals Selling Co.'s contract for copper."

The next paragraph contains the following:

"In the last case cited, that of the United Metals Selling Co., immense profits were made by the producers of copper by virtue of a combination of the low-priced copper producers, which combination was aided and encouraged by the Government, although in violation of the law of the land."

"In some of the cases cited the committee is of the opinion that constructive if not actual fraud occurred, vitiating the settlements. The committee is of the opinion that millions of dollars are involved in these settlements which the Government might have a right to recover if a proper review of such settlements were made."

The foregoing, whether intentional or not, is an incorrect statement regarding the position of the copper producers, and particularly of the United Metals Selling Co., which is a subsidiary company of the Anaconda Copper Mining Co.

In the statement quoted two alleged facts are apparently complained of: First, that immense profits were made by copper producers; and, second, that such profits resulted from a combination of low-priced producers, which combination was, although illegal, aided and encouraged by the Government.

In view of the apparent criticism contained in the foregoing statements, and the impression which it is intended shall be created therefrom, I desire, on behalf of the Anaconda Copper Mining Co. and the United Metals Selling Co., to protest vigorously against the above statements contained in the report.

First, as to immense profits:

Following the outbreak of the European war in 1914 a period of almost complete suspension of business followed in the American copper industry, due to the immediate interruption of exports, which constituted at the time nearly 60 per cent of the entire volume of business. Such production as was made during the balance of the year was without profit, the price dropping to approximately 11 cents per pound.

Early in 1915 the war demand began to be felt, and from that time on to the time of the entry of the United States into the war, both price and production steadily increased, the average price for 1916 being 27.2 cents per pound. At the close of 1916 the price had advanced above 30 cents per pound, and contracts for delivery during the first quarter of 1917 were being made, covering the entire production, at from 31 to 33 cents per pound.

About this time the United States Government wished to purchase a large amount of copper in connection with the preparedness program which had been decided upon. The newly organized Advisory Council of Defense took up the matter of this purchase with the copper producers, with the result that with practical unanimity it was agreed to furnish the copper required at the price of 16¾ cents per pound, which represented the average price of copper over a period of 10 years.

This action marked the first step of cooperative effort between the Government and the American industry that was one of the striking accomplishments of the war. The copper producers were widely commended for the action they had taken, and from thence to the conclusion of the war they cooperated 100 per cent with the Government.

Shortly after our entry into the war it became known that the Government contemplated adopting the policy of price fixing and that copper would probably be one of the first commodities considered. Moreover, it became known that, inasmuch as practically the entire output of copper was required for munition purposes, the Government intended to fix the price, not only for itself but for the allied Governments and all other consumers as well, taking charge of the entire production and making such allocation thereof as it saw fit to do. The result was that buying in quantity ceased and the price declined to the low level of twenty-six and a fraction cents per pound immediately preceding the fixing of the price, in September, 1917. The price fixed was 23½ cents per pound, accompanied by the condition that wages, which throughout the copper industry were generally based upon a sliding scale, should not be reduced. The net result to the producers was a cut from existing price of between 4 and 5 cents per pound.

Had it not been for the knowledge that the Government intended to fix the price it is unquestionably true that copper would have sold throughout 1917 and 1918 to the conclusion of hostilities at a price above that which prevailed at the end of 1916, so that in so far from being benefited by the policy of price fixing, the enormous decrease in profit which it meant to the copper producers is at one apparent.

The price remained at 23½ cents per pound, notwithstanding the enormous increase in the cost of production, which was steadily growing, until July, 1918, when the price was advanced to 26 cents per pound. This advance was not made until after the order had been made by the Railroad Administration increasing freight rates. While the general advance in this respect was about 25 per cent, the advance on all copper coming from the Rocky Mountain region, and which constitutes the great bulk of the copper production of the United States, was from 60 to 80 per cent. At the same time there occurred a further advance in wages, made necessary by the increases which were being paid largely in essential industries conducted by the Government, so that the 2½ cents advance was scarcely sufficient to meet the advance in the items of freight and wages alone, leaving nothing to cover the advanced cost of all other supplies, materials, and factors of expense which enter into copper production. The price of 26 cents per pound remained, then, the fixed price to the close of the war.

Following the assumption of control over the business the Government refused to enter into contracts for large amounts of copper, while it, at the same time, was insistent upon the maximum production being maintained. The result was that at the conclusion of hostilities the copper companies were carrying, in various stages of manufacture from ore to finished copper, a surplus in excess of what would be carried under normal business conditions, of approximately 500,000,000 pounds. The production had reached a rate of approximately 225,000,000 pounds per month, against which, on the date of the armistice, the industry held orders from the United States Government for less than 50,000,000 pounds. What happened is a matter of common knowledge. A complete suspension of business followed, with practically no copper being sold until March of 1919, since which date there has been a fair domestic demand, but practically no export trade. Any temporary advantage obtained through high prices during the war has been more than offset by the staggering load under which the copper industry has been placed as the necessary result of the situation created by the war.

From the foregoing it will be discerned how utterly without foundation is the charge of immense profiteering by the copper industry.

Second, as to the charge of unlawful combination, aided and abetted by the Government:

When, as above narrated, the Government took practically the entire charge of the industry it found that through the selling agencies which existed there had been developed a highly organized method for the distribution of the production. Acting under the directions of the War Industries Board, the selling agencies, which represented all of the American producers, were combined into a committee. This committee functioned throughout the war practically as a governmental agency, inasmuch as all production was held to the order of the United States Government, which became, in fact, the sole buyer, it in turn allocating to the Allied Governments and essential industries their respective proportions of the production. There could be no possible objection, from a legal or a business standpoint, to this arrangement, while, on the other hand, there were many points of advantage in it to the Government.

Under the arrangement which was perfected, the United Metals Selling Co. became the agency through which the entire domestic consumption was distributed. The American Smelting & Refining Co.'s agency was selected to handle the export business in a similar manner. In undertaking this duty the United Metals Selling Co. acted under the direction of the War Industries Board. It had no other interest in the matter than that of cooperating between the Government and the various copper producers, and while the domestic business was done practically entirely in its name, it acted in this respect for all American producers, receiving absolutely no compensation for its services, and making no profit of any kind whatsoever out of the transaction, save as it collected from its regular customers the usual prewar selling commission which had been fixed by contracts, all of which antedated the war period, and none of which had anything to do with the duties which it performed in connection with the matters which are herein stated.

Under the foregoing circumstances I protest most vigorously against the statements made in the report to which I have referred, as casting an unwarranted and unjustified reflection, first, upon the entire copper industry, which perhaps sacrificed more of material advantage incidental to the furnishing of its total product for the purposes of our Government and its allies in the war than any other industry; and second, for having the charge of unlawful action made against what was an unselfish and patriotic service rendered at the instance of those who were endeavoring to bring about cooperative effort between American industry and the Government, which was so vitally essential and which contributed so largely to the results which were accomplished.

Very truly, yours, C. F. KELLEY.

LEAGUE OF NATIONS.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I ask to have inserted in the RECORD an article from the Australian Worker.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Australian Worker, Sept. 25, 1919.]

HUGHES AND THE BIG BETRAYAL.

No one desires to rob Mr. Hughes of the eclat with which he is being regaled. He revels in it, and there are those in the community who must periodically get this sort of thing off their chest.

But there are others to whom these effervescent splashes make no appeal, and it is with these that Mr. Hughes will yet have to reckon.

His capers in Europe have not gone unnoticed, and whatever he may declaim to-day as being "a socialist," or even democrat, his present boastings will weigh but little in view of his continental defections.

Nor will people fail to remember the class of papers that have boosted him, the worse than Tory company he has kept, and the species of femininity which, deploring England's dearth of "great" men, frantically urged his speedy return.

Mr. Hughes will be judged by many, even by the fight he put up for grabbing the islands as a renegade to democracy.

One important point in this betrayal is called to mind by his speech before Parliament on the peace terms and league of nations.

"I have always held, he said, "that the acceptance of the 14 points was an error, because they did not guarantee to Australia her rights."

This quotation immediately discloses Mr. Hughes's attitude of mind and his standing from the democratic viewpoint; whilst incidentally it raises the question: What "rights" as pertaining to the Australian people did the acceptance of Wilson's points imperil?

But there is a precedent and more important question which Mr. Hughes does not raise, viz: Were Wilson's points in themselves democratic, and as such were they right and just and fair? If not, why were they "accepted"?

But Mr. Hughes's "indicated" error proves to be a subterfuge. Those 14 points were never accepted, in the sense of being honored. How, then, could Australia be damaged?

It is true the Allies at the armistice gave an undertaking that those points should form the basis of a peace settlement. But one by one those points were jettisoned, until every one had gone by the board. Against this deliberate and wicked breach of a democratic covenant Mr. Hughes uttered no word of protest. The moral scandal involved made no appeal to his ethical sense.

The points treacherously violated included: No annexations; no punitive indemnities; no secret treaties; no economic barriers; evacuation of all Russia; freedom of the seas; integrity and independence of small nations; and the reduction of armaments to the lowest point.

Every one of these were ruthlessly sacrificed. Yet at this time of day Mr. Hughes comes along and says the "acceptance" of these points was an "error," and one jeopardizing Australian rights. Who is the prime minister seeking to fool?

The abandonment of these points, after being solemnly subscribed to by the nations constituting the peace conference, was an immorality only second to that of the war itself.

It is this one damning fact which has sent Woodrow Wilson home a despised, dejected, and defeated man. The diplomatic tricksters were too much for him. They euchred him at every point, and for a mess of miserable pottage they sold the oppressed democracies of Europe.

Never had statesman such a chance of remaking this Old World as had Wilson. Never did man go to a conference equipped with a grander program.

Every trump card was his. Ships were at his disposal. The remaining money in the world was in his hands, as also the food supplies with which to enforce his demands. Yet he failed! And why? Because, when he discovered that the diplomatic plunderers at the conference had no intention of honoring their solemn vows regarding his points he did not summarily leave the table and walk out.

Instead he side-stepped on his first point—no annexations—and, that surrendered, the rest of the base betrayal became easy.

And it was to this betrayal of the peoples, and this trifling with the world's peace, that Mr. Hughes became not only a consenting but a clamorous party.

And yet he talks about the "acceptance" of the 14 points as an "error" imperiling Australian "rights." What jugglery! What hypocrisy! What cant!

And it is this treachery which has made the peace treaty the laughing-stock of the world, carrying within it more perilous possibilities than ever the war itself created. But Mr. Hughes goes further and threatens betrayal of even the league of nations itself, of which he was a signatory. Listen: "It is well to make it clear at the outset that Australia will not regard anything relating to the Pacific as proper for submission to the decision of the international tribunal." And this traitorous and deliberate flouting of the league was "cheered" by the House. President Wilson, speaking for the league only a few weeks ago, said: "The Pacific islands are not given to Australia. She holds them in trust for the league of nations, and every 12 months must render an account of her trusteeship, and if not satisfactory other arrangements will be made."

But Mr. Hughes defies this dictum, and no "decision" of any "international tribunal" will weigh with him. We have in Mr. Hughes's filibustering attitude a positive peril, and if permitted will render any leagues of nations impossible, so far as we are concerned.

A. RIVETT.

INTERNATIONAL LAW AND THE TREATY OF PEACE.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I ask to have printed as a public document a comparative analysis of the covenant and treaty at Versailles of June 28, 1919, with the articles of the settlement and the applicable principles of the law of nations set out in parallel columns. The analysis is by Sterling E. Edmunds, R. L. D., lecturer on international law, St. Louis University Law School and former assistant in the Department of State. It is a very valuable article and I think will be of great service to Senators.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

LANDING OF THE PILGRIMS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives, which was read:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the time within which the Joint Special Committee on the Pilgrim Tercentenary shall report is hereby further extended to January 10, 1920.

Mr. HARDING. I move that the Senate concur in the resolution of the House.

The resolution was agreed to.

CHINCOTEAGUE ISLAND (VA.) BRIDGES.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2961) authorizing the county of Accomac, Va., to construct certain bridges to connect Chincoteague Island and the mainland, which were, on page 1, line 3, to strike out "county of Accomac, in the State of Virginia," and insert: "Chincoteague Toll Road & Bridge Co. (Inc.), a corporation created by and existing under the laws of the Commonwealth of Virginia"; and to amend the title so as to read: "An act authorizing the Chincoteague Toll Road & Bridge Co. (Inc.), a corporation created by and existing under the laws of the Commonwealth of Virginia, to construct certain bridges to connect Chincoteague Island and the mainland."

Mr. SWANSON. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

METROPOLITAN POLICE—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. SHERMAN submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to H. R. 9821, "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act relating to the Metropolitan police of the District of Columbia,' approved February 28, 1901, and for other purposes," having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"That paragraphs 2, 8, and 9 of section 1, of the act entitled 'An act relating to the Metropolitan police of the District of Columbia,' approved February 28, 1901, as amended by the act approved June 8, 1906, entitled 'An act to amend section 1 of an act entitled "An act relating to the Metropolitan police of the District of Columbia," approved February 28, 1901,' are hereby amended to read as follows:

"'PAR. 2. The commissioners of said District shall appoint to office, assign to such duty or duties as they may prescribe, and promote all officers and members of said Metropolitan police force: Provided, That all officers, members, and civilian employees of the force, except the major and superintendent, the assistant superintendents, and the inspectors, shall hereafter be appointed and promoted in accordance with the provisions of an act entitled "An act to regulate and improve the civil service of the United States," approved January 16, 1883, as amended, and the rules and regulations made in pursuance thereof, in the same manner as members of the classified civil service of the United States: Provided further, That hereafter the assistant superintendents and inspectors shall be selected from among the captains of the force and shall be returned to the rank of captain when the commissioners so determine: Provided further, That privates of class 1, if found efficient, shall serve one year on probation, privates of class 2 shall serve two years subsequent to service in class 1, and privates of class 3 shall include all those privates who have served efficiently three or more years.'

"'PAR. 8. That the annual basic salaries of the officers and members of the Metropolitan police of the District of Columbia shall be as follows: Major and superintendent, $4,500; assistant superintendents, $3,000 each; inspectors, $2,400 each; police surgeons, $1,600 each; captains, $2,400 each; lieutenants, $2,000 each; sergeants, $1,800 each; privates of class 3, $1,660 each; privates of class 2, $1,560 each; privates of class 1, $1,460 each. Members of said police force who may be mounted on horses, furnished and maintained by themselves, shall each receive an extra compensation of $540 per annum; and members of the said force who may be mounted on motor vehicles, furnished and maintained by themselves, shall each receive an extra compensation of $480 per annum; and members of the said force who may be mounted on bicycles shall each receive an extra compensation of $70 per annum: Provided, That patrol drivers of the Metropolitan police are hereby declared to be members of the Metropolitan police of the District of Columbia, but shall not be rated above class 2 privates, and those patrol drivers who have been appointed since April 6, 1917, shall be required to pass the usual physical and other tests required for members of the regular force: Provided further, That every officer or member of the Metropolitan police at the time this act becomes law shall, in addition to the salary received by him for his period of service between August 1, 1919, and the time this act becomes law, receive for such period the difference between such salary and the salary payable to him under the provisions of this act, for a period of equal duration.

"'PAR. 9. No member of the Metropolitan police of the District of Columbia shall be or become a member of any organization, or of an organization affiliated with another organization, which itself, or any subordinate, component, or affiliated organization of which holds, claims, or uses the strike to enforce its demands. Upon sufficient proof to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia that any member of the Metropolitan police of the District of Columbia has violated the provisions of this section, it shall be the duty of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to immediately discharge such member from the service.

"'Any member of the Metropolitan police who enters into a conspiracy, combination, or agreement with the purpose of substantially interfering with or obstructing the efficient conduct or operation of the police force in the District of Columbia by a strike or other disturbance shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof, shall be punished by a fine of not more than $300 or by imprisonment of not more than six months or by both.

"'No officer or member of the said police force, under penalty of forfeiting the salary or pay which may be due him, shall withdraw or resign, except by permission of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, unless he shall have given the major and superintendent one month's notice in writing of such intention.'

"SEC. 2. That one-half of the amount necessary to provide for the increased salaries and compensation of the Metropolitan police authorized in this act is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and the other one-half out of the revenues of the District of Columbia, to supplement the amounts appropriated for the members and employees of the Metropolitan police mentioned in the act entitled 'An act making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the Government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes,' approved July 11, 1919.

"SEC. 3. That the watchmen provided by the United States Government for service in any of the public squares and reservations in the District of Columbia shall hereafter be known as the 'United States park police,' and their annual basic salaries shall be as follows: Lieutenant, $1,900; first sergeant, $1,700; sergeants, $1,580; privates, $1,360: Provided, That every watchman employed for such service at the time this act becomes law shall, in addition to the salary received by him for the period of service between August 1, 1919, and the time this act becomes law, receive for such period the difference between such salary and the salary payable to him under the provisions of this section for a period of equal duration.

"SEC. 4. That to provide for the increased salaries and compensation of the United States park police, so much as is necessary is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to supplement the amounts appropriated for park watchmen mentioned in the act entitled 'An act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes,' approved March 1, 1919."

And the Senate agree to the same.

LAWRENCE Y. SHERMAN,
WILLIAM M. CALDER,
MORRIS SHEPPARD,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
CARL E. MAPES,
N. J. GOULD,
JAS. P. WOODS,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was agreed to.

FINAL ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate adjourn sine die.

Mr. McCUMBER. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary called the roll.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I have been requested to announce that the Senator from Ohio [Mr. HARDING] is paired with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD].

The result was announced—yeas 47, nays 27, as follows:

YEAS—47.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, November 19, 1919.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou who hast ever been our dwelling place and upon whom our fathers relied through all the exigencies of life for strength and guidance and were not disappointed, turn not Thou away from us, for without Thee we are nothing. With Thee we are all things, for if Thou art with us who can be against us. Strengthen therefore our arm of faith that we may cling to Thee and be guided day by day unto the larger, grander, nobler life; and hasten the day, we beseech Thee, when the hearts of all men shall be inspired with pure and undefiled religion; that Thy kingdom may indeed come and Thy will be done, in the name and spirit of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Dudley, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution:

Senate resolution 231.

Resolved, That the consent of the Senate is hereby given to an adjournment sine die of the House of Representatives at any time prior to December 1, when the House shall so determine.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment H. J. Res. 249, to continue the control of imports of dyes and coal-tar products.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. RAMSEY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled joint resolution of the following title, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. J. Res. 249. Joint resolution to continue the control of imports of dyes and coal-tar products.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bills of the following titles:

S. 3319. An act to provide for the reimbursement of the United States for motive power, cars, and other equipment ordered for railroads and systems of transportation under Federal control, and for other purposes; and

S. 3332. An act authorizing the board of county commissioners of the county of Hartford, in the State of Connecticut, to construct a bridge across the Connecticut River between Windsor Locks and East Windsor, at Warehouse Point, in said county and State.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. RAMSEY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States for his approval the following joint resolution:

H. J. Res. 249. Joint resolution to continue the control of imports of dyes and coal-tar products.

PROPOSED FINAL ADJOURNMENT OF THE SENATE.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I offer a privileged resolution, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the consent of the House of Representatives is hereby given to an adjournment sine die of the Senate at any time prior to December 1, when the Senate shall so determine.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, Jeremiahs have their place in the divine scheme of things. It required a Jeremiah to round out Holy Writ, and the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO] frequently appears as the Jeremiah of the House, as he has to-day. I shall place a statement in to-day's RECORD which sets out briefly the very numerous splendid accomplishments of this session of Congress, and which proves conclusively that not only have we saved the Nation a very great deal in the matter of expenditures but that we have concluded, so far as the House is concerned, the entire constructive program that we outlined at the beginning of the session. So much for that.

So far as the House is concerned, all has been accomplished that can be accomplished, in view of the situation in the other body of Congress, and as the Senate has given its consent to the adjournment of the House, I think there will be no objection to the House giving its consent to the Senate. I ask for a vote.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I yield to the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. WINGO. Only for the purpose of suggesting that I not only recognize that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] is an expert on demagogy, but I also recognize my friend from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] is very familiar with the lamentations of Jeremiah.

Mr. MONDELL. I have been hearing some of them.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. I asked time only for this purpose: In view of the fact that I have been classed as a wavering Democrat who voted for the railroad bill for fear that the people might say something, I would like to have the RECORD show that I did not sit entirely silent at the time, without protesting. I voted for the bill, but I did not vote for it out of any fear whatever.

Mr. WINGO. Did my friend vote for it with hilarity?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. I voted for it absolutely without trepidation. [Laughter.]

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I would like to get unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on some of the proposed unfinished legislation.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman suspend? There are several other such requests to be made later and the Chair will then recognize the gentleman. The question is on agreeing to the resolution?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield for an inquiry?

Mr. MONDELL. I will.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I believe the rule is that where the Congress adjourns sine die the President can not then sign any bill which was passed and sent to him for signature. What will be the effect if the House adjourns sine die, not an adjournment of Congress, but an adjournment of the House sine die on one day, and the Senate adjourns sine die on the next day or some other day? We passed a bill yesterday which I suppose the Senate passed yesterday also. I do not know whether it has yet been passed upon by the committee which sends it to the President, and I do not know what the intention is as to when the House shall adjourn. But I should advise the distinguished leader from Wyoming to consider what would be the effect upon that and other measures which have been passed at this session of Congress if both the House and Senate adjourns before he signs the measure or vetoes it. If the House passes a bill and the Senate passes it at this session, and it is not sent to the President, it can be sent to him at the next session of Congress; but under the practice which has always prevailed, and I presume that is undoubtedly constitutional law, if both Houses pass a bill which is sent to the President and they adjourn before the President signs the bill the bill is dead. It is too late to sign it, it is too late to veto it. It has to start ab initio at the next session if such legislation is enacted.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, it is not my purpose to immediately make a motion to adjourn. I have had in mind what the gentleman has just referred to, and I shall ask that the House stand in recess for a short time in order that the matters to which he refers may be attended to.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Will the gentleman from Wyoming yield?

Mr. MONDELL. In just a moment. But with the passage of the resolution by the Senate giving consent to the adjournment of the House and the passage by the House of the resolution which is now under consideration, the House can adjourn at any time when the bills that have passed are signed and Members will understand that they are at liberty to go home. I think it would be necessary to have definite action upon the measure to which the gentleman from Illinois has referred and on the dyestuff resolution. I now yield to the gentleman from Colorado.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Has it not always been the custom of both the Senate and the House during all the history of Congress that before an adjournment sine die is taken that a committee is appointed to notify the President that we are about to adjourn and to inquire if he has any communication to make? And I want to ask the majority leader, Has the House appointed such a committee at this time; and if not, why not?

Mr. MONDELL. The House has not adjourned as yet, and such notice can be sent to the President at any time.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Why do we not adjourn in the regular, orderly, legislative way and close up the session in the usual courteous manner? Why should the majority in this House now, for the first time, neglect or overlook or fail to conform to the regular custom that has prevailed in this body for over 100 years?

Mr. MONDELL. No motion has been made to adjourn and no motion will be made to adjourn immediately, but with the passage of the resolution by both Houses we are in a position to adjourn when the business of the Congress is in such condition that we can properly adjourn——

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MONDELL. And I trust we will reach that condition this afternoon. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BLANTON. Has not the President of the United States, through the daily press, recommended that Congress adjourn and go home——

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. And live with the people a while for the good of the country?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes; and the administration leader in the Senate reiterated that yesterday.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I suggest the custom to which the gentleman from Colorado has called the attention of the House has been when both Houses adjourned at the same time. Since I have been here I do not recall a case just exactly like this, where one House adjourned before the other, but constitutionally they could do it.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. The principle of properly notifying the President before an adjournment is the same, no matter whether one House adjourns to-day and the other adjourns to-morrow, or both at the same time.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I shall not make a motion to adjourn immediately. There are several things to be done before we can adjourn. I understand several gentlemen would like to address the House for a very few moments, and in the meantime I think we can learn as to what the situation is with regard to the bills to which reference has been made. My purpose is—my desire is, at least—that there shall be no further business transacted and that the motion to adjourn will be made just as soon as the business which has been passed upon by the Congress is in condition that it will be proper for the House to adjourn.

Mr. LONGWORTH. If I understand the gentleman correctly, the gentleman under no circumstances would make a motion to adjourn until notified that action has been taken upon the two bills?

Mr. MONDELL. I do not think it would be wise. I do not think we would be justified in doing that. But I do desire to have the business of the House in such condition that Members will understand there is no further business to be transacted except the formal motion to adjourn.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Why not, then, dispose of the little resolution that the gentleman from Massachusetts has, and vote on this Senate resolution, and ask unanimous consent that the House stand in recess until 4 or 5 o'clock or whenever you want it, and announce at the same time that at that hour you are going to make a motion to adjourn?

Mr. MONDELL. I think that is a very good suggestion. However, there are one or two gentlemen who desire to speak briefly before I make that request.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I have no earthly objection to that, but those who want to go home want to know whether or not you are going on.

Mr. MONDELL. It is clearly understood that all that will happen hereafter, except some very interesting brief remarks that may be made by gentlemen on either side, will be a motion to adjourn and the resolution which the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] desires to offer, to which I think there will be no objection.

Mr. KITCHIN. I would suggest to the gentleman that there is something, even as a matter of courtesy, in the proposition that we should make a regular motion and appoint a committee to wait upon the President and notify him that we are about to adjourn. That is simply a formal matter.

Mr. MONDELL. It is proper in some cases to appoint a committee and in some cases to notify the President through the Clerk's office. In this case I shall ask for the appointment of a committee.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Inasmuch as the motion to adjourn which the genteman will make later is not debatable, I would like to ask him a question now. In the event the Senate will not have acted upon the treaty before the House adjourns, what business, in the gentleman's opinion, might arise which would require action by the House?

Mr. MONDELL. I have talked with gentlemen on both sides of the Senate, and while they are not particularly communicative with regard to all of their views on the situation, all of them, so far as I have talked with them, seem agreed that, in their opinion, no condition can arise that would necessitate the presence of the House here before the beginning of the regular session in connection with the treaty or any matter relating thereto.

Mr. LONGWORTH. And that would apply, whether the treaty was passed or whether it was not passed?

Mr. MONDELL. It would.

Mr. LONGWORTH. In other words, the gentleman thinks from the conversation that he has had with Members of another body that no trouble could arise from the House adjourning, even if the treaty was not acted on by the Senate?

Mr. MONDELL. That is my understanding. I think that is the view of the gentlemen on the other side.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Is the gentleman advised whether in the Senate it is proposed to transact any other business from now on to the end of the session except the treaty?

Mr. MONDELL. It is my information that the leaders over there do not intend to have other business transacted than that connected with the treaty.

Mr. DUNBAR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I will.

Mr. DUNBAR. Is it the gentleman's intention to introduce a motion to-day that we adjourn?

Mr. MONDELL. It is my purpose to make the motion to adjourn just as soon as a committee can visit the White House and be informed with regard to the Executive action on the two bills that have been referred to.

Mr. DUNBAR. Then the matter of making a motion to adjourn may be deferred for several days?

Mr. MONDELL. No; I think not. I hope it will not be deferred later than this afternoon.

Mr. GARRETT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I yield.

Mr. GARRETT. I wish to suggest this for the consideration of the gentleman. The question raised by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is a very interesting and very important one, and that is as to the legal situation that would arise with reference to any bills which might be in the hands of the President and unsigned. Now, personally, I do not know whether there are such. But it seems to me that in order to avoid any difficulty of that kind it would be well to have a formal notification to the President, either by a committee in the usual way—and I take it, it would be impossible for the committee to reach him in the usual way on account of his physical condition—but in some way a formal notice should be given to the President so that he may advise the House whether he has any measures that he desires further to have considered, and thereby an agreement could be reached in a way that would be satisfactory to all.

Mr. MONDELL. I agree with the gentleman.

Mr. GARRETT. I do not remember the exact wording of the Constitution, but I think that portion is "unless Congress by their adjournment prevent."

That is in connection with the signing of bills, and I would think, offhand, that an adjournment sine die of one House would be an adjournment of a part of the Congress, and that the full Congress would not be in session in a constitutional sense.

Mr. DENISON. The provision of the Constitution, "unless the Congress by their adjournment prevent its return," means, I think, unless either branch of Congress adjourns, because the effect would be the same. If either branch of the Congress adjourns before the President does act upon a bill, it is killed.

Mr. GARRETT. And the gentleman is of the opinion that the adjournment of one House sine die would have manifestly the same effect? Doubtless that is true. Suppose he should veto some bill which originated in the House, the House would have no way to reconsider it?

Mr. DENISON. I think that is right.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

PILGRIM TERCENTENARY.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of a concurrent resolution, which I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

House concurrent resolution 38.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the time within which the Joint Special Committee on the Pilgrim Tercentenary shall report is hereby further extended to January 10, 1920.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one minute.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to proceed for one minute. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WALSH. The purpose of this resolution, Mr. Speaker, is to extend the time in which a joint special committee, which had previously been appointed to consider what steps the Federal Government shall take to participate in the celebration of the three hundredth anniversary of the landing of the Pilgrims at Plymouth, shall report. Because of the important business before the Senate in the past month the Members of that branch have been unable to participate in the consideration of this measure. I hope if this extension is granted that a report will be made long before the time fixed in the resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the resolution?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I would like to renew my request made a few moments ago.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Are they to be on any particular subject?

Mr. BANKHEAD. On some unfinished pending legislation.

The SPEAKER. His remarks on unfinished pending legislation. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request, except that my subject is the reorganization of the foreign service of the United States.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks on the reorganization of the foreign service of the United States. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, on what subject?

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. The very interesting subject of farmers' bulletins and scientific farming, and things like that, generally. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

Mr. BLANTON. On what subject?

Mr. MORGAN. On the subject of providing homes for soldiers.

Mr. BLANTON. That is a discarded subject, is it not?

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. WALSH. Upon what subject—reserving the right to object?

Mr. RAKER. On the subject of undisposed-of legislation, such as soldiers' homesteads and rank for Army nurses.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, is the request of the gentleman in regard to undisposed-of legislation to include the legislation upon which the gentleman had one day in which to file a report?

Mr. RAKER. I had general permission, and the report has been filed. The business in committee has been such that I did not file it within the day, but it is filed now, and that is disposed of.

Mr. EVANS of Montana. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on the railroad bill.

The SPEAKER. Everybody had that permission.

Mr. BRIGGS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on the subject of neutral or free zones.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks on the subject of neutral or free zones. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

THE VETO OF THE PROHIBITION BILL.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes in which to make a statement, which I think is just to both sides of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, on Monday, October 27, the President sent to the House his message vetoing the law-enforcement prohibition bill. This was a surprise to every Member of the House. No one had anticipated such a message. It was about half past 4 o'clock when the House received it. Almost immediately afterwards I conferred with the Speaker, the majority leader [Mr. MONDELL], Mr. VOLSTEAD, the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary that reported the bill, who had charge of the bill, and Mr. Webb, the ranking Democrat on the Judiciary Committee. In that conference it was understood and agreed that inasmuch as the message had come in so suddenly and there were so many Members absent—the week's program contemplating no very important legislation—the proper and fair thing to do was to postpone consideration of the message until Thursday following, and to so notify absent Members. With that understanding Mr. Webb and myself left, going to our homes here in the city. This was a little after 5 o'clock, the usual time for adjournment.

The next morning, to my great surprise, I read in the newspapers that the House that evening had taken up the President's veto and voted to override it. The majority leader, as the RECORD shows, and the other gentlemen with whom I had the conference and understanding, tried to have consideration postponed until Thursday, but it seemed that the House stampeded for a vote then and there, and a vote was taken. Several Members, some on one side and some on the other, were absent. Let me say, too, that it has been the custom in the House to postpone consideration of an important veto message to a day certain, so that all Members will have notice when the vote on it will be taken. I thought I ought to make this statement in justice to so many Members who were not present at the time and who would have been anxious to vote on the question of overriding the President's veto had they known such would be presented, some for and some against it.

My attention was called a few days ago to a statement in a leading metropolitan paper that if the Democrats from New York and Boston had been present the President's veto would have been sustained. The fact is that if every Democrat from New York City, Brooklyn, Boston, Chicago, and Cleveland, and all the Democrats from New Jersey and Connecticut had been present and voted to sustain the President's veto the result would not have been changed. His veto would have been overridden by the constitutional two-thirds. [Applause.] The further fact is, if it had been continued until Thursday, as the Speaker and the majority leader [Mr. MONDELL], Mr. VOLSTEAD, and Mr. Webb thought, in fairness to all, it ought and could be, at the time I had this conference with them, and all Members had been present then, the result would not have been changed. The House would have overriden the President's veto. [Applause.] But a postponement until then would have given all Members an opportunity to express their views by a record vote.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman permit me to interject this into his remarks?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. SMALL. I would have been present and voted if I had supposed that the resolution or any other business would have come up that afternoon.

Mr. KITCHIN. If it had been known that that veto message was coming in practically every Member of the House would have been present and voted on it.

Mr. GALLAGHER. There was no announcement made here that any such agreement had been entered into.

Mr. KITCHIN. There was no agreement with the House. It was an agreement and understanding with the Speaker, with the majority leader, and with Mr. VOLSTEAD, chairman of the Judiciary Committee, and Mr. Webb, the ranking Democratic member of the committee. The House has always heretofore recognized such understandings and followed without question the suggestion of postponement of gentlemen holding such positions in the House.

Mr. GALLAGHER. But when the bill was passed it was generally understood that those engaged in the business were to have a year to get out of business, and that agreement was not kept, either.

Mr. KITCHIN. That was on the constitutional amendment and was incorporated in the amendment.

Mr. RUCKER. In connection with the statement the gentleman has made, I think it might be well to state this fact: The preliminary votes, the motion made by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VOLSTEAD] to postpone consideration till Thursday, and the motion to lay that on the table, and then finally to vote on the bill, were all taken at about the usual supper hour, or dinner hour as they call it here in Washington.

Mr. KITCHIN. The gentleman is correct; and after the usual adjourning hour.

Mr. RUCKER. And at an hour when no business is usually transacted.

Mr. KITCHIN. That is true.

Mr. WALSH. Is it the gentleman's contention that those gentlemen who were not present when the vote was taken were justified in being absent and would have been present if they had known the veto message was to come up?

Mr. KITCHIN. I think most of the Members who were absent were justified in being absent, in the belief that no important business would be taken up at that time. The program contemplated no legislation of nation-wide importance that week.

Mr. WALSH. But they would not have been justified in being absent if they had known the veto message was to be considered.

Mr. KITCHIN. I think on a question of such importance, if they had known it was coming up, they ought and would have postponed any other matter in order to be present and vote.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I am glad the gentleman from North Carolina has made the statement which he has made, because I arrived here a little too late to vote. I had been notified by telephone that an agreement had been reached to postpone action on the veto until the following Thursday.

Mr. McARTHUR. Mr. President, in view of the established precedent that has grown up here of the Congress indorsing the action of the Executive, the gentleman would not object, would he, to any gentleman presenting a resolution indorsing the President's action in writing the veto message?

Mr. KITCHIN. I would not have any objection to the gentleman presenting any resolution which he desired to present.

Mr. BLANTON. Does not the gentleman think that under the circumstances related by him we ought to give New Jersey back to our friends on the Republican side?

Mr. KITCHIN. No; I would not give it back to them. It seems we got so little out of the last election, let us keep what little we did get. [Laughter.]

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, as we are all confessing and avoiding——

Mr. KITCHIN. Oh, no.

Mr. SIMS. That is what I am doing.

Mr. KITCHIN. All right.

Mr. SIMS. I was in session with the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee until beyond its usual hour for adjournment. I think the committee was in session until about 5.30 or 6, and I did not know anything about the bill having been vetoed, or having come back to the House, or anything about it, and I went directly from the committee room home, and did not come by the Hall of the House. I think the House and the country know that I have done my share in securing all kinds of temperance legislation.

Mr. KITCHIN. Certainly.

Mr. SIMS. I had no responsibility whatever in connection with the action which was taken by the House without my knowledge.

Mr. KITCHIN. Let me repeat a statement I have made. It has been the custom heretofore, since I have been a Member, when a veto message has come in on an important bill to postpone action upon it to some future day certain, so that Members could be present and have an opportunity to vote on it. We have done that once or twice at this session.

Mr. RANDALL of California. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. I will yield.

Mr. RANDALL of California. I did not hear all of the gentleman's statement, and I do not know exactly what he is driving at. I do not understand the gentleman to mean that anybody who was here attending to business was responsible for those who were absent.

Mr. KITCHIN. No; I am just stating the facts of the situation as they were.

Mr. RANDALL of California. There is no reflection on the people from far-away States who stay here all the time because of the absence of those from New Jersey and elsewhere who are away?

Mr. KITCHIN. Oh, no. The gentlemen from far-away States perhaps "stay here all the time" because they can not make a week-end trip home—when no important legislation is pending—as can gentlemen living in New Jersey and other nearby States.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from North Carolina may have five minutes more in which to continue his explanation.

Mr. KITCHIN. The gentleman from North Carolina has made the statement he desired to make, but if any other gentlemen wish to make explanations I do not object to their doing so in my time.

Mr. YATES. Mr. Speaker, I simply desire to purge myself, and to say that I, too, was one of the victims of the circumstances which the gentleman from North Carolina has so clearly stated.

Mr. KITCHIN. There is no criticism of anybody. I am only stating the facts as they were in simple justice to those on both sides of the question who were absent on that Monday.

Mr. GALLAGHER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. KITCHIN. Is it an easy question? [Laughter.]

Mr. GALLAGHER. Yes. I would like to know if Members who voted against the dry bill will have an opportunity to get a drink between now and New Year's? [Laughter.]

Mr. KITCHIN. I should say that would depend on the forethought which they have exercised heretofore. [Laughter.]

Mr MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes; I yield the remainder of my time.

Mr. MONDELL. I am sure that nothing which has been stated by the gentleman from North Carolina requires indorsement or confirmation by me; but along the line of the statement that he just made, I think I ought to say that while at one time and another in my life I have been in stampedes, I never was, until the occasion that he refers to, run over by one.

Mr. KITCHIN. I saw that in the RECORD.

Mr. MONDELL. It was generally agreed and understood that we were not to act upon the President's veto message on the prohibition bill until Thursday morning after the Monday, two days later than the time when we received it; but while I think that was the general understanding among the Members of the House, the temper and disposition of the House suddenly changed in the matter, demanding immediate action.

Mr. WALSH. Even the gentleman who moved to postpone consideration of the veto message until Thursday attempted later to withdraw his motion, and then when he found he could not do it, recommended that his motion be voted down.

Mr. MONDELL. And more than that, he voted to table his own motion to postpone.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes; and then I am going to refuse to yield to anyone else.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Can not the gentleman put into the RECORD some sort of a statement that would get most of us who were here that day out of the trouble that we got into by being present and voting the way we did? [Laughter.]

Mr. KITCHIN. I will say that when I looked into the RECORD and saw that the gentleman was present, I was a little surprised. [Laughter.]

Mr. HASTINGS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. HASTINGS. With the gentleman's permission, I want to take a moment to tell the plain, unvarnished truth about the situation. [Applause.] I do not want any camouflage about it. This veto message came in here on Monday. A motion was made by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VOLSTEAD] to postpone action on it until the following Thursday. A vote was about to be had on that motion. It perhaps would have carried almost unanimously in the House. There was no opposition to the motion to postpone. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] moved to table the motion to postpone. While that was being considered and while the vote was being had it enabled those who were in favor of prohibition to confer with each other and with Mr. VOLSTEAD, and we concluded that if the vote was postponed until Thursday, it would enable the Members from New York and the Members from Philadelphia and the Members from New Jersey and near-by States who opposed prohibition to get back, but it would not enable the Members who favored prohibition, who were away in Oklahoma and Nebraska and the far Western States, to get back here. So we Members who were in favor of prohibition and opposed to the veto, knowing that the friends of prohibition could not get back and that the opposition Members could get back by Thursday, turned about face and reconsidered our intention to vote for postponing until Thursday, and then voted not to postpone, in order that we might take a vote on that day.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HASTINGS. I will, but I do not have the floor.

Mr. MONDELL. That is a truthful tale, as far as it goes. But how does the gentleman account for the fact that some of the most insistent wets were among those who insisted and demanded that the vote be taken at once?

Mr. CARAWAY. They were full. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. HASTINGS. The most insistent wets had not counted noses, and they felt that they had enough votes to sustain the President's veto.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina has expired.

NOTIFYING THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I present the following resolution and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That three Members be appointed by the Speaker to wait on the President of the United States and inform him that the House of Representatives has completed the business of this session and is ready to adjourn unless the President has some communication to make.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the resolution?

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, the resolution says that the business of the session is completed. We have not completed the business, and why not simply state that we are ready to adjourn?

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The resolution was agreed to.

THE HOUSING BUREAU.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for three minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Florida asks unanimous consent to address the House for three minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I do not want this House to adjourn without my again calling attention of the House and the country to the situation with reference to a very extravagant institution of this Government—the Housing Bureau. I have done that time after time. The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds has discharged its duty in that connection. Ever since last May this matter has been pending here, and I want to call attention this morning to one or two other matters in connection therewith for gentlemen to consider. Down on the plaza where the dormitories are built—very plain, commonplace dormitories—the blinds that went on to those dormitories cost $4,800, with the hardware. The painting of them cost $5,000. The hanging of them after they were delivered, painted and complete, cost $17,200, or about $7 a pair to hang them, making a total cost of $27,000 for the purchase and hanging of 2,490 pairs of common blinds.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Yes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman means just putting them on?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Yes; just hanging them up.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. How much a pair?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Seventeen thousand two hundred dollars for all, or about $7 a pair. When the bill was originally framed we put the entire force of the Supervising Architect's Office at the command of the bureau officials. Not content with that, they employed high-priced architects and put them on the pay roll. When they came to build the dormitories, perfectly plain, 12 buildings with 2 wings each, all alike, they did not use the Supervising Architect's Office nor did they use their own high-priced architects, but went outside and employed another architect and paid him $25,000 to draw the plans of these very plain, cheap buildings. Not only that, but they paid this architect, in addition to the fee of $25,000, 100 per cent overhead on his office force.

I want to ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, to extend my remarks in the RECORD on this subject, because there are quite a number of things I want to put in the RECORD so that gentlemen can read them, and when they come back next December be prepared to say to their constituents whether they want to continue this outrageously extravagant governmental activity.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Florida asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. I was talking to a gentleman last evening, and he said that he had just come from the office of the president of the association, I believe, Mr. Sherman.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. Who said the dormitories are being run now at a great profit to the Government. Does the gentleman know anything about that?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. No; but I do not think it is true.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Florida has expired.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one minute more.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I want to say this, further: The record shows that they have on their rolls or had until a few months ago—he has since retired—a man whom they called an expert on dormitory equipment, long after the armistice, when they needed no dormitories and no dormitory equipment, at a salary of $5,000 a year. They had an assistant to that man at $5,000 a year, and last February they raised the salary of the principal expert to $12,000 a year and dated it back for a month.

Mr. SNELL. Are all of these high-priced officials charged up to the operation of the dormitories?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. No; I do not think so. There are many others there and also a lot of high-priced ones on the pay roll of the dormitories or Government hotels.

Mr. Speaker, the whole record of this Housing Bureau is one of riotous extravagance, and if fully known to the House would shock the sensibilities of every Member on this floor. It is impossible for me to detail in the brief time I shall take all of the outrageous and scandalously extravagant doings of this bureau. I have said that in the original law creating the bureau Congress placed at the service of the bureau the entire force of the Supervising Architect of the Treasury. This was done in order to save the expense of architect's fees in the drafting of plans for the buildings it was proposed to construct. Neither the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds nor the Congress ever dreamed that any costly buildings or buildings requiring great architectural beauty would be constructed, and the committee in drafting the bill was advised that the Supervising Architect's Office not only had the ability to do this extra work but had ample time in which to do it. Notwithstanding this provision of law, this Housing Bureau employed at large salaries a large number of architects who were placed upon their pay roll and regularly drew their salaries from the Government. When Washington became so crowded with people that it was deemed wise that the bureau should construct some dormitories in an effort to relieve the congestion, it was decided that these dormitories should be plain and of simple construction and temporary in character. The officials of the Housing Bureau, instead of availing themselves of the services of their own high-priced architects and instead of availing themselves of the services of the architects in the Supervising Architect's office, deliberately went outside and employed Mr. Waddy B. Wood, a Washington City architect, and agreed to pay him a fee of $25,000 for his services in drawing the plans for the dormitories now standing on the Union Station Plaza. Not only this, but the bureau officials agreed to pay to Mr. Wood, in addition to his stipulated fee, 100 per cent overhead on his office expenses, which latter agreement was in direct violation of section 7 of the housing act, which prohibited the making of any cost-plus contracts.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the Plaza dormitories consist of 12 buildings, each with two wings, and they are all extremely plain, common, and cheap. The floor plans, the plumbing, the heating, the number of radiators and their location, light fixtures, bathrooms, toilets, are alike in each building, and there is no reason why the plans for one of these buildings could not have been used for all the others. To show just how the contract with Mr. Wood on his 100 per cent overhead operated, I desire to state that he increased the salaries of all of his employees, and while it is claimed that this was done because of the increased cost of living, yet we must remember that under this 100 per cent overhead contract the more his employees received the more Mr. Wood received. For instance, Mr. Porter, the manager for Mr. Wood, was earning about $200 a month when the war began, and after this contract with the Housing Bureau was entered into Mr. Porter's salary went up to $500 a month, and his work some months cost the Government, according to the record, over $800. Mr. Lockie, another employee, receiving about $175 per month before the war, cost the Government for his services on this dormitory job from $400 to $500 per month. To show just what was done, let me call your attention to this fact, which is indisputable: Messrs. Kennedy, Hooten, Munson, and Leason were draftsmen in the Supervising Architect's Office when the war began, and after Mr. Wood was employed to draw the plans for the Plaza dormitories he employed these four gentlemen, giving them much larger salaries than they were receiving from the Government in the Supervising Architect's Office. Their work on the dormitories as employees of Mr. Wood cost the Government $7,863.67, whereas if Mr. Wood had allowed them to remain in the employ of the Government and the bureau officials had made use of their services, as they had a right to do under the law, their services on the dormitories would have cost the Government $3,166.70, and thus we see that in this one little item the Government was made to suffer an excess cost of $4,696.97. Was this an economical, patriotic, honest administration of the Government's affairs? Should men capable of such legerdemain continue in the public service? This is only one act of many which cry out for the separation of these people from the Public Treasury.

I now desire to call attention to a few facts in connection with the building of the dormitories. The contract was let to the Fuller Co., and this company was to receive a fee of $58,000 over and above the actual cost of construction, and in addition to this they received a fee by way of plant rental of $22,000. Naturally one would suppose that this fee of $80,000 would be all, but under the manipulation of the Fuller Co. and the Housing Bureau they were paid very much more. For instance, the Fuller Co. used seven table saws, valued at $2,800, and they charged the Government $1,660 for the rental of these table saws. The record also shows that the Fuller Co. used eight swing saws, valued at $70 each, or $560 for the eight, and the Government paid to the Fuller Co. $1,453 for the rental or use of the eight swing saws. Take another case: The Fuller Co. used three Rex concrete mixers, supposed to cost about $3,000, and the rental charged the Government was $1,023. One other thing that I desire to call attention to is the fact that as shown by the hearings before the Senate subcommittee on Public Buildings and Grounds the Fuller Co. was allowed by the Housing Bureau a percentage of 4.75 on the purchase of a Westinghouse motor costing $16,564. Think of it. Nearly $800 commission allowed this concern to buy an article, standard in character, which any salaried employee could have purchased. Now, Mr. Speaker, this matter to which I am going to call attention may be considered small, but in the aggregate it is not so small as it may seem. The Fuller Co. hired certain trucks from a man named Killeen, which trucks were used on the Plaza dormitory job. The Fuller Co. paid Killeen for the large trucks $2.65 per hour for each truck without a driver, and the Housing Corporation paid to the Fuller Co. for the same trucks without drivers $3.50 per hour, a clear profit to the Fuller Co. of 85 cents an hour. In other words, the profit to the Fuller Co. on the hire of trucks was as follows: 1-ton trucks, 70 cents per hour each; 2-ton trucks, 50 cents per hour each; 3, 3½, and 5 ton trucks, 85 cents per hour each; and the total profit made by the Fuller Co. for the hire of trucks on this job was $13,177.79. When we remember that in the original contract made with the Fuller Co. that concern was to receive a fee of $22,000 for the rent of their plant, it is hard to understand why they should receive additional rent for trucks at all, but when they are allowed to coin a profit of more than $13,000 on this one item it is simply astounding.

Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether it is true or not, but it has been stated that in the planning and construction of the Plaza dormitories the Government actually paid more for the planning and the supervision of construction than the actual construction itself cost. As I say, I do not know whether this is true or not, but when I consider the record of this bureau I am strongly of the opinion that it is absolutely true.

I desire to call attention to the real-estate operations of this Housing Bureau simply to say that while it is claimed by the bureau officials that they always bought land lower than the appraised value the fact is this statement is very misleading. As I understand it, it was the practice of the bureau to secure appraisals of real estate which they intended to buy from four or five different sources. They would go to the chamber of commerce, the realty board, and other agencies of that kind, to fix a valuation. Now, the truth is that they never bought land lower than the lowest appraisal and never bought land lower than the average appraisal, but they may have bought it lower than the highest appraisal. To illustrate the reckless disregard for the public interest which seems to have been the rule with this bureau all along the line, I desire to call attention to their operations in connection with what we may call the navy-yard dormitories and what the bureau calls project 27A, 27B, and 27C. This bureau conceived the idea of buying a tract of land near the navy yard and erecting thereon certain houses and dormitories for the occupancy of navy-yard employees particularly. I shall not undertake to go through the long procedure of this bureau, but suffice it to say they spent some $869,000 on this venture, and if the Government can get out of this transaction without losing fully $800,000 the Government will be extremely lucky.

In the first place the bureau paid much more than the value of this land, according to the estimate of reputable real-estate dealers in the city of Washington. They excavated a vast amount of earth and undertook to build an immense foundation for buildings that add nothing to the value of the property.

I am not an authority in such matters, but it is my humble opinion that the money they spent in excavation, in building dormitories down there which could not be and were not used, and their other expenditures on this land might as well been thrown into the sea. It was a profligate, senseless, and utterly inexcusable waste of public money. This navy-yard fiasco is one that smells to heaven. For instance, for one of these tracts they sent to Toledo, Ohio, to get a man to negotiate the deal. The bureau paid this man $50 a day for seven days and $6 a day for eight days for expenses, making a total of $398 paid the negotiator for buying a piece of land which cost $5,235.95. But this is not all, Mr. Speaker. In addition to paying this negotiator $398, they allow another real-estate man $500 to assist this man in consummating the trade. I mention this one instance to illustrate the recklessness with which these people seem to have dealt with the people's funds. I want to say further that they did, as I have said, construct on this land some dormitories containing a large number of very small and uncomfortable rooms, which dormitories cost the Government $685 per room, and they are of the very cheapest possible construction of a temporary character. Not only did they construct these dormitories, but furnished them, and when they were completed and furnished not a single employee would live in them, and therefore the Government stands to lose about $800,000, and I charge that this great loss is due to the reckless, negligent, careless, wasteful management of the officials of this bureau. While speaking of the cost of the navy-yard dormitories, let me say that the cost of the Plaza dormitories was about $1,500 a room, and nearly all of these rooms are for the occupancy of only one person. In other words, it cost the Government $1,500 for space to house each war worker on the Plaza, whereas if the room had been built for two the cost would have been 30 per cent less, according to their architect, Mr. Wood.

Mr. Speaker, this bureau has a committee of their own to fix the salaries of the officers and employees. The salaries are not fixed by law, but are left to the exclusive control of a committee on salaries. Months after the armistice was signed, and when this bureau had been told that it was a temporary affair and would soon go out of business, their salary committee increased largely the salaries of the officers and employees.

As an instance of this I desire to say that Housing Corporation voucher 5487, period ending January 15, 1919, carried D. M. Kelly, as an expert on dormitory equipment, at $5,000 per annum, and Percy R. Iseman, as assistant to Mr. Kelly, at $5,000 per annum. Voucher 7122, pay roll ending February 15, 1919, carried Percy R. Iseman, assistant on dormitory equipment, at $5,000, and revises the salary of D. M. Kelly from January 16, 1919, from $5,000 to $12,000 per annum.

Now, Mr. Speaker, when these increases of salaries were made this bureau was supposed to be in process of liquidation; its affairs were being ended; no dormitories were to be built; no new equipment was to be bought. An expert on dormitory equipment, with a salary of $12,000, and an assistant at $5,000, making $17,000 per annum being paid to two men whose services were not needed at any price. No more dormitories were to be built, nor was there any dormitory equipment to be provided, yet we find the bureau officials increasing the salary of this superfluous employee from $5,000 per annum to $12,000 per annum—the salary of a Cabinet member—and actually making the increase effective one month back! And yet these people have the gall to boast of their efficiency and loyalty to the interests of the Government. May the good Lord deliver us from such efficiency in the future. Mr. Speaker, why will the Congress permit this outfit to function for another day? The record of this bureau is loaded down with transactions like this, and I have introduced a bill to close up the affairs of this bureau, which was unanimously reported by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds and has been on the calendar for months. Our committee has appealed to the Committee on Rules to report out a rule under which the House could consider this bill, but we have never been able to get action. This Congress has spent a great deal of time talking about economy and retrenchment, but thus far not a single definite step has been taken to lop off these unnecessary and leechlike governmental appendages. When the war was in progress the people expected waste, and were not disposed to be too critical, but when the armistice was signed, which event was the substantial ending of the war, the people had the right to expect of Congress the immediate cessation of the activities of such institutions as this Housing Bureau, and it is a reflection on Congress that this concern is still allowed to exist at great cost to the taxpayers of the land. The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, in reporting out the bill to abolish this bureau, pointed out how these people, long after the armistice was signed, raised the salaries of many of their officers and employees, and called attention to many other acts of wasteful extravagance which, in the opinion of the committee, demanded their instant severance from the Government pay roll. But in spite of the record, in spite of the undisputed and incontrovertible facts, this utterly useless agency, in so far as serving any public good is concerned, is still allowed to hang on to the Public Treasury.

Mr. Speaker, I am only responsible for my own acts as a Member of Congress. I feel that I have discharged my full duty with reference to this matter thus far, but I shall continue on every proper occasion to call it to the attention of Congress until some action is taken. This bill shall not quietly sleep on the calendar. This bureau is serving no useful purpose; it is an unnecessary drain on the Treasury; it is an extravagant, wasteful, useless adjunct; and the sooner "the place which now knows it shall know it no more" the better for the public service.

COMMITTTEE TO WAIT ON THE PRESIDENT.

The SPEAKER appointed Mr. MONDELL, Mr. TOWNER, and Mr. CLARK of Missouri a committee to wait upon the President in accordance with a resolution heretofore agreed to.

THE COAL CONFERENCE.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Speaker, the conference is still going on in the city of Washington between the representatives of the coal miners of the country and the operators, endeavoring to adjust the differences which have resulted in the strike and the injunction granted by Judge Anderson at Indianapolis. I hope the Members of the House have read the telegram that came from Birmingham, Ala., and which was inserted in the RECORD by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BLAND], by consent of the House, on last Saturday. It seems that during the war the Department of Labor caused an agreement of some kind to be made in the coal field of Alabama in which the miners acted collectively in fixing the scale of wages, and so forth, and as a result the miners in that district have been acting collectively, and have been to a large extent unionized. They recently went out on strike with the other coal miners of the country, and then, when Judge Anderson entered his mandatory injunction, the strike orders were canceled, and they were, of course, ordered to return to their work by the national officers.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENISON. I can not yield now.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, this is such an important subject and embraces so many different points that I think the absent Members ought to be present to hear the discussion.

Mr. DENISON. I yield to the gentleman if he wants to ask a question, and intends to make a point of no quorum.

Mr. BLANTON. I just wanted to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the order of Judge Anderson did not command any miner to go back to work, and the gentleman's remark in that respect is not exactly accurate. In fact, there are 400,000 miners to-day who have not obeyed that order and who have not gone back to work.

Mr. DENISON. I did not say that Judge Anderson ordered the men to go back to work. I said the men were ordered to go back by their officers, who were acting under the injunctive order of the court. That is what I said, and that is true. The order for the strike was canceled and the men were ordered to go back by the officers.

Mr. BLANTON. And they have not obeyed those orders.

Mr. DENISON. When they undertook to obey those orders and go back to work in Alabama the operators refused to let them go back, because they had union cards. I talked with the Department of Justice to-day and asked what had been done about it, and I have been informed that nothing has beeen done as yet, because they claim they can not get the facts. They have asked for a conference here on next Friday between the operators down there and the miners' officials. I hope that conference will soon result in adjusting the matter so that the miners in the Birmingham district may be allowed to return to work. Their funds are now tied up under the injunction order and at the same time they can not return to work. There are a great many of the miners who are actually suffering, and that is a great injustice to them. I hope the Department of Justice will enforce this law equally against the operators if it is to be enforced against the miners, because if they do not do so a serious injustice will be done.

Mr. MAYS. Mr. Speaker, does the gentleman say that any considerable number of those 400,000 men have tried to go back to work and that the operators have refused to take them back?

Mr. DENISON. I do not know how many, but my information is that the operators have refused to let them go back to work in the Birmingham district.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. CANDLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended for three minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CANDLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENISON. Yes.

Mr. CANDLER. It was stated a moment ago by the gentleman that he hoped the Department of Justice would enforce this law against the operators just the same as against the miners.

Mr. DENISON. Yes.

Mr. CANDLER. I will state to the gentleman that I heard the distinguished Attorney General of the United States, Mr. Palmer, say that he was determined to do that, and therefore that he wanted some additions to some laws in order that he might be able to enforce it.

Mr. DENISON. Yes; but I not only want him to say he will do that, but I want him to do it; he has not done it up to this time.

Gentlemen, there is a feeling among the coal miners of the country, and this feeling is finding frequent expression, to the effect that the Attorney General is not dealing fairly with the miners of the country in enforcing this law by mandatory injunction against the officials of the coal miners and not enforcing it against the operators, particularly in the Birmingham district, who have refused to allow the men to return to work because they are union miners. The attention of the Department of Justice has been called to this situation and my information is that facts have been presented to the Attorney General showing the claims of the miners to be true. Of course, I have no personal knowledge of the facts. But it will do no good for the Department of Justice to spend very much time in trying to ascertain the facts and then undertake to enforce the law. It would seem to me that the Attorney General should have acted promptly and ascertained the facts immediately, because it will not do the coal miners any good after they have been reduced to a state of suffering because of the delay.

I am one of those who believe in union labor in coal mines as elsewhere, and I believe in the value and justice of collective bargaining with reference to wages and working conditions. And since the mines in Alabama have been unionized and wage matters have been adjusted by the principle of collective bargaining during the days when the country was engaged in war and was in need of the result of their services, I do not believe that the Department of Justice should permit the operators down there to lock out of their mines these same coal miners on the ground that they belong to labor unions. If the law enacted primarily as a war measure is to be enforced by the Attorney General against the miners, it should be enforced against the operators; and since the officials of the miner's organization have bowed to the law and the orders of the court, the operators in Alabama who refuse to allow the men to return because they are union men should be brought before the court and compelled to obey the law. As I understand it, this court proceeding was not begun on behalf of the coal operators of the country, but on behalf of the public who would have suffered by reason of the shutdown of the mines; and the public has the right to insist that the operators be not allowed to break an agreement any more than the miners. If this is not done, there may be some truth in the charge that the law is being enforced against one class and not against another, as well as in one section of the country and not in another.

I hope that the conference may soon be held and that the Department of Justice may speedily ascertain the facts, and if the facts are as have been reported and presented to the Attorney General, I hope that Mr. Palmer will either order the operators in the Birmingham district to comply with their contract and allow the men to return to work without discrimination or that he will have the injunction order modified as to them so that they can receive the benefit of their funds to support themselves and their families.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's time has again expired.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD an address made by me before the West Virginia Bar Association last August.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WINGO. Upon what subject?

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ. On the subject of the Constitution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

RECESS.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the House stand in recess until 4 o'clock p. m.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, there are one or two of us who would like to address the House for five minutes.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HEFLIN. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Is the gentleman going to address the House upon the election in Oklahoma?

Mr. HEFLIN. I would like to say something about the election in New Jersey and in Maryland. No; I desire to address the House upon the murder of American soldiers recently, something that we all agree about, and I desire five minutes.

Mr. SIMS. Will the gentleman from Wyoming put his request that after the gentleman from Alabama has used five minutes the House stand in recess?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that after the gentleman from Alabama has addressed the House for five minutes the House stand in recess——

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman make it 10 minutes? I would like to have five minutes. I have not asked since I have been a Member of the House——

Mr. MONDELL. The trouble is, if we carry this too far——

Mr. CARAWAY. Oh, then do not do it.

Mr. MONDELL. I have no objection to such requests from these gentlemen if Members would like to hear them.

Mr. HEFLIN. I ask unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes.

Mr. RAYBURN. I would like about three minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent that after the gentleman from Alabama addresses the House for five minutes that the House then stand in recess until 4 o'clock. Is there objection?

Mr. CANDLER. Mr. Speaker, I understood the gentleman from Wyoming to modify his request, and I ask that the gentleman from Arkansas have five minutes.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understood the gentleman from Arkansas to withdraw his request.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, so far as I am concerned, I should be delighted to hear all these gentlemen. I am sure their remarks will be interesting and very instructive; but my opinion is that if we do not recess some one is likely to make a point of no quorum, and that would be very embarrassing at this stage of the proceedings. I will renew my request, that after five minutes, to be given to the gentleman from Alabama——

Mr. CANDLER. Make it 10 minutes, 5 minutes to be given to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY].

Mr. MONDELL. I make it 15 minutes, 5 minutes to the gentleman from Texas, five minutes to the gentleman from Alabama, and 5 minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas, and that the House stand in recess until 4 o'clock.

Mr. GARLAND. I want five minutes. I object.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman from Wyoming yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I will yield.

Mr. WALSH. Would the gentleman have any objection to preferring a request that at 1.35 the House stand in recess until 4 o'clock?

Mr. MONDELL. I would have no objection, Mr. Speaker; but, Mr. Speaker, let me make this suggestion: I do not think this is the time for controversial discussion. Any Member of the House can make a point of no quorum at this time. I have no disposition to object to unanimous consent for gentlemen to speak, but I trust gentlemen will not discuss subjects that are likely to lead to disagreement or desire for further discussion, and I hope there will be no discussion on controverted subjects.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I will.

Mr. RAKER. Let the gentleman from Pennsylvania have 5 minutes, and make it 20.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent that at 1.25 the House stand in recess until 4 o'clock. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, the subject that I wish to discuss briefly this morning is of serious concern to every loyal American citizen, for it affects the very life of the Nation. According to the Washington Post of yesterday that paper received a circular sent out by the red anarchists of America, in which they call upon their members to buy arms. The members are urged in that circular to arm themselves "and shoot into the breasts that dare to attack them."

Mr. Speaker, these alien enemies have by insidious attacks and secret intrigues taught disrespect for American institutions and disobedience to the mandates of constituted authority. They have sought to weaken and impair in every way possible the policies and the powers that make up constitutional government in America. [Applause.]

They have tried to poison the minds of our own citizens against America. They have sown the seeds of sedition and treason. Now they openly advocate defiance of law and order, and they have dared to murder American soldiers who carried our flag and wore our uniform in a peaceful parade in Centralia, Wash., an American city.

Their seditious, treasonable, and murderous conduct is a challenge to America, and America must accept the challenge. [Applause.]

No man or set of men who have for their purpose the overthrow and destruction of American institutions must be permitted to remain in America. [Applause.]

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. HEFLIN. I have only a few minutes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I am sure the gentleman will agree with me that not only anarchists but all aliens who preach the overthrow of our Government should be deported. [Applause.]

Under section 3 of the immigration law concerning anarchists two aliens thought to be anarchists were excluded from the United States during the year ending June 30; 37 of that class were expelled from the country during the same period and 56 are awaiting deportation, a total of 92.

Mr. HEFLIN. I am in favor of employing at once every means at the command of the Government in locating these alien enemies and getting rid of all of them at the earliest moment possible. [Applause.] To that end I want to see Congress at an early date amend the present law or enact new laws that will cover all of these cases. [Applause.]

Mr. LAZARO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HEFLIN. I would be glad to yield to my friend, but I have only three or four minutes left. Mr. Speaker, I mentioned a moment ago the murder of American soldiers in the State of Washington. On the 11th day of this month out in the State of Washington men who had stood on the firing line in France fighting for American liberty, fighting for the preservation of the Republic, home again, with our flag flying above them as they marched in a peaceful parade, were shot down and foully murdered by red-handed anarchists right here in the United States. The blood of these boys cries out to Democrats and Republicans alike and to all real Americans to drive these enemies from our country. [Applause.]

How long will we permit these enemies to remain in our midst? Will the country that these boys fought to save from the enemy from without now permit them to be murdered by the enemy from within? The time has come for action—swift, drastic, decisive action. [Applause.]

Our boys in uniform conquered the enemy from without; now let us who share the fruits of their victory rid the country of the alien enemy from within. [Applause.]

These men have no respect for the laws of America. They hate and despise them.

They mock the mandates of our courts and defy constituted authority. [Applause.] In the majesty of the law stands the bulwark of constitutional liberty in America. It is the Nation's city of refuge from Bolshevism and anarchy [applause], and they who fly the red flag of anarchy above the Stars and Stripes are the foes of law and order in America, and they are the deadly enemies of our country. [Applause.]

We have seen enough to convince us that there is an organized plan or conspiracy on the part of alien enemies here to weaken and destroy the institutions of our country. This deplorable and dangerous situation, I repeat, calls for action. [Applause.]

Just think of it. Right here in the household of America is an association of alien enemies attacking in every way possible the very Constitution of our country—the organic law of our great Government—the ark of our covenant in civic affairs, and their avowed purpose is to overthrow and destroy it. Gentlemen of the House let me say in conclusion, there is not room enough in America for these enemies of our country. [Applause.]

In the interest of those now living and in the interest of those who shall come after us, we must act as whole-hearted Americans should act on this all-important question. [Applause.] These enemies who disturb our peace, defy law and order, preach treason in our midst, and seek to overthrow our Government must either be driven out of the country or executed in it. [Loud applause.]

Mr. LAZARO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have one minute in which I may ask him a question.

The SPEAKER. The time has been allotted.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to yield out of my time sufficient for the gentleman from Louisiana to ask the gentleman from Alabama a question.

Mr. LAZARO. I fully agree with what the gentleman says, that any man who opposes our flag ought to be sent out of the country, but is it not a fact that Congress ought to undertake additional legislation to strengthen the hands of the Attorney General, so that he can locate, charge, try, and convict these men?

Mr. HEFLIN. That is true, and I hope to see it done after the Congress meets in December.

Mr. LAZARO. We should talk less about it and enact legislation to enable him to do so.

Mr. HEFLIN. Give him authority.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY] is recognized for four minutes.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I ask for this time merely to read a press report of a telegram sent to President Wilson and to make a brief statement about an occurrence that took place in my district recently. I have not discussed it before, because there were features about it that I did not care to inject into discussions on this floor.

A negro organization in Phillips County, Ark., had planned to kill the owners of plantations and to take possession of the land. In that county the population is largely black; in some communities there are more than 10 negroes to 1 white person. It is one of the old counties of the State, and to the credit of its splendid citizenship there has never been a lynching within the county. There has never heretofore been any friction between the negroes and the white people living in that county. It is a law-abiding community. Growing out of this insurrection there were a number of lives lost, both white and black. Later something like a hundred negroes were arrested. They admitted the organization of a plot and their intention to assassinate the landowners. There was strong pressure from the more hot-headed part of the population to take the law into their own hands as to some of the accused, among them two white lawyers, who seemed to have been mixed up in the conspiracy, and lynch them. But the officials preserved order. No man suffered at the hands of a mob. Everyone connected with the riot who has been arrested had his case submitted to a grand jury. Some of them were indicted and have been tried. Among these were 11 negroes who were admitted to be ringleaders and who had participated in the fight that resulted in the killing of one soldier of the United States, one ex-soldier, several deputy sheriffs, and a number of citizens who were summond by the sheriff of the county and were commissioned as deputy sheriffs and were trying to make arrests of people who had violated the law. Eleven of these negroes so arrested were sentenced to death.

There is in New York City an association called the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People. I think its correct title should be "An association for the promotion of revolution and inciting to riots."

Let me add but a few words in reference to Phillips County. As I said, it is one of the oldest counties in the State. It was settled long before the Civil War by people of education and means. It has been the birthplace and the home of statesmen, authors, soldiers, and men and women prominent in every walk of life. As an illustration, Helena, now a splendid city of 20,000 people, at the beginning of the war between the States, had a population not exceeding 2,500. Three-fifths of these at least were slaves. Yet it furnished to the Confederate Army seven generals. Among these were Gens. Cleburne, Hinemon, Tappan, Govan, and others. Those not mentioned were equally as deserving as those whose names are given. In civil life it has given to the State governors, Senators of the United States, judges of the highest courts, and men and women renowned in every field of intellectual accomplishment.

It should not be traduced by a society whose chief activities have been, as I suggested, to promote revolutions and incite to riots.

Under my extension of remarks I wish to have incorporated an article appearing in the New York World of Sunday, November 16, 1919, written by an investigator who is a citizen of the place in which the society has its headquarters, New York City. Save for a few errors as to population and some others evidently typographical, the article in the main is correct. The article is entitled "Eleven negroes to pay with their lives for greed of one."

ELEVEN NEGROES TO PAY WITH THEIR LIVES FOR GREED OF ONE—"ELAINE UPRISING" IN ARKANSAS CAUSED BY ROBERT L. HILL, WHO SAW OPPORTUNITY TO REAP A GOLDEN HARVEST—HIS "HOUSEHOLD UNION" SOURCE OF BIG REVENUE—FANNED DISCONTENT OVER PAY FOR COTTON INTO DISORDER WHICH RESULTED IN MURDERS—DID ALL IN NAME OF GOVERNMENT.

[By Clair Kenamore.]

HELENA, ARK., November 15.

"The Elaine uprising" is finished and the books are balanced. Except for a dribble of indictments expected from the grand jury, which meets to-day, the execution of 11 negroes at the State penitentiary two months hence, and the trial of a few cases still on the docket, the incident is closed.

Prompt and vigorous action of citizens and soldiers has left no trace of the trouble, and serious men, who hope to prevent a recurrence, wonder whether the sore has been cured or its virus driven inward to reappear elsewhere. One of the reasons for fearing a recurrence is that the principal germ, Robert L. Hill by name, has not been isolated.

The story of the uprising is now a complete and soon told tale, and in reading it the reader should know and accept as a basis that Arkansas, like all the South, is a white man's country. Whatever majority of numbers the negroes may have in any community, and at places it is 1,000 to 1, the white is still the ruling race.

They accept the responsibility and they manage the affairs. They care for the negroes in their employ, advance them money a year ahead of crop time, advise them, manage for them, and govern them. It is the custom of centuries, and whether good or bad is not for me to say.

THE ELAINE DISTRICT.

The country about the little town of Elaine is cotton land, owned in large parcels by corporations and opened up in recent years. The land nearest Elaine is owned by the Gerard B. Lambert Co., composed of the St. Louis family of chemical manufacturers. Into this section last spring and summer came a short, thin, very black negro wearing a frock coat. His name was Robert L. Hill, and he came from Winchester, Ark., where, with his wife, he lived on a small farm.

He gave advice to negroes after the manner of a lawyer, and he liked to speak at meetings. He could read and write, but that was the limit of his book learning. He pretended to have, or really had, a deeply religious turn, and spoke and prayed at church. But the thing he had most surely was that personal magnetism which should be part of the equipment of all confidence men, orators, politicians, and evangelists. Whether he came to Elaine with his scheme full blown or whether it grew with each fortuitous circumstance and condition I do not know.

Phillips County has about 6,000 population, about three-fourths of which is black. In one township there is only one white man. In another township there is not even one. Conditions among the tenant negroes were ripe for Hill and his promises, because of the most recent attempt made to improve them.

It is the custom of the owner of the land to lease it to the negroes on a crop-sharing plan, whereby owner and renter each take half of the crop of cotton. The agreements are made the first of the year, and upon the landlord is the obligation to "carry" the tenant through the year.

Provisions are supplied to the tenant, and all goods he uses for himself and family are supplied, and there is no settlement until the crop is harvested. Then the tenant hauls the baled cotton to town, investigates its price, and has it sampled, and the landlord immediately makes a settlement, usually at a cent or two a pound under the market price. This is to protect the landlord against a possible slump or to reimburse him in case he has to hold the cotton for a time for a chance to market it.

But the important and most insisted upon thing, the planters say—and it is easy to be believed—is that the tenant shall get his settlement and the money due him instanter. When the cotton is delivered a year's work is done, and the worker wants his pay. Goods furnished throughout the year and money advanced are totaled up, and the sum subtracted from the price of the cotton. If there is a balance, the tenant takes it to do with as he wishes. It is his money.

If cotton goes up, the planter makes money. Friends of Mr. Theodore Falthauer, of Chicago, say that he was desirous of giving his negro tenants a greater share of the profits when he inaugurated a system of delaying settlement with his tenants until he had sold his cotton. Other people say that, like any other northerner, who knew nothing of negroes, he thought he could compel them to stay on the land by thus holding out a settlement until it was too late for them to find another place to crop the following year.

THE NEGROES AROUSED.

Evil rumors spread among the negroes not only on this land but on all adjoining it. Every cabin hummed with the iniquity of it. Whatever the inspiration, the negroes saw in it only that great injustice, and known as such throughout the world, of withholding from the laborer his hire.

The firm of Bratton, Bratton & Casey, attorneys, of Little Rock, Ark., had set up a branch office in Helena. There were three Brattons, father and two sons. Casey had been a telegraph operator, train dispatcher, and lawyer. He had advanced ideas. The younger Bratton took contracts from the negroes to enforce a settlement for them and to get all moneys due them in the past.

Robert L. Hill was projecting around trying out his powers over his people and on the lookout for some way to make a living without working. The southern part of Phillips County was just made to order for him. He decided that what was needed was not exactly a lodge, the lodge business being somewhat overdone, but a union. He formed the Progressive Farmers' and Household Union of America. He had already tried out the Negro Business League and the Great Torch of Liberty, but neither seemed indicated in this case.

PROCLAMATION OF LEADER.

Here is his proclamation under the caption, "The Negro Business League":

"Join the Progressive Farmers' and Household Union of America.

"O, you laborers of the earth, hear the word!

"The time is at hand that all men, all nations and tongues must receive a just reward!

"The union wants to know why it is that the laborers can not control their just earnings which they work for. Some of the leading business merchants and authorities are saying we are pleading the right cause and due consideration.

"There are many of our families suffering because our men are forced to act as children.

"We also plead that we be recognized as taxpaying citizens.

"Remember the Holy Word when the Almighty took John up on the mountain and commanded him to look, and asked John what he saw, and John said: 'I see all nations and tongues coming up before God.'

"Now, we are a nation and a tongue. Why should we be cut off from fair play?

"Hear us, O God, hear us!

"We only ask every negro man for $1.50 for joining fees; women, 50 cents.

"Write Box 31, Winchester, Ark., and we will come down and set up a body among you. Get 15 men and 12 women. We will set you up together."

HILL'S BIG COLLECTIONS.

Hill worked through June, July, and August. As precedents were needed, he made them. The union flourished under his oratory, and he found fluency as he went along. The $1.50 fee admission to the lodge was too easy so he spread out. There were grand lodge dues, which were cheerfully paid. Hill was the grand lodge. From some negroes he collected as high as $150.

These were to have their names engraved on the temple "now being erected" in Winchester, Ark., and were to be members of the first congress to be held there. In addition, they were to have the right to speak on all motions and laws.

It was only when business commenced to wane that Hill began to emphasize the sinister side of the organization. He spoke darkly of the coming conflict, the oppression of the whites, and he choose his words well. He said all members who did not have guns should get them. The negroes had heard many patriotic speeches during the war, they had bought Liberty bonds and thrift stamps, and they were keenly patriotic and for the Government.

So many negroes bought Liberty bonds that some enterprising gentlemen from Kansas had been working among them explaining that they were only inspired by the keen interest all Kansans had in downtrodden negroes. Since Liberty bonds were practically worthless, these Kansans were willing to exchange several kinds of stock (all worthless) for these Liberty bonds. The law got the Kansans.

Hill wisely extolled the purchase of Liberty bonds and war savings stamps. For a $50 Liberty bond he would have the name of any member engraved on the temple. Much of his receipts were in war savings stamps. He always was strongly for the Government, and made it a valuable part of his arguments.

BEGAN TO TALK FORCE.

By September 1 there were unions at Old Town, Elaine, Hoop Spur, Countess, Radio, Ferguson, and Melwood. Hill told them all, when he addressed the meetings, that he represented the Government, that the Government was in hearty sympathy with the union, and that it would see that negroes got their rights. In August he instructed that all members should bring their guns to meetings and that they should accumulate some ammunition.

The plan of taking guns to lodge meetings spurred up attendance, and heavy inside and outside guards, all armed, were thrown about the halls or churches where meetings were held. This, I feel sure, was only part of the theatrics prepared by Hill to maintain his hold on the negroes, but it cost many lives afterwards and will take a dozen more.

Hints of the unions began to get out to the white folks. Negro women spoke darkly of what was going to happen to their mistresses in the kitchens. Prominent whites, who had been listening to just such tales ever since the Civil War, paid little attention to it, but during the summer some big landowners bought $5,000 worth of shotguns and ammunition and stored it in the courthouse at Helena. White folks driving past negro churches on Sunday saw men in church with rifles in their hands, but little was thought of it. Sunday is the favorite day for hunting.

PREDICTED RACE WAR.

Dr. V. E. Powell, who was the medical examiner for the union (Hill seems to have taken this idea from the Army), asked Hill how this rising would come. Hill said it would come in different ways. There would be a war between the white folks and the negroes. The negroes must get arms and prepare for it. Powell gave a pig for a 45–70 Winchester. This Powell, who had been educated in Pine Bluff and in Nashville, said exultantly to a member one night: "Boy, we are rich. We are going to get 1,600 acres for $200. We have already got 160 acres apiece for $14."

Hill drove among the negro farmers with Bratton, the white man, while Bratton was making contracts to handle the negroes' law cases. Hill would refer to this at meetings and say that there were white lawyers who would take care of the union if anything happened. He was never definite in his talks, but spoke vaguely of what was going to happen, and "when something happens," and such indefinite phrases, which gratified a thirst for secrecy and mystery.

The negro doctors, preachers, and farmers all seem to have obeyed the unlettered Hill implicitly after they came to know him. He had a medical examiner for the union who signed as "United States representative." The joiner paid 50 cents for a card. To have it signed cost 25 cents additional. Sometimes business was so brisk that the doctor had to sign them in blank and let the local secretary fill them in later.

HAD TO FURNISH THRILL.

By September Hill had dealt out sensations to the union members so liberally that it required some pretty strong stuff to furnish the needed thrill, so he told them it was getting close to the time to strike. He told them of the army of 500 trained men he had at Winchester, which was going to help the Phillips County negroes when the time came. He told them to pick the white men who were to be the first to die.

The superior councils named 21 of them, all big planters who leased land on crop-sharing plan. Cotton was selling at 35 cents then. The inspired Hill told the union meetings that cotton was going to 50 cents. The Government had told him so. Whenever he showed literature it had across the top in heavy letters, "Orders from Washington, D. C."

Hill told of men who were on October 6 to take a bale of cotton to one of the doomed white men. The negro was to demand 50 cents a pound. Most of the whites in Helena believe that Hill's instructions were for the negro to kill the planter as soon as he had refused to allow him 50 cents a pound for his cotton, but I have been unable to find proof of this. I think Hill had something else in mind.

KILLING NOT INTENDED.

I do not believe that Hill intended that there should be any killings anywhere. He planned in fine detail a great uprising and massacre, but he never intended that it should occur. There would have been no money in that for him.

By the last of September he had $12,000 in the bank at Winchester. If he had taken this money and bought cotton on the assumption that his prediction was true, he would have made money, for cotton went to 50 cents, but he kept on making plans for the overthrow of the white control and the establishment of black equality or supremacy, plans which he knew would spoil the union if carried out. He relied on himself to shift and change the orders, to back and fill and argue enough to cut off any serious menace to the profitable union, but the interest in the meetings had to be maintained.

Hill attended a meeting of the union at Hoop Spur on Friday night, September 26. It was a big meeting and very enthusiastic. Hill spoke very strongly against the whites, and insisted that the salvation of his race lay in organization. He said all meetings must be well guarded, and that no whites should be allowed to molest them.

There was another meeting there the next Tuesday night, but Hill was elsewhere. The church was crowded and two rings of guards armed with rifles and shotguns kept watch outside.

The guards saw the headlights of an approaching automobile and drew back into the brush to let it pass. At the little creek near the church it stopped. The guards drew near, silently, in the darkness. A man standing near the machine said, "Going coon hunting, boys?" There was no more conversation. The guards drew back, and one of them fired.

Then they all fired, and then fired again. The meeting was in a riot. Negroes leaped through the windows, firing into the air as they landed on the ground. Leaders went to the road and found a dead white man, and near the body two boys quarrelling about who had killed the white man. On his body they found a flashlight and a Colt automatic.

The automobile had contained officers looking for a moonshiner who had been on a big drunk. They had never heard of the union and had not the slightest interest in it. W. A. Adkins, who was killed, was a special agent of the Missouri Pacific, who lived in another county.

AUTHORITIES NOTIFIED.

Deputy Sheriff Pratt, who was shot through the knee, crawled to the railroad, flagged a freight train and was taken to a station from which he telephoned Sheriff Kitchen in Helena an account of the affair. A negro trusty who was in the automobile crawled away from the church and walked to another station, from which he telephoned a still more exciting account and said that the fighting was still going on.

A white man named Monroe, who stopped at the scene an hour later, seeing the automobile and the dead man, was fired upon and wounded twice. He cranked his Ford under fire from the brush and got through to Elaine, 2 miles away, and telephoned to the sheriff. Helena was awake, up, and in the streets before day. Arms were issued and meetings were held of leading men of both colors to devise methods of keeping the peace.

Here is where Phillips County shows well. The white folks there give you to understand most emphatically that they are not lynchers. There has never been a lynching in the county, they say, and there is not going to be one. The law must prevail.

The governor was advised of conditons. Posses of men, made deputy sheriffs, were loaded into automobiles and started toward Hoop Spur. The first were of the American Legion camp, men newly returned from overseas.

THE UNION IS AROUSED.

In the meantime the Progressive Farmers' and Household Union of America was functioning. In the records of more than 100 preliminary examinations of members of the union which I examined, more than 60 who had not attended the Hoop Spur meeting Tuesday night said that they were awakened before daylight Wednesday. They were ordered to go to this or that man's cabin. The great fight had begun!

"Bring your guns and ammunition," the couriers said.

Soon after daylight the first automobiles from Helena were seen coming down the big road above Hoop Spur. More than a hundred negroes lay in the brush. The automobiles stopped and the men alighted. Frank Hicks, a quarter of a mile away, had his power rifle. He "made two shots, just to scare them," he said. Clinton Lee, a white man, was killed. Frank Hicks will be electrocuted January 2.

The negroes had a few returned soldiers among them, but they had not been drilled as yet. The ex-soldiers tried to maneuver them from column into line and from line into column, but without avail.

"Who was commanding your gang?" Frank Hicks was asked at his trial.

"The obligation proclaimed the leader," he replied.

"Who did it proclaim?"

"My brother, Ed Hicks."

That afternoon, with posses working throughout the section, Elihu Johnson, black, and his three brothers were found, all heavily armed, south of Elaine. Johnson was a dentist in Helena and considered well to do. The four were put in the automobile, after being disarmed, and put on the rear seat. The white men sat on the front seat, and the party started to Helena.

At a stop, when two of the white men got out, one of the Johnsons leaned forward, seized Orley R. Lilly's revolver and killed him. The other white men killed the negroes at once. James A. Tappan, another white man, was killed from ambush, and the next afternoon 500 soldiers from Camp Pike arrived.

So completely were the negroes under the spell of Hill that when the soldiers detrained, and the news spread among the negroes, they believed it was Hill's army from Winchester coming to aid them against the whites. They were soon undeceived. One soldier, Corpl. Earls, was killed and soon posses and soldiers had the armed blacks penned in the canebrakes.

Hill was seen near his little farm near Winchester that day, and on that day and the next more than $12,000 of this was withdrawn from the bank. It is the last sight of him. He silently stole away, and he is the only prominent member of the union unaccounted for.

Of the 700 members the union had in Phillips County probably more than 400 were hiding, armed, in the cane brakes. Between 15 and 20 had been killed. As the lines of whites, soldier and civilian, drew closer about them they began to surrender, and once that process was under way each negro tried to be early at the surrendering. The Helena jail was filled and the basement of the courthouse. Three big Army trucks carried the captured rifles and shotguns.

In Elaine there were 300 black prisoners, and a committee of 7 combed through them to find the guilty and free the innocent. More than 200 were released without further ado.

In Helena the whites handled the situation with a strong hand. If a white man had a drink or two and started talking loud on the street, he went to jail. There were six white citizens so restrained before noon on Wednesday.

All firearms in Helena stores were interned, but most of the arms in the union section had been bought from mail-order houses in Chicago and delivered at post offices across the river.

SOON BACK AT WORK.

By the last of the week the negroes who were not in jail were back at work picking cotton or spending their "seed money." One of the quaint customs, and one to which Mr. Falthauer tried to apply modern business principles, is that the tenant gets half of the proceeds of the cotton seed, no matter how much he may be indebted to the landlord for advanced provisions.

The best lawyers in the county were appointed by Judge J. M. Jackson to defend the accused negroes. Under the law, which makes each party to a conspiracy guilty of all the crimes which flow out of the conspiracy, all might have been indicted for first-degree murder, but the court earnestly tried to administer a fairer justice. Of the 109 negroes indicted 11 were sentenced to death. These were negroes who were shown to have fired shots at white men.

Among them were the Hicks brothers, who had been officers of the Hoop Spur Union; Ed Coleman, who was past 60, and whose reputation had been good all his life; and J. E. Knox, a preacher. Virtually all of the negroes convicted were of the class of steady workers, considered in the South to be the best of the race.

The cases were prepared with great care before court convened. The jury was all white, and there was no delay in finding verdicts. This is the only thing about the affair which has an evil look.

Verdicts found in two or seven minutes look much like prearrangement, but in these cases the stories of the negroes convicted them. Some of the lawyers refused to allow their clients to go on the stand, because the story they had to tell made the cases worse for the defendants than that of outside witnesses.

One man was acquitted. Of 50 found guilty of second-degree murder, 10 were sentenced to 21 years. Eleven negroes were given one year in prison for night riding. This is a felony in Arkansas. To ride at night to another man's home for the purpose of inducing him to violate a law or to break a contract is a crime. Thirty were bound over to the next grand jury and released on bond.

The trials of the accused negroes were handled with the greatest expedition, once the cases were prepared. All the evidence was given by members of the union and virtually every one of those indicted were ready to plead guilty to murder in the second degree when the condition was explained to him rather than go to trial.

As an example of the manner in which the testimony came in, the case of Frank Hicks is a good one. The negroes had all been told by Hill that the Government was on their side and that white lawyers from Little Rock would take care of them.

Hicks said that on Wednesday morning when he "made" two shots in the direction of the four men coming down the road his idea was to scare them. He wanted them to know that the negroes were out and armed and that they were backing up the Government, and that they would have no white folks molesting them. The members of the posse were then put on the stand to show that one of these shots killed "Buddie" Lee. That completed the case, and the jury retired and returned almost at once with the verdict of guilty.

Old man Coleman contended that he did not fire a shot. He said that while the other negroes were shooting he was standing up waving his rifle and telling the members of the union to give it to them, and he was in the crowd which fired on the posse. The State showed that a member of the posse was killed by this fire and rested with that testimony. The jury in this case took no longer to decide than in that of Frank Hicks.

EVIDENCE WAS CONVINCING.

In every case the evidence against the men was convincing, and that it came from members of the union was considered sufficient proof that it would be unbiased, or at any time unbiased in favor of the State.

The leading members of the bar and the officers of the law all believe that the evidence was such as would have convicted the men in any court in the country.

Most of the other cases not yet tried are night-riding cases, except that of Ed Ware, a leader in the union, who was brought back from New Orleans last Thursday.

I discussed the case with a negro leader of great power among his people, who is, I believe, most earnestly interested in the welfare of his race.

"Cases like this will occur," he said, "as long as my race produces brilliant specimens of the grafter like this man Hill. While I earnestly believe that the remedy is education, still I know that gullibility and credulity can not be educated out of people.

LOYAL TO GOVERNMENT.

"These ignorant negroes doubtless thought they were doing a wise and patriotic thing. The whole fabric of this deceit was founded on loyalty to the Government.

"Every cabin has its Liberty bond and its war stamps. Vicious men, both white and black, have haunted the county ever since, using every device to get these bonds. Why not educate the negroes to a point where they will not be easy prey for every outsider who drifts in to profit on their credulity?"

Of the white men, there was no evidence which convinced me that they had knowledge of the plan for an uprising. One of the Brattons and Casey were indicted for barratry, which an almost forgotten statute describes as stirring up strife and contention in court or out.

Mr. Falthauer has sold out his holdings for $600,000 and withdrawn to Chicago.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman have five minutes more. There will be some time that will not be used by other Members.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asked for five minutes, and the Chair thinks it is hardly fair to the other Members to grant him additional time.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, out of the five minutes allotted to me, if I may be allowed, I yield to the gentleman——

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. CARAWAY. This society I mentioned appeals to the governor of my State and to the President of the United States to stay the execution of these confessed criminals, and makes the statement that no punishment has been meted out to white rioters, and there is not any evidence anywhere that any white person was engaged in riot. There were no white persons on the scene except commissioned officers, who were deputized to preserve order. No white person had incited to riot except two white lawyers who were alien to that community and have been indicted. No others were mixed up in the riot, if you call it a riot, except these two white men and the negroes who undertook to overthrow the local government. These negroes were given a fair trial in a court of justice and convicted by a jury. No appeal was taken by them from these verdicts, although they were represented by able lawyers. There was not a line of evidence offered that anyone could believe that tended to show they were not guilty of a conspiracy to murder, and had, in fact, committed murder. And yet this society sends broadcast throughout the land an appeal to the President to immediately investigate the situation down there. Now, heretofore, this society has contended that it wanted the law enforced; that it wanted an end to lynching. Here is a county that refused to permit any harm to come to any of these people. No punishment of any kind was or is to be inflicted on them except through the courts, the legally organized tribunals; notwithstanding this, this society now slanders the people of this community and gives utterance to this falsehood. It is apparent that agitation and not justice is desired.

Mercy and not harshness has been manifested by the people of Phillips County, but justice is not the aim of this society whose telegram was the occasion of these remarks. It thrives financially by falsehoods and antagonisms. If people who know nothing of conditions would take time to ascertain the truth, societies like this would cease to exist. Its membership is composed of but two classes. One class is desirous of meddling with affairs of which it knows nothing—merely to be in the public eye—the other seeks advantages for itself, whatever harm may follow.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, in the brief time I have I want to say—not for the effect it will have here but for the effect it will have in another body—that for this Congress to adjourn without passing the Sweet bill, which is a composite of the measure introduced by me and the one introduced by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. SWEET], for increased compensation to disabled soldiers of this country, approaches a tragedy [applause], and I trust before both bodies shall cease their labors for this session that this very humane and necessary legislation may be written finally into law.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GARLAND] is recognized.

Mr. GARLAND. Mr. Speaker, a few moments ago the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DENISON] said that he had received information to the effect that when the strike of the coal miners was called off——

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLANTON. What was it that was assured to us by the gentleman from Wyoming? Was it not that in these 20 minutes there should be no speeches on controversial matters, where Members might take issue with each other on the subject of debate? If the gentleman is going any further into the subject discussed by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DENISON] I shall have to ask for a quorum to be present to hear him, because it is not in accord with the assurance given by the gentleman from Wyoming. This is a matter in which I probably would take issue with both the gentleman from Illinois and the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. GARLAND. Mr. Speaker, is this to be taken out of my time?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. GARLAND. Then I shall have to object.

The SPEAKER. It was understood that controversial matters would not be discussed. The Chair hopes that the gentleman from Pennsylvania will not indulge in the discussion of controversial matters.

Mr. GARLAND. I do not want to provoke discussion, but I do want to make some general remarks. One is that the newspapers inform us that the coal miners did not go back to work when their leaders declared the strike off. That, to my mind, is only evidence of this fact—the futility of the United States Government interfering in any arrangement between employer and employee. I simply want to call attention to that fact. I believe it is wrong to try to do it. I believe it never does any good, and there is no evidence that it has ever done any good.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present. The gentleman is condemning the United States Government.

Mr. GARLAND. Oh, no; I am not condemning it. I say it is better, in my estimation, that the Government should not interfere. I am not condemning it, because we have the right——

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will keep within the bounds of the assurance given by the gentleman from Wyoming, I shall not object.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands the gentleman is keeping within the assurance.

Mr. GARLAND. I am simply presenting my idea of whether the United States Government should interfere or not interfere.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the point. I do not think the gentleman ought to discuss a subject that is bound to provoke controversy.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I object to the gentleman making any remarks outside the point of order.

Mr. GARLAND. I object to this discussion. I did not raise any objection to the discussion. In my estimation the proof all shows that if you keep away from the employers and employees in any line—I do not mean any particular strike, but in all lines—in cases of difference they will settle their own affairs. It is much wiser than for the Government to go in, because just so sure as you try to go in there and interfere between the two parties and arrange for a settlement, just so sure you get them both imbued with the belief, and they will try to act on that belief under that arrangement and they will unload the trouble on somebody else. They will say, "We will not have the trouble between ourselves, but we will unload it on the Government," and in consequence it produces much more bitter strife and difference than if the Government were to keep out of it.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired. Under the order, the House stands in recess until 4 o'clock p. m.

Thereupon (at 1 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m.) the House stood in recess until 4 o'clock p. m.

The recess having expired, the House resumed its session.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Sharkey, announced that the President of the United States had approved and signed bills of the following titles:

On November 15, 1919:

H. R. 3844. An act for the relief of Della James.

On November 19, 1919:

H. R. 3143. An act to provide for further educational facilities by authorizing the Secretary of War to sell at reduced rates certain machine tools not in use for Government purposes to trade, technical, and public schools and universities, other recognized educational institutions, and for other purposes;

H. R. 6951. An act authorizing the return to the sender or the forwarding of undeliverable second, third, and fourth class mail matter;

H. R. 10208. An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Tennessee River at or near the city of Decatur, Ala.; and

H. J. Res. 249. Joint resolution to continue the control of imports of dyes and coal-tar products.

Also that bills of the following numbers and titles having been presented to the President of the United States for his approval, and not having been returned by him to the House of Congress in which they originated within the time prescribed by the Constitution of the United States, have become laws without his approval:

Presented to the President November 6, 1919:

S. 2883. An act authorizing the Meridian Highway Bridge Co., a corporation, to construct and maintain a bridge or bridges and approaches thereto across the Missouri River between Yankton County, S. Dak., and Cedar County, Nebr.; and

H. R. 7751. An act authorizing the sale of inherited and unpartitioned allotments for town-site purposes in the Quapaw Agency, Okla.

FINAL ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I desire to announce that the committee appointed to wait on the President and inform him that the House is ready to adjourn unless the President has some further communication to make, have performed that duty.

The President informed us, through his secretary, that he had signed the measures which had been acted upon by the House and were before him, and made no further communication.

Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn sine die.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman moves that the House do now adjourn sine die.

The question being taken; on a division (demanded by Mr. WINGO) there were—ayes 56, noes 5.

Accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 1 minute p. m.) the House adjourned sine die.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the Acting Secretary of War, transmitting a tentative draft of a bill to allow credits and provide relief for certain officers of the Army and others (H. Doc. No. 301); to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed.

2. A letter from the Acting Secretary of War, transmitting supplemental report on the amount of sugar in possession of the War Department (H. Doc. No. 302); to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce and ordered to be printed.

Government Must Require Unions to Purge Themselves of Socialism, Bolshevism, and Anarchy.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. THOMAS L. BLANTON,

OF TEXAS,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Friday, May 23, 1919.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, when my good friend from Massachusetts [Mr. DALLINGER] stated that thousands of our soldiers have been held idle in the camps of this country solely because officers afraid of losing their jobs refused to discharge many worthy cases I agreed with him as far as he went, but suggested another reason why they have been held, to wit, that in Texas and elsewhere Mr. Samuel Gompers, the president and master of the American Federation of Labor, stated that he and organized labor would never stand for war-time wage schedules to be reduced one cent, and that Mr. Gompers's opposition to speedy demobilization had greatly influenced the holding of the boys in the camps of this country.

In the closing hours of the Sixty-fifth Congress I called attention to the fact that our labor unions had permitted socialism and Bolshevism to dominate and use them as cat's-paws, and, regardless of how much and often he preached to the contrary, Mr. Gompers allowed such domination to prevail, and has not purged such organizations of such viciousness. I further called attention to the fact of organized labor's partial war record, and stated that the time had come when Congress must decide whether this Government is to be run in the interests equally of the 110,000,000 people of this Republic or whether it is to be selfishly run by Mr. Gompers in the class interest of the 3,000,000 members of labor unions.

In a speech in Texas I repeated such statements, following which, in a published interview, Mr. Gompers, without a single denial, stated that I "confessed an utter incapacity of understanding the plainest proposition of right, justice, freedom, and democracy."

I have therefore obtained this privilege to extend my remarks in order to more fully elucidate the reason I gave to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DALLINGER].

Comparing Mr. Gompers's democracy with my own, he represents only 3,000,000 people, whose union slogan is "For ourselves only," while I have deeply at heart the welfare and interests equally not only of Mr. Gampers's men but also of the other 107,000,000 people of the United States of America.

The Dallas Central Labor Council, the crafts at Cleburne, Tex., and others have tried to excuse this war record by partial denials, and by calling attention to the fact that some members of unions loyally served in France, and wanting to know where I was, and then asserting that I was busy attending banquets and theater parties.

Union members who during the war profited by raids on the Public Treasury can not hide now behind the patriotism of member soldiers or excuse themselves by beclouding the record. The issue is too vital. The record must be kept straight.

I represent no interests other than the welfare of my constituents generally, and have never received one penny of contribution, campaign or otherwise, from any source. I have many unions in my district, in the cities of Abilene, Baird, Sweetwater, Ballinger, Coleman, Cisco, Ranger, Eastland, Strawn, Mineral Wells, Comanche, Brownwood, Lampasas, Llano, San Saba, Brady, and other places. Nevertheless I have lately paid out of by own pocket nearly a thousand dollars for printing, addressing, and mailing to them these criticisms.

Reared on a farm, having delivered groceries in the back door of practically every home in Austin and, by keeping books at night, earning every dollar expended for five years' training at my State university, I could not be unfriendly to laborers. I heartily favor lawful unions. I heartily favor the labor principles in the peace treaty, namely "Labor is no commodity; association for lawful purposes; adequate wage; 8-hour day and 48-hour week; 1 rest day; abolition of child labor; equal pay for men and women doing work of equal value; equitable economic treatment; and female inspectors." No fair-minded person would demand less or would demand more.

Any system is vicious that destroys individual competitive efficiency and incites lazy, inefficient, indifferent service upheld by force. Every doctor, lawyer, preacher, teacher, farmer, congressman, officer, banker, merchant, and unorganized laborer succeeds only when in honest competition he renders the most efficient service of greatest value to the public. To hold their positions and advance their incomes members of unions have ceased to rely upon individual skill and efficient service, but now collectively depend almost entirely upon Mr. Gompers, force, and anarchy. If unions will abolish strikes, picketing, boycotts, force, disregard of law, and anarchy, I will be their strongest friend, but without such reform I am against them forever and eternally. Now, to correct the record. Unions may boast they have done this or that for the war, but I challenge Mr. Gompers to disprove any of the following well-known facts:

The Railroad Administration certifies that the raises demanded by the four great brotherhoods and granted to the railroad employees by Director McAdoo approximated $754,811,000; that the additional raises later demanded of and granted by Director Hines approximated $67,500,000, aggregating $822,311,000 raises in salaries (during war) to 400,000 employees (far from trenches); that in 1917 passenger conductors received $135 to $165 per month plus overtime, but with the raises they now receive an average of $180 per month plus time and a half for all time they put in over eight hours a day and are granted one day off each week.

Duties of a passenger conductor are not very laborious, unpleasant, or hazardous. Did not the Government require more sacrifice of the soldier to fight on foreign soil, sometimes 24 hours per day in cootie-infested trenches, knee deep in mud, for $33 per month and keep, than it required of the passenger conductor to continue working 8 hours per day 6 days a week during war for $135 to $165, plus overtime, per month? We can not forget the brotherhoods' threat to tie up every railroad in the United States, while in a death struggle we were rescuing the world. No highwayman ever drew a deadlier weapon or made a deadlier threat. No wonder after throwing up his hands and delivering over the $754,811,000 the honest statesman McAdoo resigned. We can not forget the later threat of revolution. No wonder Director Hines handed over the additional $67,500,000. But, alas! this $822,311,000 is paid by the unorganized bleeding public. Has our service improved over 1917? The service is good, bad, or indifferent, just as the employees will it. Employees make the service. Unions furnish the employees. If the service is good, credit unions; if bad, hold unions responsible.

The department certifies that the raises granted to telegraph employees aggregate $3,300,867. Telephone raises are now being determined, yet in Indiana union strikers attempted to chase poor helpless work girls off the roofs of buildings. And telegraphers are now threatening a Nation-wide strike.

While every raise granted to postal employees was justly merited, still could not the demand have waited for peace? Upon criticism being made that it takes an extra day or two longer than necessary for New York mail to reach Washington, Mr. Gompers condemned the whole Postal Service. Who performs the Postal Service? From the time such letters are posted until they are delivered they are handled by members of unions. They are collected, stamped, distributed, bagged, transported, handled, and delivered by unions. If the service is good, the unions deserve the credit. If the service is bad, the unions should be held responsible for it.

During the war unions have forced wage schedules to a maximum of $1.25 per hour plus time and a half for over eight hours, more than the governor of Texas receives, more than circuit judges in Texas receive. Unions accomplished this by striking 6,000 times during the war, each averaging 18 days. The armistice was signed November 11. This is May. Yet several hundred thousand soldiers have been held idle in camps without excuse. Why? Simply because Mr. Gompers threatened in Texas and elsewhere he would not permit any reduction in war-time wage schedules. With Mr. Gompers against speedy demobilization it is easy to understand why thousands of our soldiers have been held absolutely idle in the camps of this country. He said that he and unions would not stand for any reduction. Speedy demobilization would tend to reduce. Therefore there could be no speedy demobilization without disaster to the Republic, if Mr. Gompers's threat meant anything. Yet one county in my district, Runnels, with many of its boys yet in camps, is begging for 1,000 laborers to harvest the wheat. I introduced on the day this Congress met a bill to promptly discharge from the service upon application every man physically fit whose purpose when enlisting was to serve only for the duration of the war. I hope that it will be promptly passed.

Exclusive of all postal and railroad employees elsewhere provided for, unions demanded a blanket bonus of $120 for each of the 240,000 Government clerks. Congress obeyed and granted the $120 bonus but required such clerks to work eight instead of only seven hours per day. Mr. Gompers said it was "damnable," although the eight-hour day was still a plank in the union platform. He demanded its veto. Unions published threats to march on the Capitol and to cripple the Government by walking out. President Wilson sized up the situation and realized that the peril menaced the whole world, hence vetoed the eight hours. These 240,000 clerks, many occupying positions vacated by soldiers and many industrially exempt, took their $120 bonus and continued to work only seven hours. Without such bonus these clerks drew salaries up to $2,500 per year, paid twice a month. Were unions satisfied? They later demanded a blanket $240 bonus for the next year. Congress promptly granted it, giving to each of these 240,000 clerks a $240 bonus, and they still work seven hours. Many receive large salaries from private concerns for work after 5 p. m. They enjoy all the pleasures of Washington, work in comfortable buildings, with ice water and electric fans, are allowed 30 days' vacation on full pay, 30 days additional on a doctor's certificate with full pay, all 52 Sundays, all legal holidays, half Saturdays in summer, and all special occasions; some drive their own automobiles, wear the finest tailored clothes, and own their own homes. And they are now arranging to demand a still larger bonus when Congress meets.

Yet on April 25, 1919, when Maj. Gerow requested some of the clerks in the Zone Finance Division of the War Department to work a little overtime in order to more promptly mail out the little $60 bonus checks granted to soldiers, some of these clerks struck against their Government and walked out and ceased to function when their Government most needed their services.

Last July Gen. Crowder said it would be unnecessary to draft boys, as he was going to make every man either work or fight. Mr. Gompers defied him, threatening that if the "work-or-fight" order was applied to them, unions would not stand it. Gen. Crowder then requested and Congress drafted 670,000 18-year-old boys, costing millions in educational expenses alone.

The Bolshevik Lenin threatens death to captive Americans unless we release Mooney. Unions threaten disastrous strikes if we do not comply.

With other death threats, Lenin from Russia demands Debs's release. Our unions threaten ruinous strikes unless we comply.

Forty-five States have ratified national prohibition. It is a part of the fundamental law of the land; yet our unions threaten a nation-wide strike against our Constitution. A majority of union members are nonusers, yet unions threaten "no liquor no work." Chicago's 175 unions demand that Congress repeal prohibition.

And to avert direful calamity during his enforced absence in Europe, the President has been influenced to ask that of Congress which Congress will never do—repeal any portion of the prohibition laws, which are the result of 40 years' tireless effort.

The Washington school board lately suspended a teacher for teaching Bolshevism in the public schools. Unions are now demanding her reinstatement. The penalty was light, for the board merely suspended such teacher for a week only. If she was teaching Bolshevism to the children of this Nation's Capital, instead of being suspended she should have been discharged.

Since March 11, 1919, unions have paid a horde of barkers $25 per week to picket the Raleigh Hotel, and they stand at each entrance to this hotel and defiantly insult every man, woman, and child who enters by telling them that they are "not decent," as they are patronizing a "scab" hotel.

[News item, Evening Star, Washington, D. C., Apr. 10, 1919.]

PICKET IS FINED $25 ON WOMAN'S CHARGE—MRS. ROUSE RESENTED REMARKS AS SHE WAS LEAVING HOTEL RALEIGH.

Hugh R. Truelove, a newcomer to Washington, making his home at 929 E Street and employed, he says, by the striking waiters as one of the pickets of that organization fighting the Hotel Raleigh, arrested April 7 and charged with making indecent and threatening remarks to patrons of the hotel, was tried and convicted in the District of Columbia branch of the police court to-day and sentenced by Judge John P. McMahon to pay a fine of $25.

The complainant in the case was Mrs. Ethel Rouse, a member of the College Woman's Community at Lutherville, Md., who testified that she, in company with her husband and two girls associated with her in the community work, went to the Hotel Raleigh for lunch, and when leaving the hotel Truelove insulted her and her party by remarking, "Decent people no longer patronize the Hotel Raleigh. If you were decent you would not patronize the hotel."

Truelove in his defense said that he was employed by the striking waiters at $25 a week to stand at the main entrance of the hotel and make certain stereotyped remarks to all patrons of the hotel entering or leaving the building, among those set remarks being the one he was charged with applying to Mrs. Rouse and her friends.

I am informed that these striking waiters, besides their wages paid and wholesome food furnished them by the hotel, received tips from patrons as high as $6 to $8 per day, and that some of them would hardly notice you if you offered them a tip of less than 50 cents. The following is one of the 16 demands made of the hotel by the union:

Steady and extra waiters shall have at each meal the choice of at least one roast, one entree, with an additional fish entree on fast days, also soup, potatoes, one vegetable, coffee, tea, or milk, bread and butter, and one dessert. A wholesome breakfast shall also be served. No one kind of roast or entree may be served more than once in any four consecutive days.

Every good woman who enters this hotel is subjected to insult by having forced in her hand a vicious cartoon card and told she is entering a scab hotel. Unions here have lately so picketed 23 merchants in Washington. Why? Because Americans in the Capital of the American Republic refused to bow to unreasonable autocratic union demands.

The American Federation of Labor has publicly threatened to put out of Congress every Member who has dared to disobey Mr. Gompers. Because duty impelled, I have taken my life, political and otherwise, in my hands by warning my people of existing facts; the Carmen's District Council of Kansas City notified me April 26 that it was urging the brotherhood for the State of Texas to replace me with a friend to unions.

From the four corners of the United States I have filled my wastebasket with anonymous threats apprising me of the innumerable kinds of deaths that will befall me and my family if I ever again open my mouth against unions. One from Altoona, Pa., advised me that the brotherhood would never let me escape, as I had been marked for special suffering. Another from Altoona, in the name of the 10,000 members of the railroad brotherhood there, calls me "a dirty, low-lived, copperheaded, Confederate dog surviving 61–65." Another from Altoona assures me that next year unions will pick a soldier in my district to use in ridding Congress of me. The Fort Worth Record belittles me with irony and ridicule. In defense of unions the Comanche Enterprise threatens me with political destruction and questions my prohibition record, notwithstanding during 20 years I have made several hundred prohibition speeches, have helped to dry numerous Texas counties, and of the Texas delegation in the Sixty-fifth Congress I was the only Congressman who spoke for national prohibition, and numerous prohibition bills were introduced by me.

I have before me a printed application for membership in the International Typographical Union from an unorganized town. It requires the obligation to be sworn to by the applicant before an officer qualified to administer oaths. I copy from said obligation the following:

That my fidelity to the union and my duty to the members thereof shall in no sense be interfered with by any allegiance that I may now or hereafter owe to any other organization, social, political, or religious, secret or otherwise.

Thus union is placed before God and country.

Lately in New York Dr. Scott Nearing publicly urged a bloody revolution against the United States; 3,000 members of various unions, of the most radical type it is true, applauded.

In the Pythian Temple here in Washington on May-day eve, under the auspices of the Fur Workers Union et al., and with Government officers present, bloody revolution against the United States Government was publicly preached and applauded, the red-flag anthem was sung, and the following was embraced in resolutions adopted:

Labor now knows its strength. Labor now makes demands. And these demands are heard; they must be heard, for labor, in its might, has learned to achieve for labor, and labor's word is fast becoming law.

And concerning this meeting on May-day eve the Washington Star said:

The spirit of anarchy, nihilism, Bolshevism, sabotage, and defiance of vested power and authority in Government dominated the assembly.

I realize that many, many, honest, upright, loyal, patriotic, deserving citizens in unions do not approve. Yet the vicious element controls unions. Socialism and Bolshevism are making cat's-paws of unions. The revolutionists of Seattle were members of unions. I. W. W.'s are unbridled unionists, even if they are disowned by Mr. Gompers. Several hundred thousand union men are foreigners and can not speak English. Yet when that little fearless giant, Congressman Burnett, proposed a proper immigration measure to keep anarchists in Europe and Asia, he was sent a deadly bomb through the United States mails.

Does the public longer wonder why we Congressmen hesitate to disobey Mr. Gompers? Has the public ever received a death bomb specially prepared and sent to kill a family? Verily, the tail is wagging the dog. Verily, Mr. Gompers has us all buffaloed. Three million union men organized have under duress and are slave-driving the other 107,000,000 unorganized peoples of the United States.

Newspapers are hog-tied. Not a merchant, banker, lawyer, doctor, preacher, or legislator can open his mouth without an attempt to ruin him. What is the remedy? There is only one. The other 107,000,000 people must organize to properly control unions.

The Dallas Council properly asks where I was during the crisis, but unjustly accuses me of being inattentive to duty and "gloriously entertained with banquets and theater parties." Since war began I have devoted to the cause every moment of my time, every dollar of my salary above a meager living, and every dollar I possessed. I have even sacrificed my home. Since the adjournment of Congress, working both a day shift and a night shift, I have put in from 12 to 16 hours per day trying to alleviate the sufferings of the people of my country. Yet when compared with the sacrifice made by our brave soldiers, both in France and in the camps of this country, I have done nothing.

I have followed the President thus far in everything to win this war, but I can not follow him on the prohibition question and on the labor question.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JAMES C. CANTRILL,

OF KENTUCKY,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Wednesday, May 21, 1919.

Mr. CANTRILL. Mr. Speaker, it gives me genuine pleasure to vote to-day for the proposed amendment to the Federal Constitution which, when ratified by three-fourths of the States of the Union, will confer suffrage on the women of the United States.

If patriotism, intelligence, education, service to the Nation in times of both peace and war are considered requisites for the ballot, then the women of the United States have too long been denied the right of suffrage.

There is no standard by which men are to be measured for their fitness for the ballot which places men in a separate class from women. The time has come in this country when no valid argument can be offered for keeping the women of our country disfranchised, and for myself I am tired of being against a proposition against which I can find no argument.

I am frank to say that several years ago I opposed this amendment, but I came to the conclusion that I was wrong. When I am convinced that I hold a wrong position on any public question I am neither ashamed nor afraid to get on the right

Before war was declared I took an open position giving the right of suffrage to women. The magnificent, efficient, and patriotic stand taken by the women of the United States during the Great War has proven to me that I made no mistake.

When this question was before the House in the Sixty-fifth Congress I voted in favor of it. As a member of the Rules Committee in the last Congress it was my privilege and pleasure to make the motion in the Committee on Rules which brought into the House this identical measure. That motion was adopted in committee, and this House in the Sixty-fifth Congress gave exactly the required vote for the passage of the amendment.

I congratulate the majority side that their first act in a legislative way is to indorse the action of the House in the Sixty-fifth Congress on this measure, and my hope is that you will continue to follow this plan of action.

I am indeed glad that so early in the session you are giving strict heed to advice of the President of the United States as set out in his message read to the House yesterday.

Let us hope that another legislative body in this immediate vicinity has by this time caught the spirit of the new democracy and has been awakened, so that it can keep step with the spirit of the times and very shortly concur in the action which we will take here to-day. Let us hope that a certain Tory element in New England, and that an element in the South dreaming of the past, will shake off the shackles that bind them and take a progressive step in this age which is determined to give justice to all citizens regardless of sex.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. HERBERT C. PELL, JR.,

OF NEW YORK,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Wednesday, May 21, 1919,

On the joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution extending the right of suffrage to women.

Mr. PELL. Mr. Speaker, I am not afraid of woman suffrage. I have only to look at any book of statistics to see that many more girls than boys are getting a reasonable education, and I am sure that the introduction of women voters throughout the country will result in an improved electorate and the more intelligent and serious conduct of politics in the country at large.

The stock argument against woman suffrage has been that it would have an injurious effect on the womanhood of the Nation. I know that politics in New York is conducted on a higher plane than that, and I am certain that American women have sufficient character to preserve their virtue even in the fascinating atmosphere of a polling place. Moreover, the domestic virtues, which the opponents of suffrage extol so highly, will be a great source of strength in the fight against the forces of Bolshevist socialism, which I consider to be the greatest affair of the present moment.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. WARREN GARD,

OF OHIO,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Wednesday, May 21, 1919,

On the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 1) proposing an amendment to the Constitution extending the right of suffrage to women.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, owing to the parliamentary situation created by the calling up of this resolution (H. J. Res. 1) proposing an amendment to the Constitution extending the right of suffrage to women for consideration on Calendar Wednesday, under the rules of the House of Representatives there was allowed but one hour upon each side of the question for general debate, and therefore I have asked and obtained leave to extend my remarks upon this question in the RECORD to publish my reasons under the law for my vote.

Amendments to our basic charter of government, that great Constitution, in whose light all legislation must be considered, should only be made when it is apparent that a necessity imperative for the general good exists and the balancing of governmental powers be preserved.

To the most important question of extending suffrage to women by amending the Federal Constitution I have given my best efforts in investigation and consideration, and have voted my honest conviction after much study and careful deliberation.

My vote has been cast each time against the proposition of amending the Constitution, although upon each of the several times in which an amendment giving full and complete suffrage to women was submitted to the electors of the State of Ohio I as an elector in that State have always voted in favor of so extending the privilege of suffrage to the women citizens thereof.

There can be no question but that the framers of this Government, which has now grown to be the greatest and best in all the world, determined that the question of the qualifications of the elector shall be reposed in the several States, as is evidenced by Article I, section 2:

* * * and the electors in each State shall have the qualifications requisite for electors of the most numerous branch of the State legislature.

There never has been, and in the good order of things there can never be, what might be called universal suffrage, for that would include all, no matter of what age or intellectual capacity, and in the determination of what the electorate shall consist the time-tried method prescribed by the Constitution has been so beneficial that our country has grown from a handful of States along the eastern seaboard to a great Union of States reaching from ocean to ocean.

Each of these States prescribes in its own wisdom the qualifications of its electors, and in reference to the people of Ohio I have agreed with the proponents of suffrage resolutions, because I believe the women of Ohio are qualified to exercise in the very best way the elective franchise.

But what is true in Ohio might not be true in other States of this Union, and in the wise distribution of power under our system of government it is for them to act upon the things granted for their exclusive determination.

Pennsylvania, New York, Ohio, all have problems affecting the electorate which Maine, Mississippi, or Iowa may not have; indeed, in no two States in the American Union would the same problems be presented regarding the qualifications of the electorate.

One of the very recent adjudications of the Supreme Court of the United States upon questions of suffrage is found in a case of Guinn v. United States (238 U. S. Repts., p. 347), in which Chief Justice White, in rendering his opinion, on page 362 says:

(a) Beyond doubt the amendment (fifteenth) does not take away from the State governments in a general sense the power over suffrage, which has belonged to those governments from the beginning, and without the possession of which powers the whole fabric upon which the division of State and National authority under the Constitution and the organization of both governments rested, would be without support, and both the authority of the Nation and the State would fall to the ground. In fact, the very command of the amendment recognizes the possession of the general power by the States, since the amendment seeks to regulate its exercise as to the particular object with which it deals.

A most excellent statement concerning suffrage is contained in Jameson on Constitutional Conventions, paragraphs 336 and 337:

Which, then, is the true theory of the suffrage? Is its exercise that of a natural right, or is it merely the performance of a duty resting simply upon positive law? The answer to this question can be based only upon presumptions, and, judging by them, suffrage is not a natural right. In the first place, there is the presumption arising from the fact that no political community has ever existed in which the right to vote has been conceded to be the natural right of all the citizens. * * * In the second place, there never has been an instance, it is believed, in which a State, whatever its theories of the suffrage may have been, has not somewhere drawn a line of exclusion from its actual exercise, and drawn it, too, above the point which marks the extreme limit of practicability. * * * Finally, suffrage, considered as a natural right, would be universal suffrage, and universal suffrage is an utter impracticability.

Suffrage is not a right at all; it is a duty, a trust enjoined upon all committed to some citizens and not to others. The only rights connected with the exercise of the suffrage are first, the right of the Commonwealth, the collective body, to be administered, for good or for evil, by the electors, to determine who those electors shall be; secondly, the right of every citizen, without distinction, derived to him through the Commonwealth, to be fairly and adequately represented by the electors.

The substance of this doctrine is adhered to in a late work of Hoar on The State Convention.

The reservation of powers by the United States over the several States is contained in section 4 of Article IV of the Constitution of the United States:

SEC. 4. The United States shall guarantee to every State in this Union a republican form of Government, and shall protect each of them against invasion; and on application of the legislature or of the executive (when the legislature can not be convened) against domestic violence.

This section has been construed and maintained by the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of Pacific States Telephone & Telegraph Co. v. Oregon (223 U. S., 118).

These legal propositions show the way in which suffrage for women has been established by the electors of the several States within those States, and convince me that it is not wise to so amend the Federal Constitution as to permit it to assume authority over matters committed to the several States, and of which the individual State must be the better judge.

Questions affecting marriage and divorce, the elective franchise, negotiable instruments, control of the public education of children—these and all other matters of local self-government are maintained in the States under "that wholesome distribution of powers established by the Constitution."

Under the present authority there may be established within each State an electorate, male and female, which will acknowledge its duty of service to State and Nation by giving its loyal and intelligent assistance toward the maintenance of our democratic-republican form of representative government.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. WILLIAM C. LANKFORD,

OF GEORGIA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Wednesday, May 21, 1919,

On the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 1) proposing an amendment to the Constitution extending the right of suffrage to women.

Mr. LANKFORD. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House of Representatives, I am not bitterly opposed to woman suffrage. In fact, if I were convinced that the majority of the good women of my State, who constitute our working women, our teachers, our nurses, our sweethearts, our wives, and our mothers, desired the ballot, I would gladly say, "Let them have it." Some of the best women of my State and district want suffrage, but I am persuaded that the majority do not care for it at this time.

It is natural for the human family to want to do something to better itself.

Individuals desire to help their race, their homeland, their families, and themselves.

We all want to leave our imprint for good on the pages of history. We want to leave our footprints on the sands of time, and we desire that those footprints indicate that we were struggling onward in the great battle for the right. We want to do our bit for humanity.

Many women think they can best do this by the ballot. Many believe they can best serve the race in a thousand other ways and do not care for the ballot.

Most of the good women of my State honestly believe that the home is the foundation of civilization and that our Nation can never be greater than our homes. "Be it ever so humble, there is no place like home," and there is no woman so great as the woman who truly graces and makes sweet a home, be that home a palace or a cottage.

The builders of our homes are builders of our Nation. The truly great women of our country are the good women who help build our homes. Ofttimes they live out in the country or in humble homes in the city, wear the good old-fashioned homespun apron and bonnet, and give all that they are or ever hope to be to rearing sons to be good citizens, or, if need be, brave soldiers, and daughters to be good wives and excellent mothers.

Such noble mothers may never be known in society. They may never have their pictures in a Sunday paper or their names mentioned among the fashionable set. What matters that with them? They are the salt of the earth. Without them our Nation would never have been established and without them our civilization would perish from the face of the earth.

Man is not truly great because he votes, gains political prestige, or accumulates wealth; but he is great, if at all, because he renders a service to some one, and no nobler service can be rendered than by rearing a family of noble and sweet daughters to help and bless mankind.

If our Government could only build statues to all the great men and women, living and dead, of our Nation—statues to our noble, sacrificing fathers and mothers—would not this great Nation of ours be a fairyland of most excellent monuments? There would be a statue for every mile of every line of railroad to the men who drive the locomotives, to the men who built them and keep them in repair, to the men who made the track, to the men who operate the trains, to the men who mine the coal, and the men who made the freight hauled along those highways of steel for the good of humanity. There would be a statue in every shop, in every store, in every office, and wherever men labor for wife and children and loved ones. Monuments would beautify every home, every farm, every school yard, and every church.

If we would honor the truly great, we should honor the fathers and mothers of our land who build our homes, preserve our Nation, and save our civilization.

The greatest women of all times and of every country are our mothers, who are willing at all times to make any sacrifice for their children and their homes. They and theirs have brought about every great reform, have filled every position of trust since the beginning of time, have gained every battle ever won for the right, have caused every joy that humanity has ever felt, have sweetened every smile that ever brightened human countenance, and have made of this earth a heaven. No wonder God built for them and theirs a home—"a house not made with hands eternal and in the heavens."

Why should our mothers want to vote?

I am convinced that in the good old State of Georgia most of them do not.

If the majority of the good women of my State wanted the ballot and the legislature of my State said, "Let them have it," I would not say, "No."

Woman can never by the ballot become purer, sweeter, and nobler than she is. The ballot can never make more honorable the noble work of our pure, sweet women in every walk of life—in shop, in store, in office, in schoolroom, in church, and wherever sympathy, love, and noble work are worth while.

The ballot can never make nobler the sacrifice of our nurses, who in times of peace and war, ofttimes at the risk of their lives, care for the sick and dying.

The ballot can never sweeten a mother's love, for it is perfection itself. It is said that once upon a time an angel came from heaven to earth in quest of things we mortals love. While here he sought for three of the sweetest and most beautiful things of earth to take to heaven. He looked in a garden and saw a beautiful rose, and said, "Surely, this is one of the sweetest and most beautiful of earth's plant life. I will take the rose." He then looked a little farther and saw a beautiful babe in a cradle, and said, "This is the most beautiful of animal life. I will take the innocent babe." He then said, "What shall I take for the third?" But he looked and saw the mother close by the cradle, and saw a mother's love beaming from a mother's face down upon a mother's baby, and then he said, "There is nothing so beautiful and sweet as a mother's love. I will take a mother's love to heaven." So he flew away with the rose, the baby, and a mother's love. When he reached the gates of heaven he paused, before entering, to again look at the rose, the babe, and a mother's love. The rose had withered, died, and fallen to pieces. The babe had died in passing through space, but the mother's love was as pure, as beautiful, and as sweet as ever. So the angel found that a mother's love is the only thing on earth pure enough, beautiful enough, and sweet enough to last from earth to heaven.

The ballot can never make purer, more beautiful, and sweeter a mother's love.

Woman can never, by the ballot, become more than noble, sweet woman, filled with love and sympathy for all that is highest, noblest, and best.

I do not believe the ballot will degrade woman; I know that it can never make her better.

Woman can not get much real happiness out of the ballot. Her mission in life is one of service, of sacrifice, of sympathy, and of love.

The only great joy that comes to any of us is that which comes from sacrifice, from service, and from missions of sympathy and love.

In order that the good ladies may understand what I mean, let them put my idea to the test. When they go to vote let them on their way, either to the balloting place or on their return, go by the home of some poor old man, woman, or crippled child, and render a real service to some one at the house of the suffering, whether that service be a few flowers, a smile and a kind word, or other service, and then tell me from whence comes the greater joy—whether from the exercise of the ballot or by exercising the God-given, God-blessed privilege of service.

Our women will not be able to better themselves much, if any, by the ballot.

The women of my State are absolutely protected by the laws made and administered by their sons, and in the trial of a case in court invariably have decidedly the advantage over a man. All laws and all our manhood stand for their protection.

Sometimes the men of my State and of the South even go so far as to deal out, without trial, summary punishment to the individual who does a serious injury to one of our daughters.

It is true they go beyond the law and become criminals themselves to avenge the wrong. Life becomes unbearable to the man whose daughter or neighbor's daughter has been outraged so long as there breathes the one who wantonly committed the outrage. The father and his neighbors are pushed onward to vengeance by a never-ceasing, ever-increasing, irresistible agony of an outraged love which sweeps everything aside. There is no fear of law or death or hell. Vengeance is theirs, and the outrage of their loved one must be avenged. They are as helpless to turn aside from their mission of dealing out justice, without regard to law and order, as a handful of leaves of the forest would be of themselves to turn aside from the mighty rush of Niagara.

We do not sanction and approve the disregard of law. We must admire the great love of womanhood which prompts and compels the action.

The women of my State, and I believe of all other States, fear no violence unavenged so long as there lives within our bounds the lover of a sweetheart, the brother of a sister, the husband of a wife, the father of a daughter, or the son of a mother.

The ballot will never make woman more secure in the enjoyment of life and property. Her own virtue and the love of man for her are her security.

Woman suffrage is coming, and that speedily. I believe the present measure will pass both Houses of Congress and probably be ratified. I can not vote for it, though, for I believe this question should be settled by each State. Congress should not force this measure on the people of Georgia or any other State. I do not believe a majority of my people are ready for woman suffrage, neither do I believe a majority of the best women of my district and State want it. I believe that the people of my State should settle this question for my State and her people. The people of Georgia should say how her elections shall be held and who shall vote in them. I object to the Federal Government interfering in the matter, and I shall cast no vote to authorize any such interference.

It is dangerous and strikes at the very foundation of the right of the States to manage their own affairs. There is a tendency to centralize everything in Washington and do away with the capitols of our States. The time will come, if the Federal Government continues to encroach on the rights of the States to settle their own affairs, when our States will need no legislatures, for all our laws will be made here and administered in the Federal courts. Our State and county lines are being blotted out. The people of each county are slowly but surely losing their rights. The States are gradually becoming States in name only. For my part I shall oppose the woman-suffrage resolution now pending in Congress, for my people should settle the issue for Georgia and Georgians.

The question should not be settled for my people by people who have never seen Georgia and never will and who are not familiar with conditions existing there.

When the people of my State are ready for woman suffrage and want it, I shall gladly say, "Let them have it," but I can not say so until then.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. EDWARD S. BROOKS,

OF PENNSYLVANIA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Wednesday, May 21, 1919,

On the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 1) proposing an amendment to the Constitution extending the right of suffrage to women.

Mr. BROOKS of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, each time we amend the Constitution of the United States we sink the ax into the roots of the foundation of the greatest Nation on earth, and I therefore feel that we should hesitate a long time and be fully satisfied that the amendment is necessary. Necessity is the only cause for which this sacred document can be amended; the mere claim that it is wanted by the women or it will be a political advantage is not a lawful reason. What I may think personally is not enough reason.

I have the highest regard for the wishes and welfare of the mothers and daughters of our country. I favor all sound legislation that is helpful to them. To-day they receive the most careful consideration and favor in law and equity cases, and courtesy is always extended to them by gentlemen. We honor them; we respect them; we love them more than we love ourselves, and we sacrifice continually for them. Personally I should be sorry to oblige them to go to the polls, to do jury duty, and the many other things which go with the privilege and duty of suffrage.

The only people in my district who have expressed themselves to me as favoring woman suffrage are the few women who are agitating the question. Many with whom I have spoken on the question are opposed to it, and the others entirely disinterested. But when the people of my district demonstrate to me that they desire woman suffrage, and when I am convinced that woman suffrage is necessary, as the Constitution unmistakably requires, I shall be glad to do my duty to my district and my country by casting my vote in Congress for it.

Woman Suffrage.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. ISRAEL M. FOSTER,
OF OHIO,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Wednesday, May 21, 1919.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, any new Member, I presume, hesitates to remark on even so important a measure as this during his first week in this historic body. I am quite sure I do. Scarcely have I taken the oath of office as Congressman from the famous tenth Ohio district until I am confronted with what I consider the greatest question that will come before this Congress for our consideration. No greater reform has ever been proposed. In Ohio it will right a long-standing wrong done one-half of our entire population. Were it not for the fact that I have availed myself of both the privilege and honor, during three campaigns in Ohio, to urge this reform from the stump as well as by my ballot, I would not presume even to extend these few remarks in the RECORD.

In these days of extreme governmental stress, public servants such as we should be willing to give the reason for the faith that is in us, though in a humble way. I am for this constitutional amendment because it seeks to do but simple justice. It is right. May I be pardoned for saying that I was not a little amazed to hear the distinguished gentleman from Florida [Mr. CLARK], who leads the opposition to this resolution, say that he believed the home the proper place for woman? His statement at once recalled to my mind an incident which happened at an Ohio insane hospital some years ago. A bereaved husband was visiting his demented wife and in talking to her ward physician said, "Doctor, I can not understand how my wife ever went insane, because she has hardly been out of her kitchen for the past seven years."

While woman is properly in the home, how about woman in the public-school room? How about woman in the Sunday-school room? How about woman in the Red Cross? How about woman in the Salvation Army? Are they not proper activities for our mothers, wives, and daughters? Why, gentlemen of the House, we intrust our children to them for educational purposes. We intrust our children to them for moral training. What would happen if the good women of this country should withdraw all their activities from the Sunday school and the church? At my little home town in Ohio, as throughout our land, the good women of the Red Cross are still each day meeting soldier trains with both provisions and cheer. Is it possible that the distinguished gentleman from Florida wishes all of these noble callings abandoned by the women of America in favor of the home alone? Then, if these activities are proper, and the women are properly equipped mentally and morally for them, on what ground shall we strutting men deny them the right to have a part in deciding the problems vitally affecting the home as well as the State? While this very discussion is in progress the good women of the city of Washington are selling Salvation Army doughnuts to further that great cause. In Ohio we are telling our women they may vote for school-board members, but on great problems such as prohibition, food regulation, and child welfare—questions which vitally affect every home—they are denied the ballot. Why do the women of England, Belgium, Sweden, and Denmark have greater voting privileges than the women of Ohio? It is indeed time that we catch the spirit of the times and move ahead.

Athens County, Ohio, honored me for eight years with the office of prosecuting attorney. My experiences in that office taught me that more than 95 per cent of our crime was committed by the men. Yet this criminal-breeding 95 per cent class would deny equal suffrage to the law-abiding 5 per cent class. It is rank inconsistency. It is wrong. We now and here have an opportunity to help correct it. For one I deem it a great honor to be able to assist. There is, in my humble judgment, but one way to right this great wrong. Extend at the earliest possible time equal suffrage to this law-abiding, home-loving, soldier-producing half of our population. This right has already been denied too long. When the right is granted, then it becomes their problem whether they shall vote. When this reform shall have been accomplished, and not until then, can we Americans truthfully say that ours is a country of, by, and for the whole people. In line with the sentiment expressed by the distinguished former Speaker [Mr. CLARK], do we not believe that our mothers, our wives, and our daughters average, in both intelligence and morality, at least as high as the average of our men? I do. It is woman's right to be allowed to help select the officers and help make the laws under which she shall live as an American citizen. Our children and our children's children will wonder with amazement why we so seriously debated this great act of simple justice. Let us do our duty as men. Let us support the resolution. Generations yet unborn will approve the act.

The Woman Suffrage Constitutional Amendment.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. HENRY Z. OSBORNE.
OF CALIFORNIA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Wednesday, May 21, 1919.

On the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 1) proposing an amendment to the Constitution extending the right of suffrage to women.

Mr. OSBORNE. Mr. Speaker, I shall enter into no argument as to the justice of woman suffrage, as that has been fully covered by preceding speakers. Indeed, I do not recall a single instance in this debate where Members of this House opposing this joint resolution have advanced the theory that it is unjust. The justice of woman suffrage is generally recognized, and no logical argument can be made against it. The only approach to an argument is that which asserts that women can not perform all the duties of citizenship—having reference to the fact that they can not become soldiers. It is assumed that women could possibly vote the country into war, while they would be exempt from military service. The probabilities are strongly against such a theory, it being far more likely that women would vote to avoid war where men would feel that there was sufficient justification for it.

This argument has no more force than one that would disfranchise men who might be over the military age or disqualified for military service on account of physical disability. No one would think of disfranchising men because they were lame or over 45 years of age; yet that would be as reasonable as to disfranchise women because they are disqualified to become soldiers.

The only other argument made against this joint resolution is that the States alone have the right to enfranchise women and the National Government has no rights in connection with the voting franchise. Yet under the fifteenth amendment to the Constitution, declaring that "the right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any State on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude," the black men were enfranchised. The joint resolution here under discussion goes no further for the women of the country than the fifteenth amendment did for our negro citizens.

My purpose is not to argue the merits of the question, but to give some idea of the practical working of woman suffrage in my own State of California, where it has been in operation several years.

It was the idea of many of the opponents of woman suffrage that one of its results would be a general demoralizing of woman, especially those who might take an active part in politics; that it would coarsen them, and a class of women would develop that would take the place, on the feminine side, of the ward politicians and "heelers" and hangers-on around the polls of our large cities. Such anticipations have entirely failed of realization. There are no women "hangers-on" around the polls on election days. The political duties of women are performed in much the same womanly way as they perform other duties. Out of deference to women the polling places are usually more comfortably and attractively located than before; that is, not in livery stables, uncomfortable tents, and so forth. Usually about half the election officers are women, with the result that a wholesome decorum has replaced the loud talk and boisterous conduct which formerly prevailed at the polls. Often men accompany their wives to the polls, and it is not unusual to see a young matron wheel a baby carriage to the polling place and leave it in a shady place outside while she goes in to vote. I do not remember ever having seen a woman "worker" about the polls soliciting votes, though I have occasionally seen women modestly passing out tickets or printed matter for some cause in which they were interested, usually of an improving and reformatory character.

So far as candidates and nominees for office are concerned, I believe that they are called upon to do a little more work than formerly. Women take their duties as voters seriously, and in order to hear what candidates have to say for themselves and the cause they represent, they arrange "neighborhood meetings" in private houses, where the women gather from a given neighborhood, with a sprinkling of men. These meetings often have quite a festal and social air, with illumination of the grounds and Japanese lanterns hanging from the trees and shrubbery. It tests a candidate's nerve to attend and address a half dozen such meetings of feminine audiences in an evening, with perhaps a meeting or two in purely masculine surroundings "down town." It is not to be supposed that the women who attend these meetings are the severe-faced and blue-stockinged kind usually associated in the uninformed mind with the idea of women interested in politics. On the contrary, they are usually the best of women, wholesome and sweet-minded matrons and young ladies, forming the most attentive and appreciative audiences that a public man could address.

Usually candidates have committees of women to cooperate and assist the regular committees of men. Most of the women members do not take an active part, but permit their names to be used on committees for candidates whom they believe to be specially worthy. This is not always so. Some women take an active and effective part in the campaigns. In my own city of Los Angeles we have a considerable number of able and noble women who take an active and unselfish interest in politics, among whom is scarcely one who has ever been a candidate for public office on her own account. This is not because they are not capable, for they are remarkably so. They would adorn any place in public life to which they might be chosen. Among these splendid California women are Mrs. Clara Shortridge Foltz, an able attorney, the only daughter in a brilliant family of men and a pioneer in the woman-suffrage movement in California; Mrs. Frank A. Gibson, mother of the young diplomat, Hugh S. Gibson, whose work in Belgium is a part of the history of the war; Mrs. Florence Collins Porter, a distinguished writer and publicist; Mrs. Elijah Evans Cowles; Miss Mary Foy; Mrs. O. P. Clark; Mrs. A. S. Lobingier; Mrs. Emma Livingston Reed; Mrs. H. W. R. Strong; Mrs. R. W. Richardson; Mrs. Shelly Tolhurst; Mrs. Willoughby Rodman; Mrs. Alice Moore McComas; and many others of little or no less distinction.

It is a great mistake to suppose that woman suffrage has the effect of depriving womanhood of any of its charms. It brings out many mental qualities in some that might otherwise not have been developed; it brings a decisively human and humane quality into practical politics, and it is an act of elemental justice to one-half the citizenship of the United States.

It is a distinct satisfaction to me to vote the second time for the woman-suffrage constitutional amendment.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. RUFUS HARDY,

OF TEXAS,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Wednesday, May 21, 1919.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks, heretofore granted, I ask to insert in the RECORD a letter from Mrs. A. C. Sloan and my reply thereto as published in my home paper, the Corsicana Daily Sun, May 15, 1919, as follows:

[From the Corsicana Daily Sun, Thursday, May 15, 1919.]

JUDGE HARDY FOR AMENDMENT—SETS FORTH REASONS IN REPLY TO NOTE FROM MRS. SLOAN.

Just before departing for Washington Judge HARDY received the following:

CORSICANA, May 10, 1919.

HON. RUFUS HARDY,
Corsicana, Tex.

DEAR SIR: In asking you some weeks ago to open our campaign for the adoption of the suffrage amendment we had in mind that that phase of our campaign should not be opened until within two weeks of the election. Now that you are soon to leave for Washington, we find it impossible to arrange a date for properly presenting your address to the public. In view of this fact, we feel that you can reach more voters by a written address, which we can scatter over our district and print in the leading Texas papers in this short time, than by a spoken address.

We will appreciate such an article from your pen very much, and thank you in advance for your cooperation and willingness to help us.

Respectfully,

MRS. A. C. SLOAN,
MISS HELEN ROBBINS,
ADELINA STUART WATT,
Committee.

To this Judge HARDY replied as follows:

MRS. A. C. SLOAN,
Corsicana, Tex.

DEAR MRS. SLOAN: I very earnestly thank you for the opportunity which your letter just received gives me to redeem a pledge which I made last summer to help secure the right of suffrage to the women of Texas through the adoption by Texas of an amendment to our State constitution.

If my standing as a Democrat and a lover of my kind and country, my reputation for the sincerity of my public utterances, and the reasons I give for the stand I take on this question shall have any weight with my fellow men I shall be very proud of that fact. You will note that my appeal is to my fellow men to grant a right to women, a right which I know hundreds of thousands of women in Texas are asking to have granted them.

The first question a just man asks himself is, "Is it a right?" It seems so to me:

First. Because a woman pays taxes just as men do.

Second. Because she has the same interest in the welfare of our country that men have.

Third. Because hundreds of thousands of women have more intelligence and more interest and more at stake in our country than hundreds of thousands of men who do vote.

Fourth. Because woman bears as many and as heavy burdens as does the man, though some of his burdens are not hers and some of her burdens are not his. If the man sows and reaps and the woman spins and weaves; if the man bears the musket and the woman bears and nurses the man, whose burden is the heavier?

The ballot in organized society is the weapon of the voter, given him for his protection and security and the preservation of his rights. More and more women are becoming substantial property owners in their own right. They need the ballot for its protection.

More and more women are becoming wage earners. Having the ballot will help them secure equal pay for equal service. Thousands of women must not only, unaided, earn their own living, but must sustain helpless dependents. These women work in the factories, on the farms, in the schools, in offices, in department stores, in Government service. To be frank, if every woman had a good husband or brother or father to protect and shelter and represent her, I would not favor woman suffrage; but I absolutely know there are in the State of Texas thousands upon thousands of such women as I have just described. They are unprotected; they bear burdens; they pay taxes without representation, and their number is increasing every year. We men have failed to furnish the shelter which our proud chivalry once boasted we gave our women. It may not be our fault. Most of us do our best, but the facts remain as I have stated them. And selfish men have always crushed the weak and despoiled the helpless.

Nature made man the stronger and therefore better able to endure hardships, and that seems to me a strong reason for giving to woman at least every weapon we give to man for his protection.

Hon. Carrol D. Wright, national commissioner of labor, has said: "The lack of direct political influence constitutes a powerful reason why women's wages have been kept at a minimum." Low wages is not the only injustice the working women of America suffer. In our large cities they are too often housed in homes that are dangerous fire traps and breeders of disease and crime. I visited once a great plant for the manufacture of men's underwear. The manager told me there were 2,800 workers there, of whom 2,500 were girls and women, and I saw these workers busy. I was told that a city election had just been held and that these women had gone out among the men, having no votes themselves, and helped to defeat a notoriously vicious candidate for city alderman, who was the owner of a great number of these disease-breeding, vice-breeding fire traps in which they were compelled to live. That visit and that story, which I have only hinted at, had much to do in fixing my position on woman suffrage.

For the working women especially, who are numbered now by hundreds of thousands and will soon be numbered by millions, I want Texas to give the ballot to woman for her protection.

The great objection that is raised, that I think I myself have raised in times past, is that we do not want our women folks busying themselves in public affairs and mingling with and arguing with men, trying to persuade them. That argument comes with poor grace now, after we urged them on and praised them in every activity connected with the Great War. From the hospital to the firing line every work of mercy and healing has been woman's. She has mingled with men who were her kindred, men who were her friends, men who were strangers. Where she could serve she has gone, and we are proud of her.

I do not like a ranting woman, seeking the glare of the limelight, but the woman loving her country, studying its welfare, bearing her part of its burdens, sharing more than her part of its sorrows, may be just as gentle, just as sweet, just as pure when she walks to the polls and deposits her ballot as she is when she cares for the sick, when she teaches in our schools, clerks in our stores, toils in our factories and fields, as many of them do, or when she nurses her own little children. More or less, woman has always sought to influence public affairs, sometimes in times past in glittering courts by arts and blandishments not always creditable. The ballot is the most legitimate and clean way, it is the quietest, easiest, and most dignified way, in which she can influence public affairs, and her direct participation in public affairs will make her more broad-minded, and practical, and wiser, and stronger. Certainly her presence at the polls will not lower or harm the man who is there. I am of the old school and believe that woman's greatest beauty and strength lie in her gentleness and purity, but I can not see how my wife's walking with me or with her son to the polling place and casting her ballot can make her less pure or gentle, or how, when I am gone, she will be less a gentlewoman if she walks beside any gentleman to the voting place.

I can remember when men and women did not sit together in country churches, and when our women rarely left home except to go to church. That time is past. I have heard speeches that a lady could not hear, but it is many a year since I have heard a candidate for office make a speech he could not make in his mother's presence. Our women now habitually attend political speakings, and the speakers are glad to have them. The simple, plain truth is that no woman will be offended or harmed in any way by visiting the polls and casting her ballot, because gentlemen will not permit her to be harmed or offended. I admit that the intelligent participation of women in public affairs will make them less helpless and dependent. It will broaden their sympathies and vision, give them more strength of character, and make them mothers of stronger, abler men. Weak men and strong men, rich men and poor men, capitalists and laborers vote because they have interests and rights affected, must bear the burdens imposed, and obey the laws made by government, and they are entitled to be represented in the Government. There are several hundred thousand women in Texas who pay taxes, obey laws, and bear burdens without representation.

Ours is a representative Government. Every law-governed person not an idiot, lunatic, or criminal has a right to be represented in lawmaking. Minors are represented by their parents or guardians; men by their votes choose representatives; but law-governed, tax-paying, burden-bearing women are not represented. Antisuffragists claim that women are already represented by their husbands, fathers, and brothers. This so-called representation bears no proportion to number. One man has a wife, a widowed mother, unmarried sisters and daughters. Does his one vote fairly represent him and all these women, while his bachelor friend, without a female relative in the world, casts an equal vote? Moreover, millions of toiling and taxpaying, law-governed women have no father, husband, or brother. If ours is in truth a representative Government, these women must vote.

There is just one more thought I hope my Democratic brethren will bear in mind. This reform is on the way; it is surely coming. Such reasons as I have given have already enlisted the support of the greatest leaders in all parties. Mr. Wilson, Mr. Hughes, Mr. Roosevelt, all supported it. No party in the future which hopes to win will ever name a man for President who opposes it. A reform rooted in justice, fairness, and equity, a reform that grips the hearts of millions and millions more every year of men and women everywhere, heeds no forms and brooks no barriers. If we fail to grant it by State action it will break down the barriers of the States and destroy the strongest safeguard we have of local self-government—the right of the States individually to determine the qualifications of electors. I have anxiously watched the encroachments of the Federal Government upon the reserved rights of the States. I do not want to see Federal inspectors and supervisors holding our State elections or Federal courts deciding them. If the Federal Government shall determine this question of suffrage for the States, who can prophesy what rule or principle may not be invoked hereafter for further encroachment upon the reserved rights and powers of the States?

And then I want the women of Texas when they do vote, as vote they will, to know and feel that it was the love and respect for them of their own sons that gave them the right and not the will of the people beyond our border. The right will be the same, and Texas women will not prize it less because it is the gift of Texas.

Sincerely, yours, RUFUS HARDY.

Our Brave and Gallant American Soldiers Are Justly Entitled to Have the German Cannon Captured by Them on the Battle Fronts of France Donated to Their Home Counties as Permanent Trophies of Their Matchless Prowess.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. THOMAS L. BLANTON,

OF TEXAS,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Friday, May 30, 1919.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, some newspapers and some citizens unthoughtedly and impulsively have criticized Members of Congress for introducing bills to donate captured German cannon to the home counties of our soldiers. With ridicule some newspapers have asserted that even if such a distribution were considered by Congress, it would be impossible to donate more than a few to each State.

For the information of such newspapers I quote from a letter written on May 26, 1919, by Hon. JULIUS KAHN, chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs in the House of Representatives, who has just returned from an extensive inspection of the military situation in Europe, the following:

I have your letter inclosing the copies of the bills referring to the distribution of captured or surrendered German cannon, and shall be glad to take up the matter with the Committee on Military Affairs after the military appropriation bill is out of the way.

I may add that while I was in Europe I found that we hold about 4,000 guns of this character and about 20,000 German machine guns and minnenwerfers.

Of course, the demand for these pieces of ordnance is going to be very great and there will have to be formulated some plan for an equitable distribution. Personally I feel that they should be turned over to the various States and other political divisions of our country.

I believe they will serve to stimulate the patriotic enthusiasm of our people. I am afraid the latter will never fully realize the great heroism of the men who fought in our Army in this war. The presence of these relics in their various communities will have a most beneficial effect, in my opinion, upon our citizens, and I shall certainly favor legislation for the proper distribution of these trophies.

While I have not been able to consult my fellow committeemen, I feel sure that they feel as I do in this matter.

Very sincerely, yours, JULIUS KAHN.

Thus through definite, specific information we see that there will be distributed by Congress 24,000 pieces of this captured or surrendered German ordnance, and if prorated equally to the 48 States would give the State of Texas 500 of such pieces, and if Texas should distribute her 500 pieces equally among the 18 congressional districts the seventeenth congressional district of Texas, which I have the honor to represent, would receive 27 of such captured guns.

Therefore I presume it will no longer be contended that I was either foolish or unreasonable in requesting proper legislation to donate one piece of this captured German ordnance to each of my 19 counties, namely, Nolan, Taylor, Jones, Shackelford, Callahan, Stephens, Palo Pinto, Eastland, Comanche, Brown, Mills, Lampasas, Llano, Burnet, San Saba, McCulloch, Concho, Runnels, and Coleman. Each of these counties had brave sons who sacrificed on the battle fronts of France. Where is the soldier who does not prize highly the captured pistol, bayonet, helmet, gas mask, and other accouterments of war which our Government permits him to proudly carry back with him to his home, to become treasured heirlooms of the family? And so his home county should possess the larger war engines captured through the combined efforts of squads, companies, and regiments.

In the hold of every returning transport, unfitted for use by soldiers, there will be ample room to bring back these guns with only nominal expense, and they can be so distributed with no very great cost to the Government. Would our criticizing newspaper friends have us sell these valuable trophies for a nominal sum as scrap iron? That would be the alternative.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. EDWARD J. KING,
OF ILLINOIS,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Wednesday, May 28, 1919.

Mr. KING. Mr. Speaker, under the leave granted to me to extend my remarks in the RECORD I include some correspondence with Gen. March in reference to demobilization matters of material interest to Members of the House.

The matter above referred to is as follows:

MAY 15, 1919.

Gen. PEYTON C. MARCH,
Chief of Staff United States Army,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR GEN. MARCH: As I am swamped with affidavits, letters, and telegrams in regard to requesting special discharges in France, I appeal to you for assistance.

Would you be kind enough to send me a letter which I can use for publicity purposes, explaining the rapid demobilization of the Army, the rate at which the boys are returning from abroad, the futility of asking releases on minor reasons, and similar subjects?

Literally hundreds of farmers in my district are anxious to have their boys home at once. I appreciate that you are doing the best possible in view of the conditions obtaining and can not be bothered with innumerable discharge cases at present and that the boys will all be home soon. But would you not fix up a statement along that line, as I would be very glad to use it, and know the newspapers will also.

Thanking you for any consideration you may show this request, I am,

Appreciatively, yours,

EDWARD J. KING.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF STAFF,
Washington, May 21, 1919.

Hon. EDWARD J. KING,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. KING: Your letter of May 15th making inquiry concerning the War Department's demobilization policy has been received.

The problem of the demobilization of our temporary army was susceptible of two solutions. Demobilization could take place by military organization or by civilian occupation. After mature consideration a decision was made in favor of demobilization by military units. This decision was influenced by several considerations. Demobilization by civilian occupation would disrupt and cripple units necessary for the proper supply and maintenance of the Army overseas. It would be slower and more costly than demobilization by military units, since it would require regrouping of men, and would seriously impair the efficiency of these units remaining in the service. Moreover, it could never be thoroughly put into effect, since the military situation overseas would not permit of the return of enlisted men to this country by groups according to occupation. On the other hand, it was believed that demobilization by military units, while not open to the criticisms outlined above, would satisfy to a large extent the needs of industry, since the conditions of modern warfare demand that men skilled in numerous and varied occupations be included in practically every unit of the Army.

The plain duty of the War Department in carrying out the demobilization was not only to discharge as rapidly as possible the men enlisted or drafted for the period of the emergency, but also to return them to the localities from which they were drawn, thus accomplishing the even redistribution of these men over the country. To this end certain camps and stations were designated as demobilization centers, and men were sent for discharge to the demobilization centers nearest their places of entry into the service. After their discharge at these centers the men were granted special railroad rates to their places of entry into the service.

This procedure has been changed by the passage of the recent act of Congress which authorized the payment of travel pay at the rate of 5 cents per mile to honorably discharged soldiers from their places of discharge to their places of entry into the service, or to their homes or residences, at their option. The plain desire of Congress in passing this bill was to give the discharged soldier his choice as to whether he would go home or to his place of entry into the service and to provide him the means of carrying out his choice. The instructions relative to demobilization have therefore been modified to permit of the soldier's discharge at the demobilization center nearest his point of entry into the service or at that nearest his home or residence, according as to whether he desires to draw travel pay to his point of entry into the service or to his home.

When the scheme for demobilization was put into effect, it was realized that there would arise in units whose demobilization had not been ordered many cases which would deserve individual attention. To this end, therefore, Circular 77, War Department, 1918, was issued about 10 days after the signing of the armistice. This circular provided for the discharge of men who entered the service for the period of the emergency, in whose families there was need or distress, or whose services were urgently needed by some business or industry, provided they were eligible for discharge and could be spared or replaced. To prevent such cases from being arbitrarily decided by subordinate commanders, with possible injustice to the enlisted men concerned, provision was later made for the review of all such cases by department or camp commanders prior to final decision.

Another phase of the demobilization scheme which was given consideration was the fact that many men would have valid reasons for desiring to receive their discharge at places other than the demobilization centers to which they would ordinarily be sent for discharge under general instructions. For example, it would obviously be a useless waste of time and money to send to another station for discharge a soldier who had married in the vicinity of his present station and intended to return there to live after discharge. Such exceptional cases as these are given consideration under instructions designed to cover them.

Throughout the entire course of demobilization the effort has been made to return the soldier to civil life in a physical condition as good as, or better than, his condition when he entered the service. Where a soldier has suffered physically while in the Army he is not discharged until he is cured or until the point of maximum improvement in his case has been reached.

With reference to the discharge of enlisted men who have not been overseas, the point has now been reached where all units not absolutely essential have been demobilized, and those which can not be spared have been reduced in strength as far as possible. The question of discharges is therefore largely one of the Government's ability to spare or replace the individual man. Instructions have been issued that all men eligible for discharge should be discharged as soon as they can be spared, those men having valid reasons for discharge under the provisions of Circular 77, 1918, being given first consideration.

The most important duty now being performed by emergency men who have not been overseas is that of providing the personnel for the machinery of discharge of the troops now being returned from overseas. Every effort is being made to reduce the number of these men by replacing them by field clerks and men voluntarily enlisted, and also, in certain cases, by civilians.

The problem of deciding which troops should be sent home from overseas for demobilization is one which has been left entirely in the hands of Gen. Pershing. He is responsible for the military situation in Europe and is the man best qualified to decide which troops could best be spared. Gen. Pershing's announced policy has been to return troops to the United States in as near as possible the order in which they arrived in Europe.

It has been necessary to depart from this rule in some instances, and cases have arisen where, due to the military situation, it has been necessary to return troops out of their turn. The policy outlined above is, however, felt to be the most just and is adhered to where possible.

Troops returned from overseas are demobilized as soon as possible after their arrival in this country. On debarkation organizations are broken up into detachments composed of men to be sent to the same demobilization centers for discharge. These detachments leave the ports of embarkation as rapidly as they can be disinfected and transportation can be provided. The standing instructions are that within 48 hours after their arrival at the demobilization center the men will be discharged. Realizing the desire of the people to greet the returning troops, the War Department grants troops the authority to parade in towns visited en route to the demobilization centers wherever this can be done without unduly delaying demobilization.

In order to provide for the return to this country for discharge of men in the Expeditionary Forces whose families are in distress or want, Gen. Pershing has been given authority to send such men to this country as casuals. These men are formed into special casual companies and are given priority over all other troops in return to this country. Men meriting this special treatment can apply for discharge themselves or the application can be instituted by their families by writing to The Adjutant General of the Army.

Replacements of voluntarily enlisted men are now being sent to France in groups of 1,000 men to replace those men returned to this country as casuals for discharge under the conditions outlined above.

The conditions in Siberia are largely similar. The Siberian expedition is a small one, and 8,000 voluntarily enlisted men are being sent to Vladivostok as fast as they can be assembled. It is believed that these 8,000 men will replace almost all men in Siberia who entered the service for the period of the emergency.

Action for the discharge of individuals of the Archangel forces has not been taken, since it is the present intention of the department to withdraw that entire force as soon as navigation becomes practicable.

Since the signing of the armistice 2,160,514 officers and men have been discharged and 1,080,871 have sailed from Europe. Barring men now being demobilized in this country and those still at sea, all men included in the latter figure who are eligible for discharge have been discharged and are included in the first figures quoted above.

From now on the rate of discharge will be, of course, largely dependent upon the rate of return of troops from overseas. This is in turn dependent upon the number of transports available and the military situation. However, if conditions remain as they are at present, it is believed that the monthly rate of return will be about 300,000 officers and men.

The War Department appreciates this opportunity to lay before you a detailed statement of the demobilization policy. If you have in mind any phase of the situation not covered here, I shall be glad to advise you further.

Sincerely, yours,

PEYTON C. MARCH,
General, Chief of Staff.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. JOHN M. BAER,
OF NORTH DAKOTA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Friday, May 30, 1919.

Mr. BAER. Mr. Speaker, Memorial Day has always been a sacred and significant day for me. The patriotic exercises and stirring addresses I have heard on this day of dedication have left a deep impression in my mind which time can never erase. I am glad that in these busy days Congress can set aside a day for eulogies to our noble dead.

On this day, I am proud to say, I could decorate the graves of direct ancestors each of whom died in some war for American liberty. I count as my choicest inheritance the spirit of patriotism and loyalty bequeathed to me through a long line of ancestors in America. That we should enjoy the blessings that we have to-day hosts have toiled, suffered, and died. Our heritage of religious, intellectual, and political liberty was made possible only by their self-sacrifice. The greater freedom that we desire to give to all the people of the world and bequeath to future generations can be made possible only by our taking up the burdens of self-sacrifice of former generations. In doing so we will have richly earned the blessings of posterity, as those who struggled for us have merited our undying gratitude.

There are superior advantages in a democracy, but great responsibilities go with them. All would have been lost if the dark forces of autocracy had prevailed. Their idea was that people exist for the government. Our idea is that governments exist for the people. It is for this idea that our soldiers and sailors fought. It is to sustain this idea that our people will go to any length of exertion or suffering. Any American who does not respond to this inspiration will be guilty of faithlessness to all who have died for it in bygone years.

For thousands of years before the establishment of our Republic no form of government was devised that could secure for its people any one of the great fundamental privileges for which our Republic was primarily organized. In that vast period of time there was no government that secured for its people religious freedom. This is the liberty which gives every man the right to serve God according to the dictates of his conscience. No nation had secured for its people the freedom of speech, freedom of the press, security of individual rights, popular education, and universal franchise. It is a startling statement, but in reviewing all those centuries prior to the founding of our Republic no people enjoyed these great advantages. Furthermore, no historian can point to any form of government in that long period and truthfully say, "Here is an ideal government, and one that works well." Not until our forefathers, with their farsighted vision, practical wisdom, and moral courage, formed the United States of America was there one successful government.

On my father's side my forefather landed in America in 1742. He fought in the Revolution to create the United States. My ancestors fought in 1812, the Mexican War of 1848, and my grandfather fought in the Civil War. My father, Capt. John M. Baer, still living, was wounded twice in the Civil War. This is the record of our grandparents on my mother's side also.

In the Spanish-American War my brother was the first to die in his company, and the Spanish-American War Veterans named the Charles O. Baer Camp in honor of his supreme sacrifice. To-day the soldiers of three wars are holding exercises at his grave.

After the death of my brother my mother wrote a book which she dedicated to him. I am going to place in the RECORD some of these stanzas, which may be a slight consolation to some of the heartbroken mothers bereft of sons in the recent war with imperial Germany. These poems come from the heart of one who has suffered, the best mother in the world—my mother.

My heart goes out in deepest sympathy to the noble parents who gave their sons in this war. This Nation owes them a debt of undying gratitude which can never be repaid. Words are a mere mockery when one attempts to express his feelings. May we all be better by living up to the ideals for which our gallant soldiers, sailors, and marines fought and died. We can only pause for a moment and think of the immortal ground, made glorious by the supreme sacrifice of these slumbering heroes across the sea, for whom so many tears are shed this day. And then, realizing their consecration, can we not see a new glory in "Old Glory" to-day?

OUR HEROES.

We honor those whose valor made
Them heroes, we say ours;
"Our" living heroes and "our" dead
Whose graves we strew with flowers.

Our veterans come with martial tread,
Each May, ranks thinner grown;
Whilst in the "City of the Dead,"
Flags are more thickly sown.

Between two phantom armies cast,
This remnant of the blue,
How loyal they unto the past,
And each to each how true.

The "last one" shall not shrink with fear,
But bravely close his eyes,
As muffled drums are drawing near,
His escort to the skies.

When through the mist he sees the host,
Then God be glorified!
He there shall find not one is lost
Who for his country died.

OUR FLAG.

I care not by whom, or when, or where,
Was designed our glorious flag so fair,
'Twas patriot's heart by brave deeds fired,
A poet's soul by Heaven inspired.
And be it night or be it morn,
Our flag, our flag was Heaven born!

Methinks he roamed at twilight hour,
When rainbow tinted, bathed with dew,
Bloomed many a fair and fragrant flower,
Whose perfume whispered, "Where may you
Find brighter hues in all the world
To bedeck the flag as yet unfurled?"

But mused he still, with head bowed low,
On many a soul-inspiring scene—
The lofty mountains capped with snow,
The silver lake, the river's sheen;
The golden mist of fair sunrise
In far-famed Italy's azure skies.

Enraptured still, he sees beyond
The flash of bright and cooling wings,
Where palm tree lifts its stately frond
Above the lucid, sparkling springs;
Where gold and crimson fruit abound,
And flowers of every hue are found.

The setting sun, his cloak of gold
Doth cast upon the verge of night,
Where waves of purple, fold on fold
Reflect the glory of his flight.
Then steal soft rays of moon afar,
Enamored love's fair avatar.

Musing he said: "What colors true
May grandly represent this theme
Which fills my heart. Ah! heaven's blue—
Nor mortals ken how high its gleam,
Nor sound its depths within the sea,
Blue, for the flag of liberty!

Enraptured still his dreamy eyes
That roving sought but sought in vain
The earth's remotest boundaries,
Are upward turned to heaven again;
From fleecy clouds with silver wrought,
His soul hath inspiration caught.

Ay, white shall mingle with the blue,
White emblem is of purity;
White erst the shroud of brave and true
Who made freedom a surety;
White speaks the coming of the dawn,
White for the infant nation, born.

Then as his step he homeward turned,
And downward swooped the wings of night,
Afar—afar a red light burned,
From distant home a welcome sight.
"Ah! Many a sailor lost would be Save for the beacon light," said he.

'Tis hope's red star above the gloom;
And red hath stained the battle field
Where traitors met a traitor's doom.
For freedom's sons will never yield.
Red, White, and Blue the colors be
That make the flag of liberty.

SACRIFICE OF THE FLOWERS.

The winter with snow had covered the earth,
Protecting the germs to which spring giveth birth;
Fair April, their nurse, with sunshine and rain
Hath nurtured and coaxed them to blossom again.
Her mission now finished, she gives them to May,
Who consecrates them to Memorial Day.
(Refrain:)

Oh, flowers, sweet semblance of life and decay,
What emblem more fitting Memorial Day;
From graves the green altar of our sacrifice
Like incense the perfume of blossoms arise.

They're coming—the veterans aged and gray,
They're coming—the children, patriots, they,
With hearts full of love, arms laden with flowers,
To place on the graves of these heroes of ours.
With praise and with song repeating the story
Of valorous deeds, of death and of glory.
(Refrain.)

The army divided grows less on this side;
One after another they cross the dark tide;
The last of the veterans soon will have found
The end of the march on the last camping ground.
But lessons they taught and Memorial Day
Shall live while the blossoms return to the May.
(Refrain.)

MEMORIAL DAY THOUGHTS.

Think of it! Think of it! Think how they died!
Dead in their manhood, their vigor, their pride;
Strength for the marches and strength for the fray,
Mortally wounded, their strength ebbed away.
Shattered and dying, they lay on the plain—
Thirst, with its cravings, to madden the pain.
Think of it! Think of it! Think how they died!
Dead in their manhood, their vigor, their pride.

Think of it! Think of it! Day after day,
Slowly and surely their lives ebbed away;
Sick unto death in the hospital's gloom,
Drifting in dreams to a white-curtained room;
Drifting away from the pain and the strife,
Under their roof tree with mother—or wife;
Like transient visions, as light of the day
Wanes in the darkness, their souls passed away.

Think of it! Think of it! Shuddering when Fancy doth lead to the foul prison pen.
God! O my country! If could be erased
Memory's pictures by horror defaced;
Eyes of our loved ones, by hunger made wild,
Gaunt forms of father, of husband or child,
Coming at night from the caves of the dead,
Begging for water, for air and for bread!

Thing of it! Think of it! Widows whose years
Led through the valley of anguish and tears;
Children who, fatherless, never may know
Counsel and care which kind fathers bestow.
Life and its pleasures for death and the grave!
Giving it freely, his country to save.
Think of it! Think of it! Christlike to give
All, that his people might prosper and live.

Think of it! Think of it! Coming to-day
Laden with sweet-scented blossoms of May.
Tenderly place them where grasses have grown,
Over their faces, and o'er the "unknown."
Bend in deep reverence over each grave,
Kissed by God's sunshine or hid by his wave.
We loyally love them, and claim them as "ours,"
With thoughts of remembrance as sweet as the flowers.

IN MEMORIAM.

Oh, winds that moan above the mound,
And shift the clouds in circling skies—
Nowhere so sad, so weird the sound
As where my martyred hero lies.

OUR BOY—OUR HERO.

I.

OUR BOY.

On the threshold of his manhood, with his clear and earnest eye,
Doth he scan the purple distance where his aspirations lie;
With no blight upon the budding of his youth so pure and fair,
With a mind whose high attainments are in one so young, so rare;
With his health of mind and body, why may he not attain
All that honest, brave endeavor in recompense may gain?
Oh, dear eyes with steadfast purpose gazing where the shadows rest,
Is not wealth and honor waiting, love to nestle in thy breast?
There is need of thy strong manhood in the world of struggling men,
For thy counsel is worth having, if by word or if by pen.
There is need of thy true friendship and full many know its worth,
There is need, God knows, of more like thee, the flower of all the earth.

II.

OUR HERO.

Was it God that sent the message with its meaning sealed by fate?
Would no hand stretch forth to bring him back before it was too late?
Question not His plan and purpose—but the instruments are we
In His hands to serve the ages; life is price of liberty!
God doth heal the heart that's broken, and the rain of bitter tears
Bringeth forth the grain that's golden garnered for the future years.
Life is not in living longest, and the heights which some attain
Are not reached by great endeavor, but by one swift span of pain.
Lived "our hero" in the moments more than some may live in years,
In the glory of that living find we balm for all our tears.
And remembrance brings us ever not a word or deed that mars
All the glory of his living in the life beyond the stars!

EXTRACTS FROM POEMS.

O flag, from out thy folds I see
The face of one that died for thee;
Lest I might hate thee, tenderly
I fold thee to my heart, ah! me,
With anguished cry, "it must not be."
Thank God! Tho' heart and home's bereft,
I still have love of country left.

* * * * *

God of the land and of the sea,
Thou witnessed all, to thee I cry;
And must our best and purest die
To set the suffering millions free?

* * * * *

O blessed dead! And for the soul
Of him who for his country dies,
O, Lord, is there a higher goal
Than that won by his sacrifice?

* * * * *

To sleep and sleep, forever sleep;
No more to wake, no more to weep;
To sleep and sleep through all the years,
Oblivious to life's joys and tears;
To miss the joy—to miss the pain,
To miss the loss—to miss the gain;
When life is young, nor troubles deep
Were it not best to sleep, and sleep?

* * * * *

If not a drop of blood were spilled
For thee, proud land, nor life were given,
Our hearts were not one-half so filled
With love of flag, or home, or heaven.

* * * * *

No sound shall stir the slumbering breast
Of him who found this silent rest;
He gave his life—he won the fame
That hallows each dead hero's name.

* * * * *

The sun sinks low, the dying flowers
Are passing with the dying hours.
The night is here, the night is long,
Gone is life's light, gone is life's song.
Death is but night, when passed away,
Then dawns the light of eternal day.

LIFE'S BATTLE.

Over all the desolation of a heart in Sorrow's throes,
Comes a ray, its light unbroken,
Like a rainbow, radiant token,
Like a flash of sunshine gleaming
On the meadow's level snows.

Every night must have its ending in
A dawn of tender light;
There's a joy for every sorrow,
Tears to-day and smiles to-morrow;
There's an answer to the prayer of him
Who battles for the right.

IN THE LAND OF FANCY.

Never a cloud to darken the blue,
Never a flower to lose its hue,
Never a friend to prove untrue
In the beautiful land of fancy.

Never a joy to turn to pain,
Never a hope to die or wane,
Never a boon we may not gain
In the beautiful land of fancy.

Never a heart turns false or cold,
Never a face grows gray or old,
Never a love we may not hold
In the beautiful land of fancy.

All of life that we crave or miss
(The world denies us half its bliss),
Free, untrammeled, we have in this—
In the beautiful land of fancy.

President Wilson's Memorial Day Address Yesterday at Suresnes Cemetery, Near Paris.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. CHAMP CLARK,

OF MISSOURI,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Saturday, May 31, 1919.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, under the leave granted to me to extend my remarks in the RECORD I include President Wilson's Memorial Day address yesterday at Suresnes Cemetery, near Paris, in France.

The address is as follows:

"Mr. Ambassador, ladies and gentlemen, fellow countrymen, no one with a heart in his breast, no American, no lover of humanity, can stand in the presence of these graves without the most profound emotion. These men who lie here are men of unique breed. Their like has not been seen since the far days of crusades. Never before have men crossed the seas to a foreign land to fight for a cause of humanity which they did not pretend was particularly their own but knew was the cause of humanity and of mankind. And when they came they found comrades for their courage and their devotion. They found armies of liberty already in the field—men who, though they had gone through three years of fiery trial, seemed only to be just discovering, not for a moment losing, the high temper of the great affair, men seasoned in the bloody service of liberty. Joining hands with these, the men of America gave that greatest of all gifts, the gift of life and the gift of spirit.

THEIR COURAGE AND ARDOR.

"It will always be a treasured memory on the part of those who knew and loved these men that the testimony of everybody who saw them in the field of action was their unflinching courage, their ardor to the point of audacity, their full consciousness of the high cause they had come to serve, and their constant vision of the issue. It is delightful to learn from those who saw these men fight and saw them waiting in the trenches for the summons to the fight that they had a thought of the spirit as well as a physical might, and those of us who know and love America know that they were discovering to the whole world the true spirit and devotion to their motherland. It was America who came in the person of these men and who will forever be grateful that she was so represented.

SLEEPING WITH KINDRED SPIRITS.

"And it is the more delightful to entertain these thoughts because we know that these men, though buried in a foreign land, are not buried in an alien soil. They are at home, sleeping with the spirits of those who thought the same thoughts and entertained the same aspirations. The noble women of Suresnes have given evidence of the loving sense with which they received these dead as their own, for they have cared for their graves, they have made it their interest, their loving interest, to see that there was no hour of neglect, and that constantly through all the months that have gone by the mothers at home should know that there were mothers here who remembered and honored their dead.

"You have just heard in the beautiful letter from M. Clemenceau what I believe to be the real message of France to us on a day like this, a message of genuine comradeship, a message of genuine sympathy, and I have no doubt that if our British comrades were here they would speak in the same spirit and in the same language. For the beauty of this war is that it has brought a new partnership and a new comradeship and a new understanding into the field of the effort of the Nation.

LESSON TAUGHT BY THE DEAD.

"But it would be no profit to us to eulogize these illustrious dead if we did not take to heart the lesson which they have taught us. They are dead; they have done their utmost to show their devotion to a great cause, and they have left us to see to it that that cause shall not be betrayed, whether in war or peace. It is our privilege and our high duty to consecrate ourselves afresh on a day like this to the objects for which they fought. It is not necessary that I should rehearse to you what these objects were. These men did not come across the sea merely to defeat Germany and her associated powers in the war. They came to defeat forever the things for which the Central Powers stood, the sort of power they meant to assert in the world, the arrogant, selfish domination which they meant to establish, and they came, moreover, to see to it that there should never be a war like this again. It is for us, particularly for us who are civilized, to use our proper weapons of counsel and agreement to see to it that there never is such a war again. The nation that should now fling out of this common concord of counsel would betray the human race.

"So it is our duty to take and maintain the safeguards which will see to it that the mothers of America and the mothers of France and England and Italy and Belgium and all other suffering nations should never be called upon for this sacrifice again. This can be done. It must be done, and it will be done. The things that these men left us, though they did not in their councils conceive it, is the great instrument which we have just erected in the league of nations. The league of nations is the covenant of governments that these men shall not have died in vain. I like to think that the dust of those sons of America who were privileged to be buried in their mother country will mingle with the dust of the men who fought for the preservation of the Union, and that, as those men gave their lives in order that America might be united, these men have given their lives in order that the world might be united. Those men gave their lives in order to secure the freedom of mankind, and I look forward to an age when it will be just as impossible to regret the results of their labor as it is now impossible to regret the result of the labor of those men who fought for the union of the States. I look for the time when every man who now puts his counsel against the united service of mankind under the league of nations will be just as ashamed of it as he is who regretted the union of the States.

OLD STANDARDS SURGING FORTH.

"You are aware, as I am aware, that the airs of an older day are beginning to stir again, that the standards of an old order are trying to assert themselves again. There is here and there an attempt to insert into the counsel of statesmen the old reckoning of selfishness and bargaining, and national advantage, which were the roots of this war, and any man who counsels these things advocates a renewal of the sacrifice which these men have made; for if this is not the final battle for right there will be another that will be final. Let these gentlemen who suppose that it is possible for them to accomplish this return to an order of which we are ashamed and that we are ready to forget realize they can not accomplish it. The peoples of the world are awake and the peoples of the world are in the saddle. Private counsels of statesmen can not now and can not hereafter determine the destinies of nations. If we are not the servants of the opinion of mankind, we are of all men the littlest, the most contemptible, the least gifted with vision. If we do not know courage, we can not accomplish our purpose, and this age is an age which looks forward, not backward; which rejects the standard of national selfishness that once governed the counsels of nations and demands that they shall give way to a new order of things in which only the questions will be, 'Is it right?' 'Is it just?' 'Is it in the interest of mankind?'

STATESMEN UNITED FOR LEAGUE.

"This is a challenge that no previous generation ever dared to give ear to. So many things have happened so fast in the last four years that I do not think many of us realize what it is that has happened. Think how impossible it would have been to get a body of responsible statesmen seriously to entertain the idea of the organization of a league of nations four years ago! And think of the change that has taken place! I was told before I came to France that there would be confusion of counsels about this thing, and I found unity of counsel. I was told that there would be opposition, and I found union of action. I found the statesmen with whom I was about to deal united in the idea that we must have a league of nations; that we could not merely make a peace settlement and then leave it to make itself effectual, but that we must conceive some common organization by which we should give our common faith that this peace would be maintained and the conclusions at which we had arrived should be made as secure as the united counsels of all the great nations that fought against Germany could make them. We have listened to the challenge, and that is the proof that there shall never be a war like this again.

"Ladies and gentlemen, we all believe, I hope, that the spirits of these men are not buried with their bones. Their spirits live. I hope—I believe—that their spirits are present with us at this hour. I hope that I feel the compulsion of their presence. I hope that I realize the significance of their presence. Think, soldiers, of those comrades of yours who are gone. If they were here, what would they say? They would not remember what you are talking about to-day. They would remember America, which they left with their high hope and purpose. They would remember the terrible field of battle. They would remember what they constantly recalled in times of danger, what they had come for, and how worth while it was to give their lives for it. And they would say, 'Forget all the little circumstances of the day. Be ashamed of the jealousies that divide you. We command you in the name of those who, like ourselves, have died to bring the counsels of men together, and we remind you what America said she was born for. She was born, she said, to show mankind the way to liberty. She was born to make this great gift a common gift. She was born to show men the way of experience by which they might realize this gift and maintain it, and we abjure you in the name of all the great traditions of America to make yourselves soldiers now once for all in this common cause, where we need wear no uniform except the uniform of the heart, clothing ourselves with the principles of right, and saying to me everywhere, "You are our brothers, and we invite you into the comradeship of liberty and of peace."' Let us go away hearing these unspoken mandates of our dead comrades.

HIS PERSONAL CONSECRATION.

"If I may speak a personal word, I beg you to realize the compulsion that I myself feel that I am under. By the Constitution of our great country, I was the Commander in Chief of these men. I advised the Congress to declare that a state of war existed. I sent these lads over here to die. Shall I—can I—ever speak a word of counsel which is inconsistent with the assurances I gave them when they came over? It is inconceivable. There is something better, if possible, that a man can give than his life, and that is his living spirit to a service that is not easy, to resist counsels that are hard to resist, to stand against purposes that are difficult to stand against, and to say, 'Here I stand, consecrated in spirit of the men who were once my comrades, and who are now gone, and who left me under eternal bonds of fidelity.'"

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. WILLIAM B. McKINLEY,

OF ILLINOIS,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Friday, May 30, 1919.

Mr. McKINLEY. Mr. Speaker, we pause to-day in our legislative work to honor those whose work is done. With filling eyes and proud and throbbing hearts we pause to review the glorious army of the immortal dead.

Yet they are not dead. They only sleep beneath the poppies of war-torn, blood-sprinkled France. Their spirits live, and woe to us when we shall let those heroic spirits die. They are our proudest heritage. When we lose them we lose all, and this Nation will fade away into the dead leaves of history.

To-day we stand with the spirits of Washington and Lincoln to review the last recruits of the Grand Army of this Republic. We see the immortals of Valley Forge and Appomattox wheel into line with the heroes of Chateau-Thierry and St. Mihiel. There mingle the spirits of those who died that this Nation might be born, of those who fell that this Nation might be saved, and of those who made that final splendid sacrifice that the flag of our fathers might float unsullied and unashamed in the sun of justice and of right. They fought for no conquest and for no revenge. They gave their lives that mankind might live, and we are here to pledge to them that their sacrifices have not been made in vain.

In honoring those who died we pay the highest tribute to those who live. They risked their lives as their comrades did, and with thankful hearts we welcome home their returning legions—welcome them home to the tasks of peace. For their work is not done. While they have been away new and insidious dangers have sprung up within the gates of this Republic. New perils menace it. Only the courage and the devotion to high ideals and to our country's honor can safeguard that honor against the threats of anarchy, disruption, and decay.

If they would let that dishonor stand unchallenged, they would be false to the men who fell at their sides in that hell of war overseas. They would betray, as we would betray if we stood by in silence, the heroes whose spirits should guide us to-day with a truer and nobler courage to stand as soldiers should stand in this battle for the preservation of our liberties. Theirs is the task to stand unflinching that this country may live a flaming beacon light that will guide the weakened nations of the world through the dark hours still to come before peace and good will have been reestablished in this world.

America's Soldiery.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. SCOTT FERRIS,

OF OKLAHOMA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Friday, May 30, 1919.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, this is Decoration Day. The chosen representatives of the people in the Congress of the United States have assembled on this day to pay a mark of respect to America's soldiery.

The 110,000,000 people of the Republic and those across the sea are meeting and planting a lily and a rose on some solitary mound where tears of consecration and devotion have been shed.

Seventy thousand of our dead sleep in France, 210,000 bear wounds that will follow them through life, more than $30,000,000,000 have been expended from our Treasury, the armistice has been signed, the fighting has stopped, the battle has been won, the peace protocol is in process of completion. Our boys are coming home at the rate of 300,000 per month.

Through all these two years of strife our fields have fed the world. Our resources and our Treasury have financed the world. Our soldiery has saved the world from an outlaw nation and the tyrant's heel. These, and ah! many times more, are the incidents of importance that might be referred to.

To-day let us pause and do all honor to our soldiers and ask the God of the universe to cast His richest blessings upon them. They are our soldiers.

When Congress declared war, on April 6, 1917, it was on the lips of all the world, "Will a Republic free from militarism fight?" "Will a Nation governed by the consent of the governed defend her undoubted rights?" "Can a real army be quickly raised?" "Will they send across 3,000 miles of surging sea an army to fight in a foreign land?" "Can government of the people, by the people, and for the people resolve itself into a fighting force?" "Can they reach Europe with forces sufficient to stem the onrushing tide of the German hordes?" "Can a Nation where the citizen and not the soldier makes the State stand erect and combat a military power like Germany?" "Can a great peace-loving Nation bent on building fortunes, homes, hospitals, and the glories of peace resolve itself into a war machine with efficacy, force, and power?"

These, and ah! many times more, are some of the questions that were asked; these, and ah! many times more, are some of the problems that confronted a great, drowsy, sleeping monster Republic, who had given all her sustenance for peace and the good of the world, and little, if any, of her thoughts and sustenance for war-making purposes.

America's answer came when the drowsy Republic, roused to full stature, rubbed her sleepy, drowsy eyes. Then the answer came—America will defend her citizenship on land and sea, wherever they may be—America will defend her liberty and her honor and her traditions to the last dollar of wealth and to the last life, if need be—America from her fields will feed the world—America from her resources and Treasury will finance the world—America will raise an army overnight that will stand every test—America will build a merchant marine to bridge the Atlantic—America will put 2,000,000 men across the sea—America will defend the flag and its costly folds—America will turn the tide of an outlaw nation—America will repel invasion and turn it into one of retreat and surrender—America will depose monarchs and monarchies and in their stead implant in office the servants of the people and republics ruled by the consent of the governed—America will fight unselfishly—America will not come back until it's over over there. American made good every promise, stood every test, true and helpful to the end!

America will not stop when the fight is over and the battle is won; but America will play her full part in seeing to it that these brave boys did not die in vain. America will see to it that as a result of their labors, their sufferings, and their sacrifice there shall spring from it a protocol of peace—a league of peace; a league of nations, made up of the nations who love peace and hate war; made up of nations who believe in spending their sustenance for the good of the world instead of for the destruction of the world; made up of a group of nations that believe in free men and free governments.

To me these 70,000 soldiers who made the last offering for their country; to me these 210,000 wounded soldiers; to me these 4,000,000 boys who entered the service and have made the heroic self-sacrifice, rendered this dangerous service—something must be achieved in their name, something must be achieved for the sacrifice made.

To me that something is to make it certain that hereafter there shall be no more wars like this one; to me that something is to bind together with iron bands the nations who desire to keep the peace and stand in solid phalanx against those nations who desire to break it; to me that something is to strive for the peace of the world and obstruct in every way the disturbers of the peace of the world; to me that means reduction of armaments; strong arbitration treaties as a condition precedent to all war and total abolition of secret treaties; to remove the profit, control, and distribution from private hands to governmental hands of all war-making material. The great league of nations now in process of making in Versailles contains these very far-reaching and most important features. To me that great document is an open, honest effort toward a lasting peace. It is an obstruction to future wars.

Its adoption means the boys did not die in vain; it means the peace of the world will be safer after it is adopted and approved than it was before.

The 70,000 American soldiers who sleep under the lilies and poppies of France offered their country all they had—their lives. Under the necessities of the hour our Government, seeking to maintain the liberty and peace of the world, accepted the sacrifice thus offered. Standing in the Congress of the United States this day, allowing our thoughts and hearts to reach across 3,000 miles of sea to these 70,000 newly constructed mounds that are to be the last resting places of these brave boys—pausing again with bowed-down heads and thinking of the heavy hearts of the mothers that gave these boys, we ask, Is there no better way to solve the problems between nations? Is there no better way than this one? Is there no better plan to lift aloft the standard of civilization? Is there no way to conclude differences other than by the sword? With a country teeming in science, intelligence, civilization, and patriotism, with 6,000 years of recorded history behind us and steadfastly gazing into the future, is it not time to think of a better plan, to arrive at a better plan, to adopt a better plan?

To me that better plan is the league of nations, almost ready for submission to the Senate of the United States for approval. Critics have and will pick flaws in it; critics have and will oppose it; we have had critics with us from the beginning; we have had obstructors with us from the beginning; they will be with us until the end.

Let me urge on the living, both in and out of Congress, both in and out of the service, to study carefully this great peace document before giving approval to its rejection and lending obstruction to its advancement.

Who are there among us on this bright Decoration Day, set apart for decoration and dedication of America's dead, who have not thought of the all-absorbing subject, Is there no meeting place for the dead? What shall become of our 70,000 soldier boys who in the springtime of life offered their country all and had their offering accepted? What shall become of our own dead, both in battle and in peace? This is life's hardest and most difficult problem; it is as perplexing to-day as it was at the beginning. The mystery of human life has not clarified, has not simplified. It is as mysterious and difficult of solution to-day as it was at the beginning. The answer, and the only answer, is the self-satisfying one found in the Book of Books, that gives the sweet assurance that the grave is not the end. Everything about us fortifies and confirms this statement, this theory, this belief.

To me it shall ever be that our soldiery has passed through the blood-soaked trenches of the world's greatest war into the summerland of hope, peace, and life—to me they have journeyed to a land where the din of battle never sounds, to a land where there is less of sorrow and more of rejoicing, more of meeting and less of parting, and where the heroes of yesterday and of preceding wars will come in solid phalanx to meet the soldiers of to-day, with trumpets blowing, with banners flying, with bands playing, to welcome them, to aid them, to lift them aloft amidst chanting music to the land of our hopes, to the land of our dreams, to that beautiful land of somewhere, to the land of eternal day.

To me it shall be a land with less war, and more of peace; more of plenty, and less of want. To me they shall be our heroes; to me their spirits will live on among us as the spirit of Washington and Lincoln live to-day—their spirits shall live on among us, their names will adorn the pages of history. They are our soldiers who offered all; they are our soldiers who gave all. May the God of the universe protect them; may the God of the universe hold their destiny in the hollow of His hand until they have crossed safely the other side; may the future be all we have hoped it would be.

Soldiers of the living, when America entered the war two years ago she committed to your keeping the flag of the Republic. You have kept it, you did not lower it; you have honored it, you did not dishonor it. You have made America proud; you have made the world proud; you have made your parents proud; you have earned your night's repose.

Soldiers, sailors, and marines, both living and dead, the American Congress this day with uncovered heads makes grateful acknowledgment for a grateful Nation of your task well done.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. GILBERT N. HAUGEN,

OF IOWA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Wednesday, June 4, 1919.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, in response to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL] in reference to the status of the Federal road act, I desire to submit a communication, accompanied by a memorandum prepared by the Chief of the Bureau of Roads, from Mr. Harrison, Assistant Secretary of Agriculture. This memorandum gives the information requested:

Here is a statement, prepared by the Bureau of Public Roads, regarding the status of the Federal aid road act. I think it will give you the information you desire. I am sorry that we could not get the memorandum to you before 12 o'clock. You will note that it shows the immense amount of preliminary work that has been necessary to get the act into operation. It seems to me that if the statement is to go into the RECORD it should be printed in full in order that the complete story will be available.

Very truly, yours,

F. R. HARRISON,
Assistant to the Secretary.

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
BUREAU OF PUBLIC ROADS,
Washington, D. C., June 4, 1919.

MEMORANDUM AS TO STATUS OF FEDERAL AID ROAD WORK.

The Federal aid road act was approved July 11, 1916, but under the terms of the act an immense amount of preliminary work was necessary.

First, the Secretary of Agriculture was required to apportion the Federal funds for the first fiscal year to all of the States, and in doing this it was necessary to ascertain from the Postmaster General the mileage of rural delivery and star routes, as the apportionment had to be made on the basis of area, population, and the mileage of rural delivery and star mail routes. The certificate of apportionment for the first fiscal year was issued on July 21, 1916, 10 days after the act was approved.

Next, the act required that the Secretary of Agriculture prescribe rules and regulations for its administration, which were prepared after a conference held in Washington with the several State highway department officials, and were issued on September 1, 1916. It was also necessary to ascertain which of the States were equipped with highway departments within the meaning of the act, as cooperation could be only with States so equipped. This latter requirement necessitated an exhaustive investigation of the State highway department laws and a great deal of correspondence with State highway officials. When the investigation was completed it was found that 11 States were not equipped with highway departments, and that the status of five others was doubtful. New basic legislation, therefore, was necessary in 16 States, while in many of the other States cooperation was impracticable without the passage of enabling State laws, since in some States direct supervision could not be exercised by the highway department, and in others the requisite funds to meet the Federal funds were not available, nor could adequate maintenance assurances be given. In all of the States assent by the legislature was essential, except that the governor might assent, pending the adjournment of the first regular session of the legislature held after the passage of the Federal act. During the year 1917, 43 State legislatures were in session and enacted the necessary legislation to enable cooperation with their respective States.

It was apparent, therefore, that actual road construction could hardly have begun under the most favorable condition before the opening of the construction season of 1917.

However, early in April, 1917, Congress declared war, and in connection with the prosecution of the war various restrictive measures operated to retard or prevent road-construction work. For instance, the Secretary of the Treasury requested that the disbursement of the Federal aid funds in the several States be withheld in so far as might be found practicable. The War Industries Board, the Fuel Administration, and the Railroad Administration placed such restrictions on the use and transportation of road materials as to prevent construction work proceeding on most of the projects that were ready for construction. In addition, the price of labor and materials advanced so that contractors in bidding on work made their bids so high as to be prohibitive, numerous instances occurring where projects repeatedly advertised either received no bids or the bids were so high that they were rejected. These conditions resulted in a total or partial suspension of construction work by the States until after the armistice was signed, when preparations were made to resume work.

Up to and including May 31, 1919, there had been approved by the Secretary of Agriculture project statements for 1,188 projects, involving the improvement of 11,350.10 miles of road, at a total estimated cost of $108,295,329.05, and on which Federal aid in the amount of $43,076,176.63 was requested. Construction of the above roads is in the hands of the several State highway departments, and on May 31, 1919, 813 miles had been completed. The cost of the completed work has been $6,870,451.57, of which $2,692,491.34 was paid in the form of Federal aid by the United States Government. The cost of administration per mile of road approved by the Secretary of Agriculture as suitable to receive Federal aid has been $30.40, including expenditures both in Washington and in the field. In connection with the field expenses 10 district offices were organized, equipped, and maintained with the necessary force for carrying on the work connected with each district. In the Washington office there were unusual organization expenses incident to meeting the requirements of a legal nature preliminary to cooperation with the several States. The Federal aid road act limits the administrative expenditures to not exceeding 3 per cent of the Federal appropriation, and it also limits the amount of Federal funds that may be paid on a project not to exceed 50 per cent of the total cost, so that the maximum of Federal funds that can be paid for administrative purposes can not exceed 1½ per cent of the total actual cost of projects; but since the amount of Federal aid requested on projects for which project statements have been approved is only about 40 per cent of the total estimated cost, it follows that the maximum administrative expenses can not exceed 1.2 per cent.

To summarize, it may be said that the Federal aid road building program is now getting under way for the first time under conditions approaching anything like normal. The progress that will be made in the prosecution of this program of work in the future can in no way be judged by the progress heretofore made under the many adverse conditions that had to be met.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. WELLS GOODYKOONTZ,

OF WEST VIRGINIA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Tuesday, June 3, 1919.

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ. Mr. Speaker, on last Friday the House had under consideration House joint resolution 67, extending the thanks of Congress to those who served in the armed forces of the United States in the war against Germany. On the day mentioned—Memorial Day—I delivered a public address in the national cemetery at the city of Grafton, in West Virginia. Since the subject of that address is germane to the resolution I subjoin the same as an extension of my remarks.

If I were required to state the subject of the address I have engaged to deliver I should entitle it:

"A LESSON FROM THE DEAD."

The National Congress and the State legislatures acted in wisdom when they decreed that the 30th day of May in each year be set apart as a legal holiday and known as Memorial Day.

The statutory enactments I have mentioned were but the crystallization of a highly intelligent public opinion reflected by the advanced standards of our modern civilization and enlightenment; or rather, stating the proposition in different words, the surest test of a high order of human society consists in a profound reverence for the memory of the dead.

Show me a land where the story of great deeds and of wonderful achievements by those dead and gone is preserved in the annals of the people;

Show me a land where the stirring events and memorable scenes in which great men, since gathered to their fathers, figured, by the deft hand of the painter have been depicted on canvas or by the sculptor's chisel delineated in bronze and in marble;

Show me a land where the graves of the departed, from the humblest citizen to the loftiest of soldiers and statesmen, are visited, watched over, and cared for, by being kept green and by the planting of shrubbery and by the placing of flowers and by the erection of suitable headstones and monuments;

Show me these things, which indicate a reverence for the dead, and I will show you a land dedicated to liberty, guarded by law.

And so it is that we, sharing the sentiments I have mentioned and in accordance with the spirit and purpose of the law, have assembled on this day of memory in a national cemetery to engage in suitable exercises respecting the memory of the dead.

When the soul of man has departed, there remains not much of him. When the organic matter of his body has been resolved into the inorganic, the chemist may find among his ashes some lime and iron, a little sulphur and phosphorus—the mineral salts of that body—but the manly form that once flowered in the image of his God has been reconverted into its original constituent elements and is "returned unto dust."

I purpose not to enter the fields of speculation concerning the mysteries of birth and death, for we know as a matter of human experience that man is born but to die. I may add—and truthfully, I can say—that each year of my life has been happier than the year that went before it; yet there still remains one cloud upon the horizon, and that cloud is, I have got to die; and so, in the course of nature, must we all die and enter into our "dwellings of rest." As of this we have been told, in a sad but philosophic poem, written by William Knox, that—

> The leaves of the oak and the willow shall fade,
> Be scattered around, and together be laid;
> As the young and the old, the low and the high,
> Shall crumble to dust and together shall lie.

By this melancholy verse we are reminded that death is no respecter of persons; that the child, the mother, the husband, the maid, the king, the priest, and the sage, sooner or later must be "hidden and lost in the depths of the grave," and that the peasant, the herdsman, and the beggar have "faded away like the grass that we tread"; and that the saint and the sinner, the wise and the foolish, "have quietly mingled their bones with the dust." The author then proceeds to tell us how all these loved and scorned, grieved and joyed, but in their case, as in ours, that "hope and despondency, pleasure and pain, are mingled together in sunshine and rain," and that "the smile and the tear, the song and the dirge, still follow each other like surge upon surge."

In this silent city of the dead lie resting from their labors many of those who fought to preserve and perpetuate the Union of States that had been established in consequence of the devotion of the Revolutionary fathers to the cause of human freedom; others—many of them, perhaps—also lie sleeping here, but what we say they can not hear, for—

> Can storied urn or animated bust
> Back to its mansions call the fleeting breath?
> Can honor's voice provoke the silent dust
> Or flattery soothe the dull, cold ear of death?

So that, after all, what is said here to-day, although uttered out of respect for and as an inspiration from the dead, can serve only as a lesson for the living.

Then what is that lesson that we are to learn from the lives of these noble dead? The subject of the lesson might be entitled "Devotion to constitutional government."

Your grandsires, cherishing a fond love for liberty, at Lexington and Bunker Hill and Valley Forge suffered and died in order that the great fundamental instrument, the Constitution, might be established; and your sires, believing that this great organic law had been "conceived in liberty and dedicated to the proposition that all men are created equal," weltered in their own blood in order that free government might not perish and by their martial achievements preserved for posterity what had been fought for and won by our Revolutionary fathers.

And now your sons and your grandsons, emulating the example and fired by the same spirit of liberty that raged in the bosoms of their ancestors and inspired them to action in the War of the Revolution and in the Civil War, have gone forth, even to lands beyond the seas, and by their intelligence, courage, and patriotism, and by their suffering and death, have demonstrated to all mankind that the Declaration and the Constitution were not mere formulæ declaring and purporting to safeguard, respectively, the inalienable rights of man, but were living, breathing realities, and that their integrity would be maintained in order that the glory of America might not depart.

The cost of American life and limb—treasure not considered—in this war has been terrific. The Casualty Division of the War Department advised me that of our soldiers and airmen—sailors not included—who lost their lives, 32,981 were killed in action, 13,520 died from wounds, 33,159 died from disease, 4,655 died as the result of accident or from other cause, 3,232 were missing in action, or a total of 87,547 fatalities; and there were wounded 204,992.

These figures do not include the vast number of those who died in the cantonments and camps. The Surgeon General's office has informed me that there have died in Army camps, from September 1, 1917, to May 2, 1919, 34,729 men. The Secretary of the Navy has indicated to me that in his department the casualties are as follows: Killed in action, 724; by accident and other causes, 1,018; died of disease, 5,567.

If those figures are authentic, there are of the wounded 204,992 and of the dead 129,685, or a grand total of 334,677.

This is the price we have paid so far, and so far only, as involves the suffering and death of our soldiers. The mental suffering of their loved ones, the economic loss to the State and Nation, and the tremendous monetary expense of conducting the war are not considered.

To me the saddest circumstance of all is the one that tells us that in a foreign but friendly land—in France, awaiting that great day, the day of judgment, the day of resurrection—lie sleeping of our boys 87,547 and in our own native land have died and are buried 34,729. Further, those of our sons who entered the Navy and are now dead must be considered. These have been buried, some on land, but many at sea.

I am informed that it is the purpose of the War Department that of the 87,547 men whose lives were lost in Europe to assemble as many of their bodies as may be recovered in two American cemeteries now being established in France. One of these cemeteries has been located at a place called Romaigne, where 26,000 American soldiers are to be buried. Many of these soldiers have already been removed, for the trenches in the cemetery to receive their bodies were dug some time ago.

In this war soldiers were buried, generally, where they fell, on the roadside, in the fields, in the woods, wherever they went down. At one place is one grave, at another two or three graves, and at still another perhaps a hundred graves. The bodies of those soldiers were not scientifically prepared for burial, and they were not placed in coffins nor caskets, but were buried, wrapped in their uniforms, in shallow graves. Their bodies are now being disinterred for final burial in the cemeteries to be owned by the Nation.

A distinguished Member of Congress—Mr. MADDEN—who has been in France, advises that these bodies when disinterred are very heavy, "so heavy, on account of their clothing being saturated with rain, that four husky soldiers were required, while they were carrying a single body on a stretcher, to rest every 25 feet."

The War Department in due time will, upon the request of the proper relative, cause to be returned to America the body of a soldier, but in the great—I should say very great—majority of cases no such request will be made, and consequently there will repose in the bosom of France, awaiting the final resurrection, over 50,000 of American boys. Some one has estimated that if these soldiers were living and were to march 25 abreast in solid column it would take them four hours to pass a given point. This is a part—only a part—of the price of liberty—the cost of maintaining constitutional government. Here at home "democracy of the world" sounds well, "universal freedom" is also pleasing to the ear, but to my mind no greater task now confronts the American people than the care of their own people. The father looks to the welfare of his own family first. The Constitution must be preserved. Those who tinker with it by attempting reforms and making additions by amendments, although in some cases such amendments are justified and some I have sanctioned, may in the course of time undermine that great structure framed by the fathers and cause it to collapse, break down, and fail. In closing this address I would be derelict did I not express in my poor way our recognition of deepest obligation to the sons of West Virginia who registered for military service. Those who were successful in getting overseas were perhaps more fortunate than those who were left behind. All were willing. All were patriotic and wanted to go. All were our boys. Each and all of them, whether unscathed, or wounded, or dead, have our everlasting gratitude.

Now, thanking you for the privilege of speaking in this public way, in the only national cemetery in West Virginia, and with fond hopes, I wish you Godspeed and good-by.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. JOHN B. JOHNSTON,
OF NEW YORK,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Tuesday, June 3, 1919.

Mr. JOHNSTON of New York. Mr. Speaker: Last Friday the House had under consideration House joint resolution 67, extending the thanks of Congress to those who served in the armed forces of the United States in the war against the Imperial German Government. On the day mentioned—Memorial Day—I delivered a public address at Greenwood Baptist Church, Borough of Brooklyn, City of New York, at a service of remembrance and honor to our G. A. R. and also the gallant soldiers and sailors of the recent great war. In this service several of the churches of the Park Slope section of Brooklyn united. Since the subject of that address is pertinent to the resolution, I add same as an extension of my remarks.

Days particularly set apart for ceremonies in honor of the dead are not uncommon to mankind. They are, in fact, almost as old as history itself. The ancient Greeks performed impressive rites at each new grave. The Romans selected a week, called the Parenthalia, when they gathered at the tombs of their departed and decorated them with wreaths and flowers. Our early ancestors, the Druids, celebrated their memorial day every autumn, usually in November, on the eve of their festival of thanksgiving. Christians from the earliest times had a day of prayer for their dead; hence the church holiday known as All Saints' Day. Our Memorial Day has been aptly described as a secular All Souls' Day.

There is a very general but erroneous impression that Decoration Day, as it was formerly known, or Memorial Day, as it is now called, was a day originally designated by legislative act or executive decree, in order to pay tribute to our martyred dead. It may not, therefore, be amiss at this time to point out just how Memorial Day became a holiday. Shortly after the close of the Civil War, the widows, mothers, and children of the Confederate dead went out and strewed their graves with flowers. They scattered them impartially, not only over the graves of their own loved ones but over the unknown and unmarked resting places of Union soldiers. As soon as the news of this touching tribute by the women of the South was flashed over the North, it allayed as nothing else could have done sectional prejudice and passion, and aroused national amity and love. This incident, however, produced no practical results till May, 1868, when Gen. Logan, commander of the Grand Army of the Republic, issued an order designating May 30, 1868, "for the purpose of strewing with flowers or otherwise decorating the graves of comrades who died in defense of their country during the late Rebellion, and whose bodies now lie in almost every city, village, and hamlet churchyard in the land." The idea spread rapidly, until the holiday has become a legal one in all but six States of the Union. And every year since people have gathered all over the country to pay truthful and sincere tribute to the heroism of the living and the martyrdom of the dead, who sacrificed, suffered, and endured so much that the Union may remain one and inseparable then, now, and forever.

As this is not only a holiday but a holy day, there is and could be no more fitting place for a meeting of this character than here in this beautiful edifice, dedicated to the fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man.

It is always an inspiring and ennobling occasion when men and women gather to pay respect and homage to those who have passed to the great beyond, and who during their transitory existence here have led a life of service and unselfishness. To die in defense of one's country is only a little less glorious than to die for love of one's God.

This war which during the last four years has wrought more desolation and destruction to life and property than all other wars combined has just been brought to a successful and triumphant conclusion through the intervention of this country under the leadership of President Wilson and the brave and heroic acts of the boys in blue under Admiral Sims and the boys in khaki under Gen. Pershing.

We did not enter this war to satisfy a selfish motive or to gratify a sordid purpose. We sought no territorial expansion, nor did we covet dominion. We did not wish conquest or to conquer. We entered it only when our property was destroyed, our ships sunk, and our citizens killed, and to remain out of it longer would have been falling short of our duty to ourselves and to the civilization of which we are a part. We did not wish to ruin a nation but to destroy a military system, the most vicious that ever afflicted a people or threatened the peace of the world; a system the authors of which respected none of the chivalrous traditions of the warriors of old but destroyed churches, polluted their sacred vessels, and outraged their virtuous women who had consecrated their lives to work of charity and service to God; a system which made war on noncombatants, maimed and killed children, ravished the women of Belgium and France and consigned them to a fate worse than death itself, which slaughtered babies at their mothers' breasts, and committed atrocities and barbarities without parallel or precedent in the whole history of human experience.

It was to destroy the fiends who, intoxicated with power and authority, had committed these monstrous acts and many others which can not be described or even mentioned before an audience of this character that 4,000,000 brave lads responded to their country's call and their President's summons, offered their services willingly and cheerfully to go they knew not where, to do they feared not what, to suffer tortures and torments akin to hell itself, and if need be forfeit their lives that you and your children and all the children of men might possess and enjoy the benefits and blessings of liberty and democracy.

Before we entered this war success was doubtful, after we entered it victory was certain. Two years ago the message of these young men to their sorely pressed and tired Allies on the western front was "Hold the fort for we are coming, five times five hundred thousand strong," and they came from every quarter and every section of the country, from every station in life, and from every field of endeavor. The factory hand competing with his fellow in the busy life of the throbbing metropolis, together with the cotillion leader from the Fifth Avenue drawing room; the sturdy woodsman from Maine and the hardy farmer from Iowa; the cowboy from the western prairie, where he basks in the sunlight of free life and fresh air, and the miner from Pennsylvania, who toils in the dark and dismal recesses of the bowels of the earth—all responded and departed, and they all approached the shores of France with impatience, but with a resolution and enthusiasm characteristic of the crusaders of old who fought in a holy cause and whose motto was, "Do or die." And after they arrived they not only succeeded in checking the Hun invasion, but in hurling the invaders back at every point—at San Quentin, where so many of the dauntless lads of our own Twenty-third gave up their lives, at Chateau-Thierry, where the brave boys of the gallant Sixty-ninth won fame and glory which will be imperishable. They pierced the Hindenburg line at so many points that it resembled a chain broken at every link, and they crowded the Germans through it out of France and Belgium, and sent them on their way back to Berlin, where they found their Kaiser, who had just lost his crown, wondering when he was to lose his head, and they saw the whole system of the Hohenzollerns trembling, tottering, and crumbling in ruins at their feet, autocracy destroyed, and the world made safe for democracy.

There are some among us, patriots as well as partisans, who fear, now that victory in battle is an accomplished fact, that we may be cheated, by domestic disturbance or disorder, out of the fruits of that victory so dearly won; that Bolshevism is more dangerous than Kaiserism. Dr. Harper, who has just returned from France, where he rendered conspicuous and distinguished service, referred to the growth of Bolshevism here and the evils it portends. Bolshevism has become dominant only in those countries like Russia, where the laws have been powerless and the rulers reluctant to give to their people even a small part of that to which they were entitled and which their Creator intended to be the heritage of every man, as priceless as life itself. And these thoughtless and misguided Bolshevists, in their mad rush to secure justice for themselves, have done injustice to others, including themselves.

But here on this continent 143 years ago our forefathers established a Nation of freedom for freemen. They planted the seed of a Government destined to be permanent, because they fashioned and patterned after the faith which they professed. Democracy's cardinal principle that all men are equal in the eye of the law is based on Christianity's cardinal principal that all men are equal in the sight of God. And this country, which has successively withstood invasion from without and insurrection from within, will survive this dreadful conflict, and its people will emerge from it stronger, bigger, better men and women because of the service they have rendered and the sacrifice they have made, and they will enjoy a progress and prosperity greater than they have even realized—far greater than they have ever dreamed.

And when we recount the achievements of our heroes is it any wonder that men and women everywhere are gathering as we are to-night to pay tribute to those to whom we owe so much and who are not returning? And it is not alone fitting but commendable that we should pause and think of those who contributed most, those who have already "gone west," those young men, the very flower of American manhood, who to-night lie "in Flanders fields, where poppies blow," tens of thousands of whom sleep under soil 3,000 miles removed from home and family; their graves are not strewn with fragrant flowers to be moistened by a mother's tears or sweetened by a sweetheart's kiss; their only tombstone is a small wooden cross, the symbol of justice and the emblem of Christianity, which indicates that under ground consecrated by the blood of a million heroes there lie the sacred bones of an American warrior, an American patriot, and an American martyr. And the only comfort and solace which their loved ones can have, apart from the pride which they must feel in their patriotism and the sacrifice they have made, is the knowledge that when they rise, as rise they will, they will be permitted to join in the chorus of the angels when they sing—

In the beauty of the lilies, Christ was born across the sea,
With a glory in His bosom that transfigured you and me;
As He died to make men holy, so we died to make men free.

Memorial Day.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. CHARLES B. TIMBERLAKE,

OF COLORADO,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Friday, May 30, 1919,

On the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 67) tendering the thanks of Congress to those who served or gave others to the service of the country in the Great War.

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. Mr. Speaker, it is indeed fitting on this Memorial Day—which for 50 years has been patriotically observed by a grateful people—to commemorate the sacrifices of those who fell in defense of freedom and liberty, that to-day in this Hall of our National Congress, as Representatives of the entire people of our loved land, we meet to do honor to our brave boys who have fallen while fighting our country's battles. To-day and here we pay homage to them with full hearts—to the heroes of 1776, of 1812, of 1861, and with a fresher sorrow, untamed by time's softening power, the brave band we so recently gathered together to combat civilization's foe and banish from a fevered brain the ill-conceived dream of a "one world empire." Upon attempt of the realization of this mad desire the ancient Persians wrecked their fortunes, and on down through history to the sad hour when the house of Hohenzollern heard the stroke of the clock that bade their hordes march forth to the same defeat that met other dynasties possessed of this wild dream of world power.

And this was the mission of the millions of America's youth enrolled in one vast Army for the defense of the freedom of the world—to stop the onrushing tide of Prussian tyranny—and how they strengthened the lines of defense and turned the fortunes of war into victory for the Allies is known to all men.

To-day we honor every American who wore the soldier's garb, carried his country's colors, and marched to its martial airs, whether in the training camp or at the battle front. We welcome the returning soldier host with love and cheers, and for their companions who return not our hearts are heavy, our heads are bowed. As a Nation we sorrow for our dead, and as citizens we sympathize with the bereaved fathers, mothers, wives, and widowed brides of our land. To-day our millions turn aside from the busy cares of life to hold sacred communion with our brave dead, to contemplate their deeds of valor, and, so far as words have power, to commemorate their sacrifice. But not in words, but deeds, can we in the future prove our appreciation of the laying down of life of more than 100,000 of the flower of the manhood of our country. Of these about 33,000 were killed in action—a magnificent array of sterling manhood. Decoration Day takes on a deeper meaning because of these new-made graves. This is the saddest 30th day of May we have ever known. The dread scourge that during the past winter visited our camps, the unavoidable accidents and illness incident to gathering great groups of men together, largely swelled the number of our dead. All this added to the toll of battle has drawn heavily upon our man power and to-day as heavily upon our sympathies. But why recount all this bloodshed, sacrifice, and sorrow? Why? "Lest we forget" the obligation bequeathed by the dead to the living. The dead are heroic; may the living be noble.

May we as Americans, in whatever station of life we find ourselves, jealously guard that which we asked them, with their lives, to defend.

Here in this Hall may we stand bravely by our guns in the front-line trenches, and send, as did they, the message along the line back to the people, "We hold."

Joining with us in the years that have passed have been the brave soldiers spared to us from the contest from 1861 to 1865. We have been pained to note from year to year the rapidly diminishing number of the surviving veterans of that great war taking part in these memorials, and soon the last of them will have crossed the divide, to join their comrades in the great beyond.

This is the day sacredly set apart for honoring our heroic dead. Whether they fell at Yorktown, Gettysburg, or on the fields of France and Flanders, at Chateau-Thierry, St. Mihiel, Soissons, or on the bloody field of the Argonne, in the camps of training for their country's service—they are alike deserving of our honor and homage, and, as I say, it is most fitting that we commemorate their valor and sacrifice in this manner.

When in France and Belgium I saw along the battle front the devastation wrought by the cruel war which had been waged by the foe against which we contended. I saw the marked graves of brave soldiers who had fallen in singles and in groups along the entire battle line from the Marne to Calais, and I never failed to bow my head and salute this resting place, for, whether he was American, French, British, Italian, Australian, or Canadian, I recognized he had made the supreme sacrifice that "liberty shall not perish from the earth."

Memorial Day.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. BENIGNO C. HERNANDEZ,

OF NEW MEXICO,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Friday, May 30, 1919.

Mr. HERNANDEZ. Mr. Speaker, we paused to-day in our legislative labors to do honor to those whose work is done. I have listened with a good deal of attention and care to the eloquent addresses made by several distinguished Members of this House. It has left a lasting impression upon me, and naturally my thoughts take me back to the part that New Mexico played in this awful tragedy from which we have just emerged. This is the greatest Memorial Day that our country has ever known. For more than half a century this day has been sacred in our annals. Annually we have paid homage to the brave men of the Rebellion. For the past 20 years we have added to their number the departed of the Spanish-American War, and to-day, grouped with all these heroes, whose number of dead is increased as the years roll by, we add nearly 80,000 of our citizens who have made the supreme sacrifice during the World War. The resolution, which I know will be adopted by unanimous vote, includes all these heroes, and besides it tends to console mothers, fathers, wives, and relatives of those who sacrificed their lives that victory might be attained. All over our country tributes of all kinds have been extended to our returning soldiers. The courage displayed by these soldiers in battle represents the character and courage of the people at home. The sons of New Mexico responded patriotically to the call, remembering the deeds of their forefathers, who always fought the battles of liberty. Approximately 5,000 men from that State voluntarily enlisted in all branches of the Army and Navy. Approximately 15,000 or more were drafted under the provisions of the selective-service law.

For centuries the people of New Mexico have demonstrated that they are a liberty-loving people. Under the most trying circumstances the sons of New Mexico have shown themselves courageous, thrown against the savages and all other enemies. During the Rebellion 6,000 men volunteered under the Union flag, and history tells us how they behaved themselves during that awful crisis. During the Spanish-American War about one-fourth of the regiment known in history as the Rough Riders were from New Mexico. Approximately eleven hundred casualties marked the price paid by sons of our State in the World War. Of these, 435 gave their lives so that our institutions might be made safe and permanent and insure the world's freedom. We beheld them as they kissed their wives, mothers, sisters, and their children good-by, leaving their usual occupations and homes to go and fight the battles of their country. We beheld them as we saw them entrain at the various stations amid the cheers of their fellow citizens. We behold them upon the glorious battle fields of the World War. We are with them at Chateau-Thierry, Vaux, Belleau Wood, St. Mihiel, and the Argonne Forest. We know how they behaved on these battle fields—without complaining or asking any questions. New Mexico took an active part in all of the war activities, oversubscribed all the war loans. Its legislators, in extraordinary session held during the first two weeks of May, 1917, placed at the disposition of the governor and State council of defense three-fourths of a million dollars for the purpose of aiding the Federal Government in winning the war—an enormous amount, taking into consideration that we are a struggling Commonwealth. The reason for this action on the part of the legislative assembly in our State was that we wanted to be sure that the false promises made by the Kaiser and his cohorts should not be carried out. Immediately upon the declaration of war the governor of our State mobilized our National Guard at the expense of the State, an organization composed of eighteen hundred men, every one a soldier, and many of them had seen active service on the Mexican border. Our machine-gun battalion, composed of men picked from our National Guard, has seen active service overseas and is considered one of the most efficient units in the American Expeditionary Forces. In one word, in the great drama of the war the illustrious sons of New Mexico played their part with marked courage and bravery, thus reflecting credit upon our Commonwealth, and their deeds shed luster upon the deeds of our forefathers. We are proud of them; and now, when we are paying tribute to our heroes, let us not forget the mothers, the widows, and their orphans and show our gratitude in a substantial manner by providing for them and caring for those of our heroes who are maimed and who are to-day carrying painful wounds and broken in health as a result of their heroic deeds. Our heartfelt gratitude to the living and the dead and our sympathy for their mothers, fathers, and relatives whose sons lost their lives in the awful tragedy. Render our profoundest thanks to our Almighty God that He brought us through the bloody conflict safe and strong and powerful for the future of our country and the whole world.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. MARION E. RHODES.

OF MISSOURI.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Friday, May 30, 1919.

Mr. RHODES. Mr. Speaker, by proclamation of Gen. John A. Logan, when commander in chief of the Grand Army of the Republic, in the year 1868, Memorial Day was first established, the object being to decorate the graves of our fallen heroes of the Civil War. Hence it is appropriate in our observance of this great day of both sadness and gladness to pause sufficiently long to first pay special tribute to those who gave their lives that the Nation might live. All honor to the great name of him who originated this beautiful Memorial Day custom, and his comrades in arms. If their work had failed, this Republic would not occupy its present exalted position among the powers of the earth. With each passing year since that eventful surrender at Appomattox, the American people have been brought to a gradual realization of the importance of the preservation of the Federal Union. The significance of this fact was first emphasized in our war with Spain. But we never fully appreciated the consequences of that triumph until we found ourselves in the throes of the recent World War. I confess it was not until I saw the grandsons of those who wore the blue and the grandsons of those who wore the gray march away side by side through the streets of my own little city in the autumn of 1917, in answer to their country's call, that I appreciated in the fullest measure the achievements of those heroes of the Civil War whose graves have annually been decorated since the establishment of Memorial Day. Indeed, on that occasion I felt my heart so strangely warmed that the recollection thereof seems but the memory of yesterday.

On the present occasion we find ourselves engaged in an exercise having for its object not only honoring the memory of those who fell in battle in the great Civil War, but to do equal honor to the Nation's soldier dead, whether they fell at Lexington or Yorktown, at Saratoga or New Orleans, at Sumter or Appomattox, in Cuba or at Manila Bay, at the Marne or the Argonne. To-day the hearts of 100,000,000 people, without regard to section, creed, or political affiliation, are united as never before in the history of the American Republic on a Memorial Day occasion.

We can all recite Wilbur Nesbit's tribute to the flag with greater fervor than ever before:

Your flag and my flag!
And how it flies to-day
In your land and my land
And half a world away!
Rose red and blood red,
The stripes forever gleam;
Snow white and soul white—
The good forefathers' dream.
Sky blue and true blue, with stars to gleam aright—
The glorious guidon by day; a shelter through the night.

Your flag and my flag!
To every star and stripe
The drums beat as hearts beat,
And fifers shrilly pipe!
Your flag and my flag—
A blessing in the sky;
Your hope and my hope—
It never hid a lie!
Homeland and far land and half the world around,
Old Glory hears our glad salute and ripples to the sound!

Your flag and my flag!
And, oh, how much it holds—
Your land and my land—
Secure within its folds!
Your heart and my heart
Beat quicker at the sight;
Sun kissed and wind tossed—
Red and blue and white.
The one flag, the great flag, the flag for me and you,
Glorifies all else beside—the red and white and blue!

In addressing myself particularly to the resolution offered by the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] I desire to say, as all have said, I most heartily approve the resolution. For Congress to extend its thanks to those who served in the armed forces of the United States in the recent world conflict, and to honor them on this occasion for their patriotic sacrifice and brilliant achievements, is eminently appropriate. That Congress also extend thanks to those who served on selective-service boards and on other auxiliary relief committees is likewise fitting and proper. While we extend our heartfelt thanks, as above stated, yet on this occasion we wish to do more. We wish to express deepest sympathy for fathers, mothers, wives, kindred, and friends whose dear ones made the supreme sacrifice. We honor the memories of those whose gallant deeds are recorded among the world's greatest heroes. Every man who gave his life in support of his country was such a hero. If our information is correct, the master stroke of Alexander the Great, who conquered the world 325 years before Christ; the victories of Cæsar over the legions of Gaul 50 years before Christ; which cost him 1,000,000 men; the triumph of William the Conqueror in the year 1066, which determined on whose brow the English crown of royalty should rest for 1,000 years; and the fall of Napoleon at Waterloo 103 years ago—while these constitute the high points in the world's military achievements, yet they were but miniature affairs as compared with the great military tragedy recently enacted across the sea, in which our heroes played so brilliant a part. The earth, from center to circumference, was shaken as never before by the terror of a multitude of battles from the Marne to Sedan. It was our own brave soldiers who, just one year ago to-day, by their splendid valor stopped the advance of the mighty Prussian Army in its mad drive on Paris at Chateau-Thierry. In that memorable struggle our losses were 5,000 men, killed and wounded, and in my opinion future historians will agree that Chateau-Thierry was the turning point of the war. But we shall never forget those awful days preceding, as well as those following, that great battle. In fact, it was hard for our people to understand what was actually going on over there. Never did we realize the sad plight of our Allies until Sir Douglass Haig sent forth his far-away cry of distress, in which he said, "We need men and munitions of war; we must have help and have it quickly. We are fighting as though our backs were against the wall." In response to this call the American heart went freely and fully into the war. The crisis was past. The light of hope was soon radiant everywhere. The beginning of the end was in sight. Soon after the abandonment of the attempt to reach Paris the German battle line took definite form between Lens and Laon, later extending north to the North Sea and south to Metz. Then for weeks and months the titanic struggle was on, the line of battle vibrating like a great pendulum, gradually receding toward the east, with the glorious victory achieved November 11, 1918. Not until then did the sigh of relief fully come. But it came—came to the great joy of 100,000,000 people on this side and to our Allies abroad. Our returning braves we hail with delight to-day, and in tender memory of their fallen comrades recite the lines of Annette Kohn:

In Flanders fields, where poppies blow,
In France, where beauteous roses grow,
There let them rest—forever sleep—
While we eternal vigil keep
With our hearts love, with our souls' prayer,
For all our fallen "over there."
The morning sun will gild with light,
The stars keep holy watch at night,
The winter spread soft pall of snow,
The summer flowers about them grow,
The birds sing their sweet springtime call—
God's love and mercy guard them all.

In conclusion let me pay tribute to the men from my own State, who with Kansas, Nebraska, and other western and southwestern troops largely formed the glorious Thirty-fifth and Eighty-ninth Divisions. I do this with special pride because many of my personal friends from my congressional district were in these divisions. It is said upon good authority the Eighty-ninth Division was under shell fire continuously for 93 days, going over the top at St. Mihiel and other places, eight men of this division winning the congressional medal of honor for acts of personal bravery and 55 the croix de guerre. Likewise did our Missouri troops in the Thirty-fifth Division win honor and distinction on a hundred battle fields, as well as many others who had been transferred to other units after enlistment. We are proud of them all. As we pass from the dark clouds of war that hung so heavily over our heads the past two years and enter the glorious realm of peace, we are reminded of the prophetic wisdom of Webster when he said:

Liberty and union, now and forever, one and inseparable.

He spoke more wisely than he knew. Let the American people continue in the light of his admonition.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. AUGUSTINE LONERGAN,
OF CONNECTICUT,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Friday, June 6, 1919.

Mr. LONERGAN. Mr. Speaker, to-day is the one hundred and sixty-fourth anniversary of the birth of Nathan Hale, Connecticut's noblest son, martyr, and patriot, whose one regret, when about to make the great sacrifice for his native land, was that he had "but one life to give" for it.

A year ago the anniversary fell when Connecticut's troops were fighting with the French and British along the Vesle River, at Jaulgonne, having already blazed the way to victory at Cantigny. Since that time the Stars and Stripes have been carried to complete triumph, and, with the tricolor of France, the standards of England, Belgium, Italy, and Serbia, have swept imperial Germany from her haughty pinnacle to defeat and dismay.

It is well to pause to-day and realize that the spirit of the American troops, out of which came victory, is the spirit that animated Nathan Hale in those days when the fight was to establish the freedom of America.

And the same pride and sorrow that Connecticut kept in her heart for Nathan Hale she keeps to-day for her young sons who went out across the plains of Picardy and France to death or down to the sea in ships, never to return, sealing with their life blood the freedom of our Nation.

When the declaration of war against the Imperial German Government was proclaimed it found Connecticut ready with her troops, and 6,755 members of her National Guard were soon under Federal authority, as well as more than 500 of her Naval Militia. Later more than 35,000 went under the selective-service regulations, which recognized neither money nor position nor religion nor blood, but sent the rich man's son to war shoulder to shoulder with the poor man; sent the man whose ancestors were at Concord and Lexington alongside of the man whose ancestors learned liberty in a foreign land at the knees of Kossuth or Schurz or Daniel O'Connell; sent the sons of men who held high places in the land along with the sons of humble citizens.

When the record is completed it will show that Connecticut furnished nearly 50,000 men for the active fighting forces and that thousands more of her sons and daughters devoted all their energies to auxiliary war work, looking to the alleviation of the wounds of the injured, the improvement of the surroundings of the troops, or the reinforcement of their minds.

Mr. Speaker, Connecticut does not feel that she was alone in thus being willing to sacrifice all for the common good, but she does feel that in so doing she acted as her noblest figure in history, Nathan Hale, would himself act and would have her act. Then, too, there were represented by the names of those Connecticut sent to the great conflict nearly all the nations of the world, including the English, the Irish, the French, the Italians, the Poles, the Lithuanians, the Hebrews, the Slovaks, the Swedes, the Russians.

It was a cosmopolitan army she sent to the great struggle, but the spirit with which they went was one with that of Nathan Hale.

Hale, who gave all to his country, was a son of Yale, the university which sent forth thousands of her men in the recent war. If we find within the Nation those who would plan against it, we would fail to show proper regard for the heritage from our forefathers if we permit the disloyal to continue membership in our national family.

There is, Mr. Speaker, pending before the present Congress a bill, which I have the honor to have introduced, providing for the erection in Washington, D. C., of a monument to Nathan Hale.

I trust that it will be speedily enacted into law, that thereby the State of Connecticut and the memory of her favorite son may be honored, and that those who pass by may be inspired by the man who regretted that he had but one life to give for his country.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. HENRY I. EMERSON,
OF OHIO,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Monday, June 16, 1919.

Mr. EMERSON. Mr. Speaker, I am strongly in favor of doing justice to the soldiers, sailors, and marines who have won this war.

I have introduced an amendment to the Army appropriation bill and to the naval appropriation bill giving them $300 bonus in addition to the $60 received.

This is simple justice. We have authorized the expenditure of millions of dollars to settle war claims and uncompleted contracts. Why should we not pay the soldier a small part of what we owe him on a completed contract?

I attach hereto a letter written me by my friend I. A. Waynich, of Cleveland, Ohio:

[The Soldiers-Sailors-Marines National Weekly News, Washington, D. C., branch office, 1003–1005 Schofield Building, Cleveland, Ohio.]

JUNE 6, 1919.

Mr. H. I. EMERSON,
Member of Congress.

DEAR SIR: With my great pleasure I take the liberty to note you a sincere thanks on introducing the bill for one year's pay to every honorable discharged soldier, soldier, marine.

In regard the subject that I was talk to you some time in March, I wish that you do me a little favor; go to the Soldiers-Sailors-Marines National Weekly News, 510 Continental Trust Building, Washington, D. C., and try to investigate the place and proposition.

Also to notify you that I inclose a clip from the paper where you are represented on introducing the bill there, you will find some misunderstanding, as they were published that the World War Veterans are a branch of the American Legion.

We remain,
Yours, very truly, and with sincere thanks,
THE SOLDIERS-SAILORS-MARINES NATIONAL WEEKLY NEWS,
BRANCH OFFICE IN CLEVELAND, OHIO,
I. A. WAYNICH, Manager.

I am also in favor of granting a bonus to those who enlisted in the United States Shipping Board. They rendered service to their country, for which they should be justly compensated. I am attaching a letter from Ben B. Rosenfeld, of Cleveland, Ohio, that explains the situation better than I am able to explain it:

CLEVELAND, OHIO, June 11, 1919.

Hon. HENRY I. EMERSON,
Congressman Twenty-second District of Ohio,
House Office Building, Washington, D. C.

In re Simon Posner v. United States of America.

DEAR SIR: My advice has been sought in this matter, and believing it proper that it should be brought to the attention of our diligent, ever vigilant Representative in Congress, I take the liberty to submit to you the inclosed papers, which I certify are correct and exact copies of the originals, having been carefully compared by me.

Mr. Posner is only one of many other young men in this district who elected to do their "bit" by joining the merchant marine, going through the drudgery of scrubbing, kitchen work, and other menial chores, in the belief they were contributing fully as much toward the success of the war as were any of their brothers in any of the branches of the Army and Navy. When they were honorably discharged they were put to expense and loss by reason of having to refit themselves with civilian outfits, just the same as Army and Navy men. They gave up remunerative occupations which, in a good many instances, they could not recover and had to accept positions with smaller pay.

In the case of Mr. Posner, I know it to be a fact, he was without employment for two months after his return from the service, during which time he was forced to live on the bounty of his folks, who themselves are people in poor circumstances.

It is my belief, Mr. EMERSON, that these boys should be treated just as liberally as the Army and Navy boys in the matter of the extra $60 bounty, or is it the intention of a parental Government that future service in the merchant marine shall be looked upon "askance" and so far beneath the average intelligent man as to become a thing of detestation?

I believe, Mr. EMERSON, you will bring this to the attention of the proper committee and that your success in the matter will earn for you the gratitude of hundreds of boys in this district and, for that matter, throughout the land.

Thanking you for the time you have expended in the perusal of this communication, also hoping to have your early report, and permit me to wish you well-deserved success in all your undertakings.

Very truly, yours,

BEN B. ROSENFELD.

UNITED STATES SHIPPING BOARD,
RECRUITING SERVICE,
Cleveland, Ohio, December 18, 1918.

To whom it may concern:

This is to certify that the bearer, Simon Posner, has been granted an indefinite furlough by the United States Shipping Board Recruiting Service without pay and that this will act as his honorable discharge from said service in the event that a peace treaty is signed as a result of the present armistice.

This is to further certify that in the event that hostilities should be resumed after the ending of the present armistice that the bearer will be again subject to call into active service, but in that event only.

(Signed) IRVING L. EVANS,
Supervisor Sea Training, Great Lakes Station.

UNITED STATES SHIPPING BOARD,
Washington, April 23, 1919.

Mr. SIMON POSNER,
19220 Kempton Avenue, Cleveland, Ohio.

DEAR SIR: Receipt is acknowledged of your letter of March 11 requesting the payment of a $60 bonus.

The appropriation under which the bonus of $60 is authorized to be paid to members of the Army and Navy did not include persons who served with the merchant marine under the Shipping Board, and I regret to advise you, therefore, that there is no authority by which this bonus can be paid to you.

I am returning herewith your discharge paper.

Yours, very truly,

(Signed) JAMES V. COWERSE,
Assistant Secretary.

CLEVELAND, OHIO, May 20, 1919.

UNITED STATES SHIPPING BOARD,
Washington, D. C.

GENTLEMEN: Yours of the 23d ultimo, wherein you returned to me my discharge papers, with a refusal of the $60 bonus, came to me in the nature of a surprise as well as a distinct disappointment.

When I joined the merchant marine I did so in the consciousness and belief that I was contributing just as much toward the proper maintenance and early termination of the war as any other young man who enlisted in any of the various branches of the Army or Navy, and with that belief strengthening and fortifying my heart, I willingly underwent all of the lowly and menial duties and hardships delegated to a new man in the merchant marine. I forsook a good and remunerative position in order to do my bit, went to the expense of buying and paying for part of my uniform in this service, though I could ill afford it, as I left behind parents and minor brothers and sisters who were dependent upon my part support.

When I was honorably discharged from the merchant marine I was obliged to outfit myself with civilian clothing, etc.; was out of work for several months, all due to my fervent desire to do "my bit." Now a grateful Government does not even rate me as high as a "S. A. T. C." who never even left their home city, and in a good many instances their own home, and who yet are entitled to the bonus of $60.

Sixty dollars may neither make me rich nor poor, but I protest against your unfair and unjust ruling on this question most emphatically. Permit me to remark, your expressed interpretation degrades this particular service of the merchant marine and will surely have no tendency to induce an intelligent and self-respecting man to enter it.

Very respectfully,

My number 188. Entered port of Cleveland, training ship Missouri.

MAY 26, 1919.

Mr. SIMON POSNER,
19220 Kempton Avenue, Cleveland, Ohio.

DEAR SIR: I am pleased to acknowledge receipt of your communication of the 20th instant, in which you strenuously protest against the failure to include persons who served in the merchant marine under the Shipping Board in the appropriation under which the bonus of $60 is authorized to be paid to members of the Army and Navy.

I trust you will not regret having served in the merchant marine, because I firmly believe that every member of that branch of the service braved the same dangers as their brothers in the armed forces of the United States, and contributed in a great measure to the early and successful termination of the war in our struggle for democracy.

The appropriation under which the bonus of $60 is authorized to be paid to members of the Army and Navy was passed by an act of Congress, and I feel reasonably certain that you will not hold this board responsible for its lack of authority to pay this bonus.

Yours, very truly,

JAMES V. COWERSE,
Assistant Secretary.

Memorial Day.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. ADDISON T. SMITH,
OF IDAHO.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Friday, May 30, 1919.

On the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 67) tendering the thanks of Congress to those who served or gave others to the service of the country in the Great War.

Resolved, etc., That the thanks of Congress are hereby extended to those who served in the armed forces of the United States in the war against the Imperial German Government and who, through their patriotic sacrifice, steadfast fidelity, brilliant strategy, and courageous service, secured a victorious peace, gave to the world a new insight into the high ideals and lofty purposes of America, and left to future generations a splendid heritage of heroic achievement and noble devotion to duty.

That the thanks of Congress are hereby extended to those who served on the selective-service boards in the various auxiliary forces, whose patriotic, humane, and benevolent work at home and on the field of battle contributed so greatly to the organization, comfort, and support of our valiant warriors.

That the thanks of Congress are hereby extended to the mothers, wives, and relatives who, patriotic and uncomplaining, gave their nearest and their dearest in the hour of the Nation's need, and its deep and heartfelt sympathy is extended to those whose kindred fell, or were permanently disabled in the great struggle.

That Congress reverently expresses its profound appreciation of the sublime act of those who made the supreme sacrifice by giving their lives for their country and their country's cause.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, I am most heartily in favor of the pending resolution, and I am certain that every loyal citizen in this country will approve our action here to-day in expressing officially the appreciation of Congress of the splendid service which has been rendered by our brave boys and the other patriots mentioned in the resolution whose cooperation aided so materially in the glorious and righteous victory over which the people of the allied powers are constantly rejoicing.

On a visit to Boston after the Battle of Bunker Hill, Gen. Washington inquired of one of his officers, who had been in that bloody engagement, "Did the militia fight?" "They did," was the reply. "Then the country is saved," said Washington. Yes; the citizen soldier both in the Army and the Navy fought nobly, manfully, gallantly, stubbornly, with ever-increasing bravery, through all the wars of our country, upholding the splendid traditions of the Stars and Stripes, defending our firesides and our homes against any and all who would wrest from us that precious liberty vouchsafed to us by the blood of our forefathers and dedicated forever to the sacred principles of justice, equality, and humanity. They likewise fought in the War of 1848 and kept the invader from our fair land; they fought and died in the Civil War to forever preserve the Union, that "this Nation under God should have a new birth of freedom" and "that government of the people, by the people, for the people" should forever live.

In 1898 they fought on land and sea to free from the yoke of tyranny and oppression that fair isle of Cuba, and by their sacrifices, by their daring, by their unselfish devotion to the splendid ideals of this land of the free and home of the oppressed of all climes they lifted up from the mire of desolation and despair that little island in the sea, taught her to govern herself and to take her place among the free nations of the earth.

There hovered over the world during the succeeding years the blackest cataclysm that since the dawn of time had ever threatened a peaceful civilization. The storm broke in all its fury in 1914. Little did we realize then, living in peace and plenty by our own happy firesides, that our citizen soldiery would be again called upon to perform the most stupendous task ever allotted to manly men in the tide of time.

It is unnecessary to go into the details of what happened from the time the brutal autocracy of Germany invaded peaceful, friendly Belgium to date April 6, 1917, when the Congress of the United States, aroused to the grave danger that threatened this fair land, declared that a state of war existed between our Government and the then Imperial Government of Germany. We were poorly prepared even to defend ourselves upon our own shores, much less to fight a foe beyond the trackless ocean 3,000 miles away. But America was never known to flinch, never known to show the "white feather," when our Nation's life was exposed to danger or our national rights imperiled.

Certainly, Mr. Speaker, the achievements of our forces make a glorious record for the American soldiers and marines, who fought side by side through sunshine and rain, through flame and gas, through bitter days and nights of shock and shell, through cold and muddy trenches, through barbed-wire entanglements, uncomplainingly, bravely, willing at all times, if necessary, to lay upon the altar of freedom even their lives; and they will continue to fight on for God, for country, and for home before they would yield up the liberty won by our forefathers in the War of the Revolution. When the crucial test came, when we must fight or perish, we had only a very small Army, our Navy was negligible, and our Government was confronted by a stupendous problem.

I shall not cite statistical data except to say that our expenditures during the period of the war just ended—something over 18 months—amounted to over thirty-one billions, while the cost of running the National Government during the first 143 years of our history amounted to about $25,000,000,000. Immediately when war was declared a spirit of patriotism ran riot throughout the land, and the minds and hearts of patriots were firmly fixed upon the determination to save our country from a merciless foe ere it be too late.

Throughout all the States of the Union the people gladly and willingly heard the call to arms and responded ungrudgingly with men and money; they denied themselves many necessary things that they might subscribe to Liberty bonds; they made numerous and many sacrifices that they might give; and they gave willingly and gladly to the Red Cross, the Salvation Army, and other noble kindred war activities for the comfort of their boys. Time and again, and again, and again, throughout the land, the people were asked to give and give and give, and give they did, and gladly; their one and only thought being to back our boys "over there" who composed the iron wall that kept the barbarous hordes of Huns from invading our shores, destroying our cities, murdering our women and children, and bringing upon us the woe and desolation they had visited upon Belgium, fair France, and other countries of blood-soaked Europe. Millions of boys answered the call to arms and registered to serve their country. Fathers, mothers, sweethearts, sisters, wives, although it cut deep into their hearts to do it, urged the boys to go. But, thank God, there were but few instances where any urging was needed.

The anguish the relatives and friends of these boys endured through the long months of separation, knowing their dear ones were exposed to the deadly gas, the bursting shrapnel, the stinging machine-gun bullets, and the pestilence of disease is well described by the poet:

A FATHER'S PRAYER.

By K. G. Duffield.

I ain't been much on prayin', God,
  Er goin' t' church;
I've tried t' do what I thought wuz right,
A-helpin' my friends an' treatin' em white.
I may be sharp on a business deal,
I haven't lied an' I wouldn't steal.
An' so I'm askin' you, God, to-night:
Watch over Bill when we start t' fight.

I know you've a lot uv work t' do
  Way over there,
A-watchin' th' Hun at his hellish play,
An' countin' the souls ez they fly away.
Bill's only a boy, but he had t' go,
With mother an' me a-lovin' him so.
An' so we pray, dear God, to-night:
Watch over Bill when we start t' fight.

We're lonely, God, an' want our boy,
  Across th' sea.
All we can do is wait an' pray;
It's hard t' bear with him away.
Oh, keep him clean an' brave an' true;
He's fightin' fer mother an' me an' You.
So hear me, God, ez I pray to-night:
Watch over Bill when we start t' fight.

We know it will end somehow, some day,
  Ez all things do.
Th' dead will sleep in th' madman's track,
An' only th' strong come marchin' back.
We'll count it lost if th' fight is won,
Th' price uv success—our only son.
An' so I pray, dear God, to-night:
Watch over Bill when we start t' fight.

In a short time we had nearly 4,500,000 men enlisted in the Army and Navy and Marine Corps. We promised the Allies that on the 1st of July, 1918, we would send them 600,000 fighting men. As a matter of fact, we had nearly 2,000,000 over there by that time. Back of these, in the various training camps throughout our land, we had another 2,000,000 ready at the call of our Government to cross the seas in defense of liberty. Back of these 2,000,000 there were four or five millions more brave, splendid young Americans classified and waiting, eagerly waiting, to be called if Old Glory said "Come." But whether in the cantonments of America or upon the battle fields of France, they are all entitled to that homage and praise befitting true Americans. They were just listening for the call of Uncle Sam to go, and they would have gone, gladly, joyously, to the fields of honor and glory, and, if need be, to the silence of the grave, to uphold as deathless a cause as ever inspired the patriots of old.

The National Guard of the various States—how like the Minute Men of Lexington and Concord! How each heart swelled with pride at the opportunity of fighting for this glorious land! Every one of them had the spirit of Nathan Hale, the Continental soldier and American spy, who, when caught by the enemy, before his execution was asked if he had anything to say, replied, "My only regret is that I have but one life to give to my country." That is the spirit which animated our boys, and it is admitted by all the world's great commanders everywhere that our troops were the finest body of men that ever trod upon the shores of Europe. The record of their heroic deeds will live unblemished throughout the ages. Seventy thousand of our boys are sleeping in the fields of Flanders and France and on the shell-riven fields of Belgium. A most beautiful tribute has been paid these brave men by Edith Wharton, which well expresses the affection in which they are held by a grateful people.

YOU AND YOU.

Every one of you won the war—
You and you and you—
Each one knowing what it was for
And what was his job to do.

Every one of you won the war,
Obedient, unwearied, unknown;
Dung in the trenches, drift on the shore,
Dust to the world's end blown;
Every one of you, steady and true,
You and you and you—
Down in the pit or up in the blue,
Whether you crawled or sailed or flew,
Whether your closest comrade knew,
Or you bore the brunt alone—

All of you, all of you, name after name,
Jones and Robinson, Smith and Brown,
You from the piping prairie town,
You from the Fundy fogs that came,
You from the city's roaring blocks,
You from the bleak New England rocks,
With the shingled roof in the apple boughs;
You from the brown adobe house,
You from the Rockies, you from the coast,
You from the burning frontier post,
And you from the Klondike's frozen flanks;
You from the cedar swamps, you from the pine,
You from the cotton and you from the vine,
You from the rice and the sugar brakes,
You from the rivers and you from the lakes,
You from the creeks and you from the licks,
And you from the brown bayou—
You and you and you—
You from the pulpit, you from the mine,
You from the factories, you from the banks,
Closer and closer, ranks on ranks,
Airplanes and cannon, and rifles and tanks,
Smith and Robinson, Brown and Jones,
Ruddy faces or bleaching bones,
After the turmoil and blood and pain,
Swinging home to the folks again
Or sleeping alone in the fine French rain—
Every one of you won the war.
Every one of you won the war—
You and you and you—
Pressing and pouring forth, more and more,
Toiling and straining from shore to shore
To reach the flaming edge of the dark,
Where man in his millions went up like a spark,
You, in your thousands and millions coming,
All the sea plowed with you, all the air humming,
All the land loud with you,
All our hearts proud with you,
All our souls bowed with the awe of your coming!

Where's the Arch high enough,
Lads, to receive you,
Where's the eye dry enough,
Dears, to perceive you,
When at last and at last in your glory you come
Tramping home?

Every one of you won the war—
You and you and you—
You that carry an unscathed head,
You that halt with a broken tread,
And oh, most of all, you Dead, you Dead!

Lift up the Gates for these that are last,
That are last in the great Procession.
Let the living pour in, take possession,
Flood back to the city, the ranch, the farm,
The church, and the college and mill;
Back to the office, the store, the exchange;
Back to the wife, with the babe on her arm;
Back to the mother that waits on the sill,
And the supper that's hot on the range.

And now, when the last of them all are by,
Be the Gates lifted up on high
To let those Others in,
Those Others, their brothers, that softly tread;
That come so thick, yet take no ground;
That are so many, yet make no sound;
Our Dead, our Dead, our Dead!

O silent and secretly moving throng,
In your fifty thousand strong,
Coming at dusk when the wreaths have dropt,
And streets are empty and music stopt:
Silently coming to hearts that wait
Dumb in the door and dumb at the gate,
And hear your step and fly to your call—
Every one of you won the war,
But you, you Dead, most of all!

It was recently my privilege to visit the battle fields of France and to meet and talk with the soldiers, sailors, and marines from every section of the Union and to learn something by observation of the hardships they endured and the dangers they encountered. I stood by many a lonely grave of our boys who had given their young lives for their country's honor. I returned to America a more devoted lover of my country and more proud of being an American citizen than ever before. My heart swelled with pride when I realized more than ever that the history of the armies of the world shows no parallel with the American soldiers in excellence of physique, in high ideals, in chivalry, in splendid morals, in courage, in daring, in savage intensity when fighting, and in kindness and forbearance to the vanquished. They fought, not for money, not for glory, not for power, but for those precious ideals forever enshrined in the hearts of all true Americans, which have made this country the foremost Nation of the world.

THEY'RE COMING HOME.

They hurried on from Portland, Maine,
And Portland, Oregon,
From lake and gulf and hill and plain,
The blue and drab to don.

They left the office and the mill,
The shop, the school, the bank;
Each with a single heart and will,
Each one a fighting Yank.

Onward! Their only battle cry;
Forward! To win or die;
And victory has gone their way
In every chapter of the fray,
Till love and longing now can say,
"The Yanks are coming home."

From flame and gas and bitter days
And nights of shock and shell
They're coming home in peaceful ways
Once more with us to dwell.

And hats are in the air,
And drums roll out and trumpets blare,
Their work well done, in triumph come,
Our boys from "over there."

Hark! As the chorus swells the cry
Triumphant from on high,
The heavens sing for you and me,
The ocean's safe, the land is free,
The world throughout knows liberty!
"The Yanks are coming home."

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. JAIME C. DE VEYRA.
OF THE PHILIPPINES,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Wednesday, June 11, 1919.

Mr. DE VEYRA. Mr. Speaker, under the leave granted to me to extend my remarks in the RECORD I include a memorial from the Commissioners from the Philippines to the joint commission of the House and Senate.

The memorial is as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States:

The undersigned, members of the Philippine mission, pursuant to the instructions received from the Philippine Legislature and in accordance with the wishes of the Filipino people, beg to submit hereby to the Congress of the United States of America a formal petition that the independence of the Philippine Islands be granted at this time.

It is confidently hoped and believed that the Congress will not suffer this opportunity to pass by at a time when the whole world is so anxious to see international relations established upon newer and more solid foundations of universal justice and liberty.

America has constituted herself and has justly been recognized as the champion of the rights of humanity in the last World War, and due in a great measure to her heroic efforts and generous aid mankind has been saved from the thraldom of greed and oppression, and the rights of small and weaker nations to exist side by side with the great powers vindicated.

The recognition of the independence of the Philippines at this time will constitute an object lesson to the whole world in respect of the lofty and altruistic aims which have prompted America to take part in the Great War, for it will furnish a parctical application of her doctrine of self-determination.

For the first time in the history of colonial relations a subject and alien race comes to ask the severance of their political connection with the sovereign nation without recounting any act of injustice, but rather with a feeling of gratitude and affection. Our plea for independence is based not on the injustice which might be found in the forcible subjection of the Filipinos, but on the justice of our claim that the national sovereignty of our people be fully recognized, in order that we may freely fulfill our own mission and contribute to the spread and establishment of democracy and Christian institutions in the Far East.

With this end in view, we respectfully submit the following propositions:

1. That as defined and established in the act of Congress of August 29, 1916, the purpose of the Government of the United States is to withdraw its sovereignty over the Philippine Islands as soon as a stable government can be established therein.

2. That in accordance with the terms and provisions of said law the people of the Philippines have organized a government that has been in operation for nearly three years and which has offered complete evidence that conditions are ripe for the establishment of an independent government that will be fully capable of maintaining law and order, administer justice, promote the welfare of all the inhabitants of the islands, and discharge as well its international obligations.

3. That the Filipino people desire their independence at this time, and along with that independence they confidently hope to preserve the bonds of good understanding and friendship which bind them to the United States, and to foster the free development of commercial relations between the two countries.

I.

The act of Congress of August 29, 1916, entitled "An act to declare the purpose of the people of the United States as to the future political status of the people of the Philippine Islands and to provide a more autonomous government for those islands," said in its preamble:

Whereas it was never the intention of the people of the United States in the incipiency of the War with Spain to make it a war of conquest or for territorial aggrandizement; and
Whereas it is, as it has always been, the purpose of the people of the United States to withdraw their sovereignty over the Philippine Islands and to recognize their independence as soon as a stable government can be established therein; and
Whereas for the speedy accomplishment of such purpose it is desirable to place in the hands of the people of the Philippines as large a control of their domestic affairs as can be given them without, in the meantime, impairing the exercise of the rights of sovereignty by the people of the United States in order that, by the use and exercise of popular franchise and governmental powers, they may be the better prepared to fully assume the responsibilities and enjoy all the privileges of complete independence, etc.

The statements contained in the above preamble have had the effect of ratifying and giving concrete form to the declarations which, ever since the advent of American sovereignty in the Philippines up to the enactment of said law, the Presidents of the United States and their representatives have been making concerning America's aim and policy in the islands.

President McKinley, at the beginning of the Spanish-American War, said:

Forcible annexation can not be thought of; that, according to the American code of morals, is criminal aggression.

In President McKinley's instructions to the first Philippine Commission, on the 20th of January, 1899, he expressed the hope that these commissioners would be received as bearers of "the richest blessings of a liberating rather than a conquering Nation."

In his message to Congess in the same year, among other things concerning the Philippines, he said:

We shall continue, as we have begun, to open the schools and the churches, to set the courts in operation, to foster industry and trade and agriculture, and in every way in our power to make these people whom Providence has brought within our jurisdiction feel that it is their liberty and not our power, their welfare and not our gain, we are seeking to enhance.

And again he said:

The Philippines are ours, not to exploit but to develop, to civilize, to educate, to train in the science of self-government. This is the path of duty which we must follow or be recreant to a mighty trust committed to us.

Upon another occasion he said:

We accepted the Philippines from high duty in the interest of their inhabitants, and for humanity and civilization. Our sacrifices were with this high motive. We want to improve the condition of the inhabitants, securing them peace, liberty, and the pursuit of their highest good.

In his message to Congress in the following year he said:

The fortune of war has thrown upon this Nation an unsought trust which should be unselfishly discharged, and devolved upon this Government a moral as well as material responsibility toward those millions whom we have freed from an oppressive yoke.

I have on another occasion called the Filipinos "the wards of the Nation." Our obligation as guardian was not lightly assumed; it must not be otherwise than honestly fulfilled, aiming, first of all, to benefit those who have come under our fostering care. It is our duty so to treat them that our flag may be no less beloved in the mountains of Luzon and the fertile zones of Mindanao and Negros than it is at home; that here, as here, it shall be the revered symbol of liberty, enlightenment, and progress in every avenue of development.

The Filipinos are a race quick to learn and to profit by knowledge.

In his instructions to the second Philippine commission he made the following observations:

In all the forms of Government and administrative provisions which they are authorized to prescribe, the commission should bear in mind that the Government which they are establishing is designed not for our satisfaction or for the expression of our theoretical views but for the happiness, peace, and prosperity of the people of the Philippine Islands.

President Taft, while Civil Governor of the Philippine Islands, on the 17th of December, 1903, said:

From the beginning to the end of the State papers which were circulated in these islands as authoritative expressions of the Executive, the motto that "the Philippines are for the Filipinos," and that the Government of the United States is here for the purpose of preserving the "Philippines for the Filipinos" for their benefit, for their elevation, for their civilization, again and again and again appear.

And upon the same occasion, and in response to a particularly vicious newspaper attack which was then being made upon him by the American papers published in the islands, he said:

Some of our young lions of the local press have spoken of the "childish slogan," "The Philippines for the Filipinos." It is unnecessary to comment on the adjective used, but it is sufficient to say that, whether childish or not, the principle makes up the web and woof of the policy of the United States with respect to these islands, as it has been authoritatively declared by two Presidents of the United States—for President Roosevelt has followed sedulously the policy of President McKinley—and by the interpretation of the supreme popular will, the Congress of the United States.

He points out that the actions of the President, as well as his instructions, have been expressly approved and ratified by an act of Congress.

President Roosevelt, in his message to Congress of December 6, 1904, said:

We are endeavoring to develop the natives themselves so that they shall take an ever-increasing share in their own government, and as far as is prudent we are already admitting their representatives to a governmental equality with our own. * * * If they show that they are capable of electing a legislature which in its turn is capable of taking a sane and efficient part in the actual work of government, they can rest assured that a full and increasing measure of recognition will be given them.

And in 1906 he said:

We are constantly increasing the measure of liberty accorded the islanders, and next spring, if conditions warrant, we shall take a great stride forward in testing their capacity for self-government by summoning the first Filipino legislative assembly; and the way in which they stand this test will largely determine whether the self-government thus granted will be increased or decreased; for if we have erred at all in the Philippines it has been in proceeding too rapidly in the direction of granting a large measure of self-government.

When Mr. Taft was Secretary of War, in the course of a special report upon the Philippines, he said:

When they have learned the principles of successful popular self-government from a gradually enlarged experience therein we can discuss the question whether independence is what they desire and grant it or whether they prefer the retention of a closer association with the country which, by its guidance, has unselfishly led them on to better conditions.

In a special report made by Secretary Taft on the Philippines and their political future, with special reference to the policy which had been pursued there, he said:

The conditions in the islands to-day vindicate and justify that policy. It necessarily involves in its ultimate conclusion as the steps toward self-government become greater and greater the ultimate independence of the islands, although, of course, if both the United States and the islands were to continue a governmental relation between them like that between England and Australia, there would be nothing inconsistent with the present policy in such a result.

Further on he says:

Thus far the policy of the Philippines has worked. It has been attacked on the ground that we have gone too fast, that we have given the natives too much power. The meeting of the assembly and the conservative tone of that body thus far disclosed makes for our view rather than that of our opponents.

In 1908, after the inauguration of the Philippine Assembly, President Roosevelt in his message to Congress said:

Real progress toward self-government is being made in the Philippine Islands.

And in referring to the Philippine Assembly, he said:

Hitherto this Philippine Legislature has acted with moderation and self-restraint, and has seemed in practical fashion to realize the eternal truth that there must always be government, and that the only way in which any body of individuals can escape the necessity of being governed by outsiders is to show that they are able to restrain themselves, to keep down wrongdoing and disorder. The Filipino people, through their officials, are therefore making real steps in the direction of self-government. I hope and believe that these steps mark the beginning of a course which will continue till the Filipinos become fit to decide for themselves whether they desire to be an independent nation.

In a special message to Congress on January 27, 1908, transmitting a special report made by Secretary Taft on the Philippines, he said:

But no great civilized power has ever managed with such wisdom and disinterestedness the affairs of a people committed by the accident of war to its hands. Save only our attitude toward Cuba, I question whether there is a brighter page in the annals of international dealings between the strong and the weak than the page which tells of our doings in the Philippines.

Further on he says:

The islanders have made real advances in a hopeful direction, and they have opened well with the new Philippine Assembly; they have yet a long way to travel before they will be fit for complete self-government, and for deciding, as it will then be their duty to do, whether this self-government shall be accompanied by complete independence.

Former Governor General James F. Smith, in an article entitled "The Philippines as I saw them," published in the Sunset Magazine of December, 1911, said:

The holding of the Philippines, not for selfish exploitation but as a sacred trust for the benefit of those residing in them, the establishment of a government, not for our satisfaction or for the expression of our theoretical views but for the happiness, peace, and prosperity of the Filipino people, the evolution of a government by Americans assisted by Filipinos, into a government of Filipinos assisted by Americans, and the education and preparation of the people for popular self-government was the broad policy of President McKinley, of President Roosevelt, of Governor Taft, of Governor General Wright, of Governor General Ide, and of all their successors. It is the policy to-day, and its continuance will, I believe, bring the Filipino race happy and contented to the realization of its hopes and ideal rarely attained, rarely enjoyed, save through blood and tears.

After Secretary Taft was elected President, in a message to Congress, delivered on December 6, 1912, he said:

We should * * * endeavor to secure for the Filipinos economic independence and to fit them for complete self-government, with the power to decide eventually, according to their own largest good, whether such self-government shall be accompanied by independence.

Secretary Stimson, in his annual report of 1912, said:

The policy of the United States was definitely and materially declared in the instructions of President McKinley to the Philippine Commission of April 7, 1900, and it has never been departed from since. It is contained in every step of the consistent progress of our insular government. President McKinley's statement was expressly and affirmatively confirmed by the Congress of the United States in the organic act for the Philippine Government of July 1, 1902. Briefly, this policy may be expressed as having for its sole object the preparation of the Philippine people for popular self-government in their own interest and in the interest of the United States * * *.

The postponement of the question of independence for the islands has been deliberately made, not for promoting our interests, but solely in order to enable that momentous question to be determined intelligently by the Philippine people in the light of their own highest interest.

On the 1st of March, 1913, President Taft adverted to the Democratic platform with reference to the Philippines and quoted that portion of it which referred to the purpose of the United States to "recognize the independence of the Philippine Islands as soon as a stable government can be established, and said that this was "an affirmation of policy only slightly differing from that repeatedly announced by this and preceding Republican administrations."

Governor General W. Cameron Forbes, in his farewell speech before leaving the islands, made the statement "that the platforms of both parties reached the same general conclusion in regard to the granting of independence when a stable government should be established." He subsequently, in a published speech in this country, corrected this statement to the extent of substituting the word "policies" for the word "platforms."

Upon the present administration coming into authority here, the President authorized Governor General Harrison, in his opening address, to make the following statement:

We regard ourselves as trustees, acting, not for the advantage of the United States but for the benefit of the people of the Philippine Islands. Every step we take will be taken with a view to the ultimate independence of the islands and as a preparation for that independence, and we hope to move toward that end as rapidly as the safety and the permanent interests of the islands will permit. After each step taken experience will guide us to the next. The administration will take one step at once, and it will give to the native citizens of the islands a majority in the appointive commission, and thus in the upper as well as in the lower house of the legislature a majority representation will be secured to them. We do this in the confident hope and expectation that immediate proof will be given in the action of the commission under the new arrangement of the political capacity of those native citizens who have already come forward to represent and to lead their people in affairs.

President Wilson, in his message to Congress delivered on December 2, 1913, said:

* * * Porto Rico, Hawaii, the Philippines are ours, indeed, but not ours to do what we please with. Such territories, once regarded as mere possessions, are no longer to be selfishly exploited; they are part of the domain of public conscience and of serviceable and enlightened statesmanship. We must administer them for the people who live in them and with the same sense of responsibility to them as toward our own people in our domestic affairs. No doubt we shall successfully enough bind Porto Rico and the Hawaiian Islands to ourselves by ties of justice and interest and affection, but the performance of our duty toward the Philippines is a more difficult and debatable matter. We can satisfy the obligations of generous justice toward the people of Porto Rico by giving them the ample and familiar rights and privileges accorded our own citizens in our own Territories and our obligations toward the people of Hawaii by perfecting the provisions for self-government already granted them, but in the Philippines we must go further. We must hold steadily in view their ultimate independence, and we must move toward the time of that independence as steadily as the way can be cleared and the foundations thoughtfully and permanently laid.

Acting under the authority conferred upon the President by Congress, I have already accorded the people of the islands a majority in both houses of their legislative body by appointing five instead of four native citizens to the membership of the commission. I believe that in this way we shall make proof of their capacity in counsel and their sense of responsibility in the exercise of political power, and that the success of this step will be sure to clear our view for the steps which are to follow. Step by step we should extend and perfect the system of self-government in the islands, making test of them and modifying them as experience discloses their successes and their failures; so that we should more and more put under the control of the native citizens of the archipelago the essential instruments of their life, their local instrumentalities of government, their schools, all the common interests of their communities, and so by counsel and experience set up a government which all the world will see to be suitable to a people whose affairs are under their control. At last, I hope and believe, we are beginning to gain the confidence of the Filipino people. By their counsel and experience, rather than by our own, we shall learn how best to serve them and how soon it will be possible and wise to withdraw our supervision. Let us once find the path and set out with firm and confident tread upon it and we shall not wander from it nor linger upon it.

In another message to Congress, delivered on December 8, 1914, he said:

There is another great piece of legislation which awaits and should receive the sanction of the Senate: I mean the bill which gives a larger measure of self-government to the people of the Philippines. How better, in this time of anxious questioning and perplexed policy, could we show our confidence in the principles of liberty as the source as well as the expression of life, how better could we demonstrate our own self-possession and steadfastness in the courses of justice and disinterestedness than by thus going calmly forward to fulfill our promises to a dependent people, who will now look more anxiously than ever to see whether we have indeed the liberality, the unselfishness, the courage, the faith we have boasted and professed. I can not believe that the Senate will let this great measure of constructive justice await the action of another Congress. Its passage would nobly crown the record of these two years of memorable labor.

And in his message to Congress delivered on December 7, 1915, he said:

There is another matter which seems to me to be very intimately associated with the question of national safety and preparation for defense. That is our policy toward the Philippines and the people of Porto Rico. Our treatment of them and their attitude toward us are manifestly of the first consequence in the development of our duties in the world and in getting a free hand to perform those duties. We must be free from every unnecessary burden or embarrassment, and there is no better way to be clear of embarrassment than to fulfill our promises and promote the interests of those dependent on us to the utmost. Bills for the alteration and reform of the government of the Philippines and for rendering fuller political justice to the people of Porto Rico were submitted to the Sixty-third Congress. They will be submitted also to you. I need not particularize their details. You are most of you already familiar with them. But I do recommend them to your early adoption with the sincere conviction that there are few measures you could adopt which would more serviceably clear the way for the great policies by which we wish to make good, now and always, our right to lead in enterprises of peace and good will and economic and political freedom.

In the January, 1915, number of Everybody's Magazine ex-President Roosevelt indorsed this contention, and said:

If we act so that the natives understand us to have made a definite promise, then we should live up to that promise. The Philippines, from a military standpoint, are a source of weakness to us. The present administration has promised explicitly to let them go, and by its action has rendered it difficult to hold them against any serious foreign foe. These being the circumstances, the islands should at an early moment be given their independence, without any guaranty whatever by us and without our retaining any foothold in them.

As stated at the outset, all of the preceding statements were finally adopted or ratified by the Congress by the passage on August 29, 1916, of the law generally known as the Jones law.

In view of the documents above quoted, of the official statements made by the constitutional representatives of the American people, and of the steps taken in accordance with those statements, the policy of the United States in the Philippines appears to be clearly defined, namely, that it has never been nor is it the purpose of the United States to retain possession of the Philippine Islands for exploitation and self-aggrandizement, but rather for the welfare, education, and liberty of their inhabitants; that the government therein established is designed not for the satisfaction or for the expression of the theoretical views of the American people, but the training of the Filipinos in the science of self-government by means of gradual participation in the administration of their own affairs; that when the Filipinos shall have learned the principles of popular self-government, then it is for them to decide whether they should be independent or remain under the sovereignty of the United States; and, finally, that it is the purpose of the Government of the United States to grant the Filipinos their complete independence as soon as a stable government can be established in the islands.

As has been indicated, President McKinley originally outlined this policy, which Mr. Taft so happily summed up in his immortal phrase, "the Philippines for the Filipinos." Such a policy has been faithfully observed by his successors in office and carried on by the present administration to such an extent that the Filipinos have been afforded an opportunity to show that they are in fact able to exercise the duties and powers of a popular, complete self-government.

In view of the foregoing considerations there remains nothing to be determined, in accordance with the avowed policy of the United States above adverted to, but the following points:

1. Whether the Filipinos have met the requirements prescribed in the act of Congress of August 29, 1916; that is to say, whether they have shown that they are sufficiently prepared to establish an independent, stable government.

2. Whether the Filipinos prefer independence to any other political status or condition.

II.

This chapter is devoted to an account of the work done by the Filipinos ever since they have been allowed to take an active part in the affairs of their government, and particularly after the establishment of the autonomous government authorized by the Jones law, with a view of showing that conditions in the islands are ripe for the establishment of a stable, independent government.

For a better understanding of the subject, it will be necessary to divide this chapter into various sections and to limit ourselves to the treatment of those fundamental elements which constitute the foundation of a popular self-government and insure its stability and development.

REORGANIZATION OF THE INSULAR GOVERNMENT.

The enactment of the Jones law, in so far as it gave the Filipinos a greater autonomy in the administration of their public affairs, has put to a test the degree of political training acquired by the Filipinos under American methods as well as their ability in the organization of an efficient national government. From a study of the manner in which the Filipinos effected the reorganization of the insular government previously existing, the principles followed by them, the difficulties which they had to overcome, and the results aimed at and attained by such reorganization, we may form an adequate judgment as to whether they possess or not the required capacity for independence.

This was not the first time in which the Filipinos attempted the establishment of a national government. They have had experience along that line when the revolutionary congress at Malolos drafted a constitution for the short-lived Philippine Republic under the leadership of Aguinaldo and proceeded to establish a government in accordance with the terms of that constitution. We find, however, this difference: Whereas at that time they had complete freedom of action and could adopt a model which seemed to them most satisfactory, in the reorganization of the insular government their action was circumscribed by the fundamental rules prescribed by the Jones law. This law is, in fact, a constitution granted by an alien people for the government of another of different race and with different civilization, inhabiting a territory 10,000 miles away. Notwithstanding the difficulties which thus obtained and the restrictions to which they were subjected, the Filipinos faced the task with courage, and reorganized the central government in such a way that it resulted, not in a mere copy of the presidential form of government of the United States but in a system more in harmony with the tendencies and reforms advocated by eminent American authorities on constitutional systems.

Under the system adopted by the Filipinos, the members of the cabinet are responsible for their official conduct, not only to the Governor General but also to the Philippine Legislature.

The reorganization act provides that the secretaries of department may be called upon by any of the two houses of the legislature concerning any matter affecting their respective departments, and they are legally bound to appear before such houses for the purpose of giving such information as may be required of them whenever the nature of the matter permits it and the Governor General consents thereto. They are also entitled to be heard by either of the two houses of the legislature for the purpose of reporting on matters pertaining to their departments. In this manner it was made possible not only to impose upon the members of the executive department a certain degree of responsibility to the popular branch of the government and, indirectly, to the people, but also a greater harmony was thereby established between those two branches of the government. In this manner also the Governor General, who is an American, and is the person authorized by law to appoint the members of the cabinet and other higher officers of the government, finds it necessary to consult the representatives of the people with regard to the appointments made by him. The consent of the senate, therefore, is a real check to any arbitrary act of the executive.

In order to insure better harmony between the executive and the legislative departments of the government, there has also been created a body known as the council of state, the duties of which are to aid and advise the governor general on public matters. This body is composed of the Governor General, the presidents of both houses of the legislature, the members of the cabinet, and such other members as the Governor General may appoint. The constitution of the council of state promises to solve the problem of responsible leadership in our government. It may not only avoid violent conflicts which might occur between the executive and the legislative branches of the government, but it also enables the people to fix the responsibility for the conduct and administration of public affairs. The council of state has also the advantage of permitting the Governor General to look to it for counsel concerning local and international matters of vital importance to the country. There can be no question as to the usefulness of the council of state, and the rôle which it plays in matters concerning the government gives to the latter that unity of action which is at once harmonious, effective, and responsible—an element so necessary and essential to the regular and orderly course of public affairs.

Among the reforms made by the legislature after the passage of the Jones law was the adoption of a budget system in the financial operations of the government. The adoption of this system has cured the deficiencies arising out of a lack of a systematic plan in the expenditure of public funds. Under the former system, which was quite analogous to the one still obtaining in the United States, there was no fixed responsibility for the preparation and submission of appropriation bills. Each bureau of the government prepared its estimates and sent the same to the legislature through the executive secretary. The executive secretary had neither the power of revision nor of coordination, but his task was confined to the compilation of all the estimates, and to the transmission of the same in their original form to the legislature. Under such a system each bureau, without taking into account the needs of the other bureaus, merely tried to ask for and obtain the most it could possibly obtain, and its success or lack of success in this respect depended on whether or not it had the sympathy of, or could exercise a greater or less influence on, the members of the legislature. The result of this system was a costly bureaucracy and an unnecessary duplication in the work and activities of the government. All of these deficiencies were cured by the introduction of the budget system, and its results have more than justified its adoption.

The secretary of finance is charged with the duty of preparing the budget after the estimates have been approved by the different secretaries of department. The budget is then submitted to the cabinet for discussion and adoption, and once approved it is ordered printed and then submitted to the legislature for its action. Under this system it is not only possible to know and carry out a systematic plan in the expenditure of public funds, but effective and united action on the part of the cabinet is also insured. The expenses of the different departments are coordinated and simplified and a proper distribution of appropriations among them is effected. Through this system the public enjoys the unusual advantage of knowing in whole and in detail the different purposes to which the money which they pay in taxes and imposts is devoted. In practice the system has resulted in materially reducing the number of appropriation bills for each year, which, in 1916, when the former system was in vogue, amounted to 37 laws.

It is generally admitted that the adoption of the budget system marks a decided improvement over the old system and is considered as one of the greatest achievements of the Filipino people. It has placed the Philippines, to use the words of Governor General Harrison, "among the foremost progressive nations in fiscal legislation."

The speaker of the house of representatives, Hon. Sergio Osmena, has clearly explained the scope and object of the reorganization of the insular government in the following terms:

This legislature, the first organized under the auspices of the new law and inaugurated on October 16, 1916, is imbued jointly with the new impulses of liberty and democracy, with the highest sense of order and responsibility. Thus it has respected established institutions and retained government practice in so far as compatible with the changes necessary. It has equally shunned the influence of unsafe reforms adopted in a foolhardy manner and the puerile timidity that hinders all constructive work, and the country has assumed the plenitude of the powers recognized by law. The examination of the structure of the government authorized by the Jones act has been calm and minute. It has been compared with that of the governments of other countries. Entering without hesitancy upon the vast field of theory and practice of the best governments of the world, the Filipino Nation has had an opportunity to make new use of its old maturity of judgment, of its acknowledged self-control, adjusting the flights of its mind anxious of innovations to the constitutional limitations and the real needs of our own life and conditions.

One of the points brought up concerned the relations of the executive to the legislature. The scope of these relations under the presidential régime and of those generally found under the parliamentary system has been investigated.

Neither of these two systems has been adopted definitely; but though recognizing that the organic law retains certain notable features of the presidential régime, the Filipinos have not given up the idea of improving and perfecting the system implanted by the law referred to. Within the bounds of the existing constitutional limitations certain touches have been given to our political institutions which give them a character all their own.

In the first place, the executive departments have been reorganized. In lieu of the system of indefinite tenure of the departmental officers formerly in vogue, the theory of periodical changes has been adopted. Every three years the atmosphere of the executive department is to be renewed at the same time when the personnel of the legislature changes in accordance with the results of the last general election. And once the democratic influence of the government is thus assured, the legislature throws its doors open to the department secretaries who, instead of privately going to the office of the various committees, may if they so prefer demand the right to be heard publicly in the session hall of either house.

This first step has not been taken without a conscientious consideration of the basic principles of the American Government system upon which the United States Congress has modeled ours. Ostensibly the Philippine Legislature, which has approved the departmental reorganization law, has started out with the purpose of coordinating and harmonizing the powers of the State, instead of separating and scattering them.

In speaking of the budget system, he further says:

It inaugurates a régime of publicity and places each power of the State within its own sphere of responsibility. It puts the finances of the government on an approved commercial basis and joins the direct examination of the necessities of the country with the authority and duty to disburse the public funds in an economic and efficient manner. It makes the department heads more responsible to the legislature and the people. It frustrates any attempt to establish a vicious kind of legislation not demanded by public interest known elsewhere as log-rolling and pork barrel. It maintains the legislature in a sphere of dignity and control, while it stays the hand of an arbitrary chief executive ready to make improper use of the veto power. But what is more important than all this, it preserves fresh and pure the constitutional intelligence between the several powers of the State and between the government and the people; it prevents the useless expenditure of energy by disagreement and friction, preserves stability, and prepares the organs of the government to be constantly ready for orderly, prompt, and efficient action.

THE PROGRESS OF LOCAL GOVERNMENTS.

The municipal and provincial governments, constituting as they do political units of the Philippine Government, furnish positive proofs of the political capacity of the Filipino people, inasmuch as these governments, the success of which is manifest, are controlled by Filipinos. From the beginning it was deemed advisable to place the management of municipal affairs in the hands of officials chosen by the people of the municipalities concerned. The growing notable success of local governments has made imperative the adoption of all measures which safeguard and increase the autonomy exercised by such governments. Provincial officers, which were originally appointive, were made elective. The provincial board, which constitutes the legislative body of the Province, was formerly composed of an elective provincial governor, an appointive provincial treasurer, and an elective third member. By virtue of act No. 2501 of the Philippine Legislature, approved February 5, 1915, the provincial treasurer ceased to be a member of the provincial board, and the Governor General was authorized to appoint a new member from among the municipal presidents in the Province. Inasmuch as municipal presidents are elected by popular vote, it is clear that the object of this law was to grant greater autonomy to provincial governments by eliminating from the provincial board the only nonelective member. Act No. 2586 of the Philippine Legislature, approved February, 1916, went even further in the extension of popular control over provincial governments by providing that the appointive members of the provincial board shall be elected by popular vote. These liberal reforms have reached not only the regularly organized Provinces but also the few so-called special Provinces. In 1915 the office of the third member of the provincial boards of Mindoro, Palawan, and Batanes was made elective, and in 1916 the office of the provincial governor of Mindoro was likewise made elective. This year a law was passed by the Philippine Legislature making elective the office of the provincial governor of Palawan.

Inasmuch as all of the important offices of the municipal and provincial governments are elective, and the higher and direct supervision of the same is wholly intrusted to Filipino officials, the orderly and progressive march of such governments constitutes a practical demonstration of the capacity and efficiency of the government established by the Filipino people in accordance with the Jones law.

At the present time all of the provincial governors, who are the chief executives of the Provinces, are Filipinos, except the governors of the Provinces of Cotabato, Lanao, and Sulu, in the department of Mindanao and Sulu. Of the 46 provincial treasurers, who are the chief financial officers, 38 are Filipinos, and only 1 is American. There are 30 Filipino district engineers and 13 Americans. In the municipalities, with the exception of 16 American ex-officio justices of the peace, the local administration of justice is entirely intrusted to the Filipinos. The supervision and control over the Provinces and municipalities formerly exercised by the Governor General, through the executive secretary, has now passed to the secretary of the interior, who acts in that respect through the chief of the executive bureau. Both officers are Filipinos.

In order to promote the free and ample exercise of local autonomy, the secretary of the interior and the executive bureau have adopted the policy of not interfering with the affairs of local governments, except in cases where such intervention is made absolutely necessary.

Nor has progress been made along political lines alone; but Provinces and municipalities also have improved economically. In 1913 the revenues of the municipalities, towns, and settlements amounted to 7,152,541 pesos; in 1917 these revenues went up to 11,401,983 pesos. In 1913 the total expenses of operation of all municipalities, towns, and settlements aggregated 5,869,454 pesos, while in 1917 the amount totaled 8,696,535 pesos.

As the result of the great progress attained by the municipalities along political and economic lines, there have been constructed great public improvements, such as roads, provincial and municipal buildings, school buildings, bridges, and so forth. The Provinces and municipalities have also effectively contributed to the organization of a system of provincial and municipal sanitation, the construction of wharves, docks, piers, artesian wells, parks, monuments, and so forth.

PUBLIC LAW AND ORDER.

The first natural requisite of every well-organized political society is the maintenance of public law and order. Ever since the establishment of the Philippine Assembly the general condition of order and peace throughout the Philippines has continually been improving to the extent that it can now be safely stated that the Philippines is one of those countries of the world where life and liberty are enjoyed with the greatest order and safety. By temperment the Filipino people are peaceful and abhor tumult and disorder.

Perfect order and peace prevail throughout the Archipelago, including the Territory of Mindanao and Sulu. The maintenance of public order in territories inhabited by Moros has always been a problem of grave concern to many. When for the first time an attempt was made to place a person from civil life at the head of the government of Mindanao and Sulu it was believed that public order would be endangered. No disturbance has, however, occurred, and the normal life of the inhabitants was not altered. Moros and Christians came into a more friendly union than ever before and realized better than at any other time the ties which united them as countrymen. Thanks to this good understanding, it was possible and easy to withdraw the American troops in 1917, when the United States found it necessary to take part in the Great War. American soldiers were replaced by Filipino soldiers of the Philippine Constabulary, the latter even less in number, without producing the least disorder.

Col. Ole Woloe, chief of constabulary of the department of Mindanao and Sulu, in a memorandum submitted to the Secretary of the Interior under date of November 23, 1918, says, among other things:

> For the last four years the number of grave crimes occurring in the Province of Zamboanga have been less than those in the department's most advanced Christian Province for the same period.
> For the years 1908–9, 37 outlaws were reported killed, captured, and wounded; for 1910–11, 28; for 1912–13, 40; for 1914, 23; for 1915, 1; and for 1916–17, none. This great change from a spirit of outlawry and piracy, coming down from the Spanish régime, to peace and industry was brought about almost entirely by the sympathetic attitude and friendly interest of the department government toward the Moros and Pagan tribes of the Province. Force without limit had been used for 300 years, but apparently with little, if any, permanent results.
> The Moro is no more the blood-thirsty, religious fanatic of a few years ago, but is aiding us to a remarkable degree in maintaining law and order. In fact, our success in dealing with Moro outlaws has been due almost entirely to the loyal support and aid we have received from the great majority of the inhabitants of the districts affected. The Moro is industrious and a good farmer to the extent of his agricultural knowledge. He is beginning to see the advantages of education, to have respect for his Christian brother, and be more tolerant in his religious views. He is, however, proud of his history and loyal to his religion, but commerce and education are rapidly widening his horizon.
> Contrary to the prediction of the calamity howlers, the Christian Filipino officers of the constabulary have succeeded completely in winning the respect and confidence of the Moro.

This testimony of an American officer is an eloquent proof of the success of our policy with regard to the non-Christian tribes.

As to the rest of the islands an even more perfect peace prevails. When we bear in mind that the world was in a state of war and what an auspicious occasion such a condition offers to agitations of all kinds, the fact that peace and order remained undisturbed in the islands is certainly indicative of the peaceful and loyal spirit of the Filipino people.

The Filipinos did not only place all their modest energies and resources at the service of America, but with the spirit of a real and active community of ideals and interests they resolutely assumed the international responsibilities of that Nation in the Philippines. It may not be out of place to state here that the American flag during all that period of world crisis and commotion waived peacefully over the Philippines, not because it was supported by a military power, for that was withdrawn, but because of the loyal and vigilant attitude of the Filipinos. No longer is any band of outlaws found in any part of the Archipelago. Neither is it easy for such a band to organize without being detected by the Philippine constabulary and immediately suppressed. The development of agriculture and commerce will naturally induce every citizen to devote himself to a legitimate occupation, instead of indulging in the dangerous pursuits of outlawry and pillage.

From the experience of these years and the naturally orderly and peaceful temperament of the Filipinos everything points to the belief that the maintenance of public order will be insured in the Philippines and that a change of sovereignty will even more firmly impress on the minds of the Filipino the necessity for such an orderly existence.

EDUCATION.

From the beginning of American occupation of the islands the question of popular education has commanded special attention. It was not, however, until after the establishment of the Philippine Assembly that education received the greatest impulse and development, for the first law approved by the assembly was one appropriating the sum of ₱1,000,000 for school buildings in the different barrios, while the law authorizing the establishment of the University of the Philippines was among the first to be enacted.

The policy of aiding and promoting by all possible means the education of every citizen has been constantly adhered to ever since that time, and now there is hardly a barrio of any importance having a sufficient number of school children but has a primary school. Liberal appropriations have always been made for the bureau of education and the University of the Philippines.

It remained, however, for the present legislature, composed of two elective houses, to finally solve and satisfactorily settle the question of giving primary education to all children of school age, a question which for many years had been pending of solution. On December 8, 1918, a law was passed appropriating the sum of ₱30,000,000, in addition to the regular annual appropriations for the bureau of education, in order that within the period of five years the plan of giving free primary education to all citizens of the Philippine Islands of school age could be carried out.

From 1912 to 1918 the total number of children in the schools increased from 440,000 to 675,000, an increase of 54 per cent. The number of schools was 3,000 in 1912 and increased to 4,700 in 1918. During the same period the number of pupils in the intermediate schools went up to 67,000, an increase of 160 per cent. The number of high-school students came up to 16,000, an increase of 220 per cent. Voluntary contributions for the maintenance of schools and salary of teachers in those municipalities having insufficient funds for the purpose have increased from ₱198,000 in 1912 to ₱468,000 in 1917.

Such an improvement in the system of popular education, both as to quantity and quality, came hand in hand with the assumption of greater responsibilities by the Filipinos. From the beginning the Filipino teachers have had charge of primary education, and they now constitute 98 per cent of the teaching force in the intermediate schools and 44 per cent of the teaching force in the secondary schools. They have also been given access to higher administrative positions. Of the 350 supervising teachers 86 per cent are Filipinos and the majority of the academic and industrial supervisors are also Filipinos. There are six Filipino division superintendents of schools, and both the second assistant director of education and the undersecretary of public instruction are Filipinos.

The University of the Philippines has kept abreast with the spirit and development of our public system. It was opened in 1908 with but four colleges, namely, the colleges of agriculture, veterinary science, law, and the school of fine arts. Later the School of Medicine of the Government, which was previously established, became a part of the university. Then came the establishment of the colleges of liberal arts, engineering, pharmacy, and education. The plan of study followed by the university is of the most modern and may be favorably compared with that of the best universities of the world.

The following table of enrollment of students in the university shows clearly the rapid growth of that institution:

Year:	Number of students.
1911–12	1,400
1912–13	1,398
1913–14	1,503
1914–15	2,075
1915–16	2,401
1916–17	2,975
1917–18	2,871
1918–19	3,081

The spirit which has guided the Filipinos in the adoption of all manner of measures for the education of the masses of people is sufficiently indicative of the fact that the Filipinos fully realize that popular education is the real basis of all democratic governments. They are determined by all means not only to maintain the present school system but also to develop it to the highest possible degree in order that the people may exert the power of an intelligent public opinion in the running of the affairs of their government.

There are positive proofs to warrant the belief that the question of popular education will be adequately safeguarded under a Philippine independent government. The people themselves are clamoring for education and there is no need of compulsory education laws, with the possible exception in the case of primitive communities of non-Christian tribes. The University of the Philippines has already trained a nucleus of sufficient number of young men in the different branches of learning, many of whom are now holding responsible positions in public administration.

In this connection it may not be amiss to advert to the policy adopted by the government several years ago, and ever since followed, of sending young men, graduates of the University of the Philippines and other educational institutions in the islands, to the different centers of learning in America, Europe, and other foreign countries, for the purpose of furthering their studies and thereafter serve the government for the same number of years in which they have enjoyed government scholarship. This policy has been recently extended to those employees of government offices who have demonstrated unusual talent and efficiency in the performance of their official duties, thus enabling them to make a special study in connection with their respective work.

It is thus seen that the Government has spared neither efforts nor money in the preparation of a competent personnel to take the place of the American experts who are leaving the public service. It is hoped that in this way it will be possible not only to maintain but to lift up, if possible, the high standards of public service in the country.

SANITATION.

The sanitation of the islands has been greatly improved. In 1914 the Philippine Legislature reorganized the health service in order to insure greater efficiency and the cooperation of the Provinces and municipalities in matters of public health.

Under the old system the salaries of municipal health officers were paid by the municipalities, and only those which could afford to pay obtained the services of physicians. Such as could not afford to pay employed sanitary inspectors, who frequently did not have medical knowledge. Thus many towns were without the services of a qualified physician. Again, under that system there were no differences of rank in the service and health officers remained in the service without any chance of promotion. There was no law compelling the municipalities to devote a part of their funds to sanitation. For these reasons it was deemed necessary to reorganize the old bureau of health and convert it into the Philippine Health Service.

This service is somewhat similar to the Public Health Service of the United States, in that a physician must pass an examination before being appointed to the service, and after a certain number of years he is given another examination for the purpose of promotion. The positions in the service are graded. A physician who starts as assistant surgeon is promoted, first, to the grade of junior surgeon, then to that of senior surgeon, medical inspector, and chief of division. The work of the central office is distributed among the director of the health service and the chiefs of divisions. There is an assistant director, who is at the same time a chief of division. There are three divisions—one for the provincial service, another for the hospital service, and still another for the health service of the city of Manila.

In order that each and every municipality may have the benefit of the services of a physician, the different Provinces combine two or more small municipalities and place them under the care of a municipal physician. These groups of municipalities are called sanitary districts. The municipal physician is required to distribute his time among the different towns in making inspection and receiving consultations; but even with such an arrangement some of the most remote places in the Mountain and Moro Provinces could not have obtained the service of a physician if, in order to supply this deficiency, dispensaries were not opened under the care of competent persons, where the public may obtain medicine and receive medical treatment. At the present time even the most remote places have health facilities which they could not obtain 10 years ago.

Manila may be said to be the most sanitary city in the Far East and will bear comparison with many of the cities of the United States and Europe. The streets have been widened and improved and the majority of them have asphalt pavement. The danger of smallpox, the terror of oriental countries, which previously has been menacing the islands with regular frequency, has been reduced to an insignificant degree. Since 1902 no cholera epidemic has attained any serious proportion. Malaria is now unknown in Manila. Many of the swamp districts have been filled up.

Quite a number of municipalities have followed the example of Manila, and there are now at least 10 cities which have modern water systems. In those towns where the construction of reservoirs has been found impracticable artesian wells were drilled in order to supply the public with pure water.

Charitable activities, such as the organization of antituberculosis societies and societies for the protection of children, have acquired new vigor during the last few years. There is now in the islands the public welfare board, subsidized by the Government, the duty of which is to coordinate the work of charitable institutions and to contribute to their funds for the accomplishment of their purposes. The sum of ₱1,000,000 has been appropriated in order to help the municipalities in the establishment of associations for the protection of children.

The Culion leper colony has been maintained and liberally supplied with funds. The opposition on the part of those who suffer from the disease and their families to the confinement of the former to the colony has disappeared, and now many a diseased person voluntarily presents himself to be taken to the colony.

The quarantine service has also been maintained not only with efficiency, but has been supplied with modern equipments.

Hospital service has undergone great improvement. The Philippine General Hospital at Manila is one of the best hospitals in the Orient. The Filipinization of its personnel was effected without impairing its efficiency. Schools for nurses of both sexes are maintained both in this hospital and in that of Cebu, which has been recently opened.

It would not be too much to say that the sanitation of the Philippines will be as well taken care of by the Filipinos as formerly, and the Filipino health officers, possessing as they do a better knowledge of the peculiar habits and needs of their own people, will be able to perform their duties both with efficiency and credit, not only to themselves but also to those who have helped them in preparing for greater responsibilities.

ECONOMIC PROGRESS.

The passage of the Jones law has given rise to the belief on the part of some people that the material progress of the islands would suffer a setback. Facts have shown just the contrary. The declaration of the purpose of the United States to grant the Philippines its independence as soon as a stable government shall have been organized therein, and the practically complete control of public affairs given to the Filipinos, have not only not caused any economic crisis but have gone far toward placing the economic life of the country on stronger foundations. The last five years have witnessed the greatest prosperity and the highest economic development the islands ever had. Of the total foreign trade in the Philippines in 1918, which amounted to ₱468,563,496, as against ₱215,391,484 in 1913, 63.4 per cent was with the United States, as against 42.65 per cent in 1913. This fact goes to show that the establishment of an autonomous Philippine government preparatory to independence has served to strengthen the commercial bonds between the United States and the Philippines. Mutual confidence and understanding has brought about greater economic relations, just as in the past distrust and misunderstanding has had the tendency of disturbing these relations.

Another theory which has been exploded is that economic independence should come before political independence and that, therefore, the people should not ask for political freedom before securing their economic independence. Our experience during the last five years has demonstrated the contrary; that is to say, that no country can expect to prosper in a material way before having in its hands the political agencies and instrumentalities essential thereto; in short, the most effective instrumentality for economic progress is political autonomy. Before the establishment of Philippine autonomy Filipino merchants and manufacturers could not compete with foreigners for lack of credit and banking facilities, which were controlled by the latter. But the organization of an autonomous Philippine Government has paved the way for a phenomenal development of the commercial activities of the people. The Government created the Philippine National Bank, whose resources amounted only to ₱20,000,000 in 1916, which increased to more than ₱230,000,000 in 1918. This success has probably very few precedents in the world's history of banking.

The total foreign trade of the islands in 1913 was ₱215,391,484, with a balance against the islands of ₱11,000,000, while last year, 1918, our foreign trade amounted to ₱468,563,494, with a balance in our favor of ₱74,196,648, which means an increase of ₱253,172,010, or 129 per cent, in 1918 over 1913.

Our money circulation has increased also, for in 1913 we had ₱50,697,282, or ₱5.52 per capita, while at present we have in circulation ₱132,602,968, or ₱13.68 per capita.

Taxation in the Philippines was ₱4.28 per capita in 1913, compared with ₱5.36 per capita in 1917.

Another eloquent proof of the remarkable development of the islands is the fact that during the last few years 3,065 domestic corporations and firms were organized, with a capital of ₱452,192,197, to say nothing of 95 large firms, American and foreign, of world-wide reputation and with enormous capital, which have their branches in the Philippines.

PUBLIC WORKS AND PERMANENT IMPROVEMENTS.

Our economic prosperity thus far obtained is undoubtedly due in large measure to the policy steadily pursued by the Government of devoting every year considerable sums of money to the promotion and extension of public works and permanent improvements. Roads have therefore been built everywhere, thus putting in communication with the outside world places hitherto inaccessible, and through an excellent system of maintenance we have been able to prevent the destruction of these roads and get the greatest benefit possible from the money invested. Shipping has been likewise fostered with the construction of piers and wharves, the dredging of rivers, and the making of other improvements in many ports. The lighthouse system has been improved, and the work of coast survey continued. The mileage of our railroads has been increased, post and telegraph offices have been opened in many municipalities, public markets—substantial as well as hygienic—have been built, waterworks systems have been installed; in brief, a broad policy of public works and permanent improvements in all the Provinces has been worked out, yielding the quickest and most beneficial results. The following figures show the progress of road building in the islands:

THE NONCHRISTIAN TRIBES.

Before President Wilson decided in 1913 to appoint a Filipino majority to the Philippine Commission, the control over the so-called non-Christian tribes was entirely in the hands of Americans. It was not until that year that the Filipinos assumed the responsibility for these tribes. Both the Philippine Commission with Filipino majority and the Philippine Legislature have expressed in unequivocal terms, through legislative acts, a liberal and altruistic policy looking to the welfare and betterment of these primitive people.

The act organizing the Department of Mindanao and Sulu, in 1914, was passed with the object of carrying out this policy, and of furnishing said territory with a central organization and with officials who could more directly look after the welfare of the inhabitants. Later the legislature established the bureau of non-Christian tribes, provided for in section 22 of the Jones law, and set forth the duties of the same in the following words:

To foster through all adequate means and in a systematic, rapid, and thorough manner the material, moral, economic, social, and political development of the regions inhabited by non-Christian Filipinos, always having in view the permanent mutual understanding and complete fusion of the Christian and non-Christian elements living in the Provinces of the archipelago.

To insure the success of this policy the organization and extension of public schools in all the non-Christian territory has been the object of special care. Since 1903 primary schools in Mindanao and Sulu, where the Arabic and English languages were taught, have been organized. However, in view of the novelty of the plan and the distrust on the part of the Moros and other non-Christians, the success of the public schools was very little. Toward the end of the school year 1914 the attendance of these schools was 4,535. During the last five years, when the Filipinos shaped the legislative policy toward the Moros, progress in education has been tremendous. The following figures show the average daily attendance and the expenses incurred from 1912 to the present time:

Fiscal year.	Average daily attendance.	Expenses.
1912	3,807	₱93,987
1913	4,535	137,069
1918 (calculated)	16,114	650,000

A clearer idea of the progress of education amongst the non-Christians will be given by the following data: The number of teachers in the Mountain Province in 1912 was 93; to-day there are 251. In 1912 there were 64 teachers in the Province of Nueva Viscaya; at present there are 67. In the whole Department of Mindanao and Sulu there were only 99 teachers in 1912, whereas to-day there are 783. The splendid spirit demonstrated by these teachers by leaving their homes to go out to the non-Christian provinces is going to be a strong factor for the unification and naturalization of the different elements of the country.

Side by side with the extension of public schools the public health service has also progressed. In 1914 the school and health authorities in charge of the Department of Mindanao and Sulu established a combined plan of schools and public dispensaries, of which 17 are already in operation at central points. Approximately 30,000 patients receive treatment in these dispensaries every year. Besides these school dispensaries, there are 9 special ones under the control of the health service.

No less important than the health work is the extension of public works to all the regions inhabited by the non-Christians. Special attention has been devoted to the construction and maintenance of roads, the improvement of ports and landings, the extension and maintenance of telephone lines, waterworks, and the construction of public buildings, especially schools and hospitals.

But this is not all that has been done. The non-Christians are also taught how to get the best results from the natural resources of their soil. Every year a considerable number of graduates from the College of Agriculture are sent to the non-Christian provinces, to the end that they may teach the inhabitants the modern methods of cultivation. Interisland migration has been fostered by the government's help to those who establish themselves on Mindanao and Sulu lands for the purpose of cultivating them and of living with their non-Christian brothers. In 1917 the Philippine Legislature appropriated the sum of ₱100,000 for this purpose, which amount was increased to ₱250,000 last year.

By virtue of the Jones law the non-Christian tribes were for the first time granted representation in the national legislature. Three prominent and representative Moros and two pagans have been appointed members of the senate and of the house of representatives. The Moro senator and representatives have been given the special privilege of taking the oath of office in accordance with the rites prescribed by the Koran. This step was looked upon by the Mohammedans as a proof of religious tolerance and respect for Mohammedan beliefs on the part of the Christian Filipinos.

At the time of the inauguration of the Philippine Legislature important memorials were presented expressing the feelings of confidence and affection of the Moros toward their Christian brothers. These memorials were sent to both houses of the legislature and were signed by the Sultan of Sulu and by the most influential datos of the different provinces of the department. In them they express their gratitude for the material benefits received and the political privileges granted them during the last three years, and also for the liberal appropriations for public works, health service, and schools, and for the representation allowed them in the Philippine Legislature in accordance with the new organic law of the Philippine Islands. In these memorials the hope is also expressed that the administration will continue making closer the present relations among the inhabitants of the Philippines. Most of the data referred to has been taken from a recent official report submitted by Gov. Frank W. Carpenter, of the Department of Mindanao and Sulu, who is at the same time chief of the bureau of non-Christian tribes.

THE ENGLISH LANGUAGE.

It can be asserted without dispute that the English language serves at the present time as a common medium of communication among the islanders who still speak their own dialects. The progress of the English language has been the result of the splendid work done by the public schools, and to-day English is the language most widely spoken in the whole Archipelago. Business between the central government and most of the Provinces and municipalities is transacted in English. True, the proceedings of the Philippine Legislature are still in Spanish, but the acts are translated into English. The English language prevails in the commercial transactions of the islands.

We will not have to wait very long before the English language is the official language even in the courts, and the language most generally used in private life. The present leaders of the people have a working knowledge of the language and many of them read and write it fairly, if they do not speak it, with few difficulties in their official conversations. The younger generation has a thorough knowledge of the language and speaks and writes it in most cases.

The spread of this language as the common language of the inhabitants of the Archipelago is assured, not only because it is the basis of instruction in the public schools, but also because it is essential to the best interests and the future of the people. Once the plan is carried out of giving primary instruction to every child of school age there is no doubt that the generations to come will speak English, which will certainly obtain a firm foothold among the people.

It is not only the public schools that teach English; the private schools do so likewise. The law requires the Department of Public Instruction to grant licenses for private schools and to exercise supervision over private schools and colleges of all kinds, with the power to approve their courses of study and to revoke their licenses if the conditions established by the Government are not fulfilled. For a long time now these colleges and schools have been ordered to make English one of the required subjects, and their instruction has steadily improved.

It is inconceivable that the Filipino people, when they shall have become independent, would take any step other than that of continuing this policy. It would be unreasonable to undo what has been done without mentioning the great expense which such change of policy would involve. We therefore venture to assert that the predominance of English is assured.

REQUISITES FOR A STABLE GOVERNMENT.

The phrase "stable government" has a definite meaning in the foreign relations of the United States, especially in connection with its dealings with the weak countries that have fought for their independence. This is not the first time that the American Government has made use of this phrase as regards the recognization of new States.

The conditions required by the United States before granting such recognition are merely conditions of fact; that is to say, where a government de facto is established and whether such government has conditions of stability. In 1875 there was considerable agitation in the United States for the recognition of Cuban independence, and President Grant in his message to Congress expressed the idea that recognition would not be possible until the Cuban people could establish a government possessing elements of stability. Quoting his words:

> Where a considerable body of people, who have attempted to free themselves of the control of the superior government, have reached such point in occupation of territory, in power, and in general organization as to constitute in face a body politic, having a government in substance as well as in name, possessed of the elements of stability, and equipped with the machinery for the administration of internal policy and the execution of its laws, prepared and able to administer justice at home, as well as in its dealing with other powers, it is within the province of those other powers to recognize its existence as a new and independent nation.

Dwelling further on what he thought a stable government was, he said:

> To establish the condition of things essential to the recognition of this fact, there must be a people occupying a known territory, united under some known and defined form of government, acknowledged by those subject thereto, in which the functions of government are administered by usual methods, competent to mete out justice to citizens and strangers, to afford remedies for public and private wrongs, and able to assume the correlative international obligations and capable of performing the corresponding international duties resulting from its acquisition of the rights of sovereignty.

President McKinley, in discussing the recognition of the independence of Cuba, quoted the words of President Grant, saying:

> The United States, in addition to the test imposed by public law as the condition of the recognition of independence by a neutral State (to wit, that the revolted State shall "constitute in fact a body politic, having a government in substance as well as in name, possessed of all the elements of stability," and forming de facto, "if left to itself, a State among the nations, reasonably capable of discharging the duties of a State"), has imposed for its own government in dealing with cases like these the further condition that recognition of independent statehood is not due to a revolted dependency until the danger of its being again subjugated by the parent State has entirely passed away.

As a result of the war, Spain had to withdraw her sovereignty from Cuba. The American Government temporarily occupied the islands and proceeded to organize a stable government. The first measure was the taking of a census which would show the degree of political capacity of the people. In this way it was found that 66 per cent of the inhabitants of the island could neither read nor write—a percentage greater than in the Philippines, where illiteracy is 30 per cent—and limited suffrage was established, based more or less on the same conditions now required in the Philippines. After the census the military governor, Gen. Wood, promulgated a law which provided for the holding of provincial and municipal elections. Thereafter the same voters who took part in these elections were qualified to choose the members of the constitutional convention which drafted the constitution of Cuba. The military governor inaugurated the convention, and by order of the Secretary of War said, among other things:

> It will be your duty, first, to frame and adopt a constitution of Cuba * * * adequate to secure a stable, orderly, and free government.

The constitution adopted by the Cuban people was not entirely satisfactory to Secretary Root, but being the result of conscientious deliberations by the representatives of the people of Cuba, it was accepted. On December 31, 1901, the people of Cuba chose their provincial governors, their councilors, and members of the house of representatives, and the presidential and senatorial electors. These last met on February 24, 1902, in order to choose the president, vice president, and senators. After the election of these officials the American Government made ready to transfer to their hands the reins of government. The condition of stability had been fulfilled, and on May 20, 1902, the military governor, on behalf of the President of the United States, read the memorable document which transferred to "the duly elected representatives of the people of Cuba the government and control of the islands," and declared "the occupation of Cuba by the United States and the military government of the islands" to be ended.

A "stable government" has, therefore, been construed to mean, in the case of Cuba, a government duly chosen by the people. This was the clear interpretation adopted by the American Government.

It is evident that this is the same interpretation given to the phrase "stable government" as used in the preamble of the Jones law.

That the Filipinos now have a government of this sort, a government constituted by the people, able to preserve order and to comply with its international obligations, can not be denied by any fair-minded man who knows the conditions of the country. Our present government is a government based on the peaceful suffrage of the people, representing the whole country, deriving their powers from the people and subject to the limitations and safeguards which the experience of constitutional government has shown to be essential to the maintenance and protection of individual rights.

Our central, provincial, and municipal governments rest upon the peaceful suffrage of the Filipino people. The insular government has at its disposal a complete governmental machinery recognized and supported by the people. The guiding part of this machinery is already in the hands of the Filipinos. There is a Philippine Legislature whose members are elected by the qualified voters of the islands, which legislative body is invested with general legisative powers within the limitations laid down by the Jones law. In said legislature the non-Christian element is represented by nine members appointed by the Governor General. We have also a judicial system based upon the American principle of independence of the judicial department. Our laws and our courts are of the modern type, like those of the most progressive nations of the west. Our codes are based on Spanish and American jurisprudence, taking from the Spanish substantive laws, their conciseness, symmetry, and philospohy, and from the American laws of procedure their facility, common sense, and efficiency. The limitations and safeguards for the protection of individual rights are thoroughly ingrained in the political life of the Filipino people and no political change that might take place would in any way impair them.

We have, therefore, a stable government in the Philippines which fulfills all the conditions required by the United States in other cases of recognition of new States, especially in the case of Cuba, and this government is now in operation and is practically controlled and directed by the Filipinos themselves. If the Governor and Vice Governor General of the Philippine Islands were to be suddenly withdrawn from the archipelago and in their place Filipinos were appointed, no part of the governmental machinery would suffer thereby and every piece thereof would move as regularly and as orderly as at present.

The testimony of the representatives of the American Government in the islands during all the time that the Philippine Government was in the hands of the Filipinos bears out the assertion which we made in regard to the conditions of stability of the Philippine Government.

Says Governor Harrison:

There are about 1,000 municipalities in the Philippines, all of which are governed by elective Filipino officials. There are about 42 Provinces in the islands likewise governed by Filipinos. There are two elective houses of the legislature composed entirely of Filipinos. Out of seven members in the cabinet six are Filipinos, and most of the heads of the executive departments of the government are Filipinos to-day. It is true that there are still some 700 Americans in the Philippines, but for the most part they are teachers, professors, and scientists, and to my mind a class of men who would be desired by the Filipinos even if they had complete independence.

That presents a picture of practical autonomy. It has been going on for the last two and a half years, or ever since the recent charter has been given us by Congress, and in my opinion, during those two and a half years the Filipinos, having been given an opportunity, have satisfactorily demonstrated the fact that they have already established and are maintaining the stable form of government which is prescribed in the preamble to the Jones bill as a prerequisite to their independence.

On another occasion he said:

By temperament, by experience, by financial ability, in every way the 10,000,000 Filipinos are entitled to be free from every government.

Vice Gov. Charles E. Yeater, in an official telegram to the Secretary of War, reports:

The capacity for initiative and the constructive spirit evidenced by the legislature, the first organized under the Jones law, is worthy of great commendation. Its capacity to investigate government problems and to act expeditiously but with due caution is certainly unprecedented in history, considering that for three centuries this people had practically no political rights and were debarred from the benefits of education. American legislative practice and procedure has always been examined, and with few exceptions followed. As indicative, however, of their independent frame of mind it may be noted that a single legislative committee has had charge of both appropriations and ways and means since 1907, and under the provisions of the Jones law has adopted substantially the basic principles of the English budget system instead of maintaining a rigorous application of the theory of the separation of governmental powers as far as the legislative and executive departments are concerned, the latter directed by an American. This legislature has given to the secretaries of the various departments the right to appear before either house to defend publicly the measures proposed by the executive or to oppose measures originated in such houses. Finally, as one of the representatives in these islands of the United States Government, I wish to attest the patriotism of the Filipinos and their loyal attachment to the United States Government. This legislature which has just terminated its sessions has acted with judgment and prudence and in what it has done and left undone during its term now drawing to a close, and should be credited for the wisdom with which it has guided and directed the Filipino people in the paths of order and tranquility during these recent years of almost universal turmoil and unrest. Perfect peace has prevailed here and all provincial and municipal government instrumentalities of force have had no function to perform.

In regard to honesty and efficiency, the Philippine government can be favorably compared to the best in the world. No charge of bribery has been made against any high official. Cases of misappropriation of public funds have been exceptionally few, and only subordinate officials were involved. The offending parties have been discharged from the service, and whenever sufficient evidence for conviction was available they were prosecuted.

Efficiency in the civil service has been maintained at a high standard. Appointments of chiefs and assistant chiefs of division have been based strictly on merit and not political considerations. In most cases men who had served for a long time have been promoted to these positions with a view to the efficiency of the service.

Every citizen has enjoyed civil and political rights without hindrance and amid public peace and safety. Religious tolerance has grown to such an extent that all Christian denominations are working in perfect harmony; Mohammedans and Christians in Mindanao and Sulu respect each other's religious practices. Moral campaigns have been carried on at all times, with appreciable results in the uplift of the people.

The progress made along material and economic lines in recent years shows the entire confidence of all the residents of the Philippines in the orderly and stable conditions of the country.

III.

It would seem to be entirely unnecessary to discuss the question of whether or not the Filipinos desire to be independent at this time, but some doubt being entertained by a number of American citizens as to whether the Filipinos, after being given the opportunity to manage their domestic affairs, would not prefer, for their best interest, to continue certain relations of political dependence with the United States, we have decided to devote this chapter to a treatment of the present aspirations of the people in relation to the independence problem.

If the historical events in the Philippines in 1896 and 1898 are studied, it will be seen that the longing for independence was the most powerful sentiment behind the revolution against Spain the latter year. With the breaking out of hostilities between the United States and Spain the Filipinos saw their chance to destroy Spanish dominion and to declare their independence. They turned a deaf ear to the alluring promises made by the Spanish authorities, and, with the moral and material support of the Americans, they—the Filipinos—were fortunately able to defeat the Spanish forces and to seize practically all of the territory of the islands. Then the Filipinos organized a government under Aguinaldo, whose authority spread throughout the islands and received the approbation and consent of the people.

This aspiration for independence was the thing that moved the Filipinos to go through the sufferings and sacrifices of another war against the Americans in 1899, in spite of the fact that they knew beforehand the weakness of their forces and the certainty of their defeat in the face of the formidable power and the unlimited resources of the people of the United States. It has frequently been said that the war against the Americans was but the work of a group of Tagals, but the extent and duration of the military operations carried on by the American forces and the unanimous resistance with which they met everywhere prove that the national sentiment of the Filipinos was opposed to a new domination.

The Filipinos accepted peace, not for the purpose of giving up their aspirations for independence, but only to change their method of obtaining them. They were willing to go through the training in self-government which was required of them in the hope that they would thus secure their independence sooner. They were convinced of their own capacity, and therefore instead of obstructing the work of reconstruction and progress inaugurated by the American Government, they heartily lent their cooperation, at the same time bending every energy to secure larger opportunities to show in actual practice and in the exercise of great responsibilities what they could do in governmental affairs.

The history of the last 10 years, from the organization of the Philippine Assembly, when for the first time the people were permitted to express their opinion in regard to their political future, proves beyond doubt the firm and unswerving determination of the Filipinos to obtain a full recognition of their international sovereignty.

Speaker Osmena, in a speech delivered at the close of the legislative session on June 19, 1908, made the following utterances:

Through all the vicissitudes, difficulties, and reverses the ideal of the Filipino people has remained unalterable. The adverse fortune of Filipino arms has not shaken the aspirations of the people, neither has the false hope so often held out in the midst of people's misfortunes, of the possibility of the Philippines being made a State of the great American Union ever made them hesitate in the least. The Filipino people accepted peace, principally because they expected justice from the American people. Far from holding aloof from or making difficult the work of the Government in its implantation, they did everything they could to promote and improve it. They went to the polls when the municipal government was established; they also willingly took part in the government of the Provinces when amid countless difficulties, and when the ruins of the revolution still loomed grim and terrible they were called upon to do so; and they chose their representatives when the solemn hour came for the most difficult test of their capacity to manage their own destiny. But neither before nor after did they yield to promise or fear; before and after they aspired for their national independence, both when they cast their vote in favor of a free and independent life and when yesterday on the battle field they offered the lives of their best sons for the sake of our country and of her ideals. We must thus speak clearly in this august place, where fallacy does not lurk, where deceit has no place, and where truth finds its seat, and where justice presents itself with all of its lofty attributes; we must speak thus in this place where we feel with full sense of responsibility our love, our most legitimate veneration for the Philippines.

The Filipino people aspire to-day, as before taking up arms for the second time against Spain, as thereafter in the din of arms, and then in peace, for their national independence.

Allow me, gentlemen of the house, following the dictates of my conscience as a delegate, as a representative of the country, under my responsibility as speaker of this house, to declare solemnly, as I do now before God and before the world, that we believe that our people aspire for their independence; that our people consider themselves capable of leading an orderly life, efficient for themselves and for others, in the concert of free and civilized nations; and that we believe that if the people of the United States were to decide at this moment the Philippine cause in favor of the Filipinos the latter could, in assuming the consequent responsibility, comply with their duties to themselves and to others without detriment to liberty, to justice, and to right.

At the close of the legislative session on May 20, 1909, the following resolution was passed by the Philippine Assembly:

Whereas at the meeting of June 19, 1908, the assembly approved and adopted the following words of the speaker, to wit:

"Allow me, gentlemen of the house, following the dictates of my conscience as a delegate, as a representative of the country, under my responsibility as speaker of this house, to declare solemnly, as I do now before God and before the world, that we believe that our people aspire for their independence; that our people consider themselves capable of leading an orderly life, efficient for themselves and for others, in the concert of free and civilized nations; and that we believe that if the people of the United States were to decide at this moment the Philippine cause in favor of the Filipinos, the latter could, in assuming the consequent responsibility, comply with their duties to themselves and to others, without detriment to liberty, to justice, and to right."

Whereas the Hon. Manuel L. Quezon, delegate from Tayabas, attended said meeting and voted in favor of said resolution, and said Hon. Manuel L. Quezon is now elected Resident Commissioner of the Philippine Islands in the United States: Therefore be it

Resolved, That this house state to the Resident Commissioner elect, Hon. Manuel L. Quezon, that the members thereof would be highly satisfied if, upon his appearance before the Congress of the United States and when he finds opportunity therefor, he should make known to said Congress our aspiration for independence as expressed at the meeting of the assembly on June 19, 1908.

Resident Commissioner Quezon, in fulfilling the instructions contained in the above resolution, delivered a speech in the House of Representatives on May 14, 1910, in the course of which he said:

Mr. Chairman, from what I have said it can be seen that the affairs of the islands are not in a very encouraging state; rather, that the outlook is depressing. The Filipinos, however, are patiently and hopefully looking forward to brighter days. We are aware that you have not gone to those islands for your own profit; we are aware that you have not gone there to subjugate us, but to emancipate us. The lesson of your history—the most brilliant history of all the nations of the world—is inconsistent with any other motive in your dealings with the Filipinos than that of making them free. This great Republic, founded and reared by liberty-loving people, can not undertake any task not in keeping with right, justice, happiness, and liberty for all mankind. We have an unshaken faith in the future destiny of our beloved fatherland, since its fate was committed to your care. We firmly believe and sincerely trust that the day will soon come when this Congress, composed of the representatives of a God-fearing people, will generously give to us the blessings of that freedom which has made you so happy, so prosperous, and so great, and which is, after all, the keynote of the happiness and prosperity of every people. When that time comes—and let us hope that it may happen to-morrow—the day when was raised in the Philippines the ever-glorious Stars and Stripes will eternally be the best celebrated day of our national life.

In a memorial submitted to the then Secretary of War, Mr. Dickinson, by the Nacionalista Party on September 1, 1910, the following was said:

These facts are mentioned with the object of showing that the persistency of the Filipinos in being independent is bound up in the recollections of that short period of their past in which, associated with the Americans, they threw down the secular power of a sovereignty and experienced the satisfaction and happiness of governing themselves, their interests, and their future. Then, they understood how satisfactory and sweet to the citizens is the yoke imposed by the power of its own laws and the government by men of its own race, and how close and loyal is the cooperation which exists between people and government to better the interests of the country and to enter resolutely and without embarrassment into the wide ways of human progress. Then the Filipinos abandoned all the vicious practices which the former sovereignty had extended over all the masses and recovered the good qualities which people free from all yoke possessed. This moved the Filipinos to resist with all their force the new American domination, and to submit to it only when they fully understood that they might be independent in a more or less short period. The efforts of the Filipinos in defense of that government, the blood which its soldiers shed, and the money which was employed in the service of the Filipino flag, recalls to them constantly that short period of its happiness and makes them consider the present as a temporary situation which they desire to abbreviate as much as possible in order to acquire the satisfaction of their national ambitions and their intentions of elevation and enrichment of the country.

On February 3, 1911, the Philippine Assembly passed the following resolution:

Resolved, That the assembly ask, as it hereby does ask, the Congress of the United States immediately to recognize the independence of the Filipino people in the form expressed in the memorial of the Nacionalista Party, dated September 1, 1910;

Resolved further, That the assembly adopt each and every conclusion and proposition contained in said memorial; and

Resolved further, That this resolution be transmitted by cable to the Congress of the United States and to the Resident Commissioners of the Philippine Islands, suggesting that they present and support the same in Congress before the termination of the present session of said Congress.

On February 1, 1912, the Philippine Assembly reiterated its petition in the following terms:

Resolved, That the Philippine Assembly reiterate, as it hereby does reiterate, the petition for immediate independence of the Philippines to the Congress of the United States.

Resolved further, That this resolution be transmitted by cable to the Resident Commissioners, in Washington, recommending that the same be conveyed to and supported in said Congress.

On February 11, 1913, in view of the change of administration in the United States, Speaker Osmena, in his speech at the close of the legislative session, made the following declarations:

There in America another party now comes to power—the Democratic Party. Old in history, new in victory, this party has been unceasingly fighting for the ideals of the Filipino people for more than a decade. It stated in a solemn manner before all the nations in its Baltimore platform the following:

"We reaffirm the position thrice announced by the Democracy in national convention assembled against a policy of imperialism and colonial exploitation in the Philippines or elsewhere. We condemn the experiment in imperialism as an inexcusable blunder, which has involved us in enormous expenses, brought us weakness instead of strength, and laid our Nation open to the charge of abandonment of the fundamental doctrine of self-government. We favor an immediate declaration of the Nation's purpose to recognize the independence of the Philippine Islands as soon as a stable government can be established, such independence to be guaranteed by us until the neutralization of the islands can be secured by treaty with other powers.

"In recognizing the independence of the Philippines our Government should retain such land as may be necessary for coaling stations and naval bases."

We trust that the meaning of these words, which are clear and unmistakable, will be transmuted into reality. I believe and hope that this will be done, because the American people are just. The die is cast, and God, who has never failed the other people, will not fail ours. In the meantime let us remain quiet; let everyone stay in his rank, fighting as he can; let us carry on our campaigns with courage and disinterestedness, and either we are entirely mistaken or the days to come will be to the Filipino people, who have struggled so much and suffered so much, days of vindication, days of liberty.

On October 16, 1913, the Philippine Assembly passed the following:

Resolution sending to the President of the United States of America through the Governor General of the Philippines a message from the Philippines Assembly in the name of the Filipino people.

Whereas the President of the United States has sent through the Governor General, the Hon. Francis Burton Harrison, as message to the people of the Philippines, and said message was duly delivered on the 16th day of October, 1913, its text being as follows:

"We regard ourselves as trustees, acting not for the advantage of the United States, but for the benefit of the people of the Philippine Islands.

"Every step we take will be taken with a view to the ultimate independence of the islands and as a preparation for that independence. And we hope to move toward that end as rapidly as the safety and the permanent interests of the islands will permit. After each step taken experience will guide us to the next.

"The administration will take one step at once, and will give to the native citizens of the islands a majority in the appointive commission, and thus in the upper as well as in the lower house of the legislature a majority representation will be secured.

"We do this in the confident hope and expectation that immediate proof will be given in the action of the commission under the new arrangement of the political capacity of those native citizens who have already come forward to represent and to lead their people in affairs."

Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Philippine Assembly, in the name of the people of the Philippines, pray, as it hereby prays, the chief executive thereof to kindly forward to the President of the United States the following message in reply:

We, the representatives of the Filipino people, constituting the Philippine Assembly, do solemly declare—

That the right of the Filipino people to be free and independent is evident to us, so that pursuing the line of progress for themselves, theirs is the responsibility to labor for their prosperity in all lines and direct their own destinies. This was the aspiration of the people in entering into the contest with Spain, and the presence of the American flag in Manila Bay first and later in the interior of the Archipelago did not modify but rather it affirmed that aspiration in spite of reverses in war and difficulties in peace. The people, when called upon to deposit their ballots, ratified once for all this aspiration, and the national representation since the inauguration of the assembly has but acted in harmony with the popular will. So, in the midst of the most adverse conditions, the ideal of the people has not faltered, and it is so stated respectfully and frankly on this occasion to the authorities of the United States.

On the other hand, our faith in the justice of the American people has been as great and as persistent as our ideal. We have waited patiently, confident that sooner or later mistakes and injustice would be corrected. The message of the President of the United States to the Filipino people tells eloquently that we have not waited in vain.

We accept this message with love and gratitude, and we consider it a definite statement of the purpose of the American Nation to recognize the independence of the islands. The immediate step to concede us a majority on the commission puts into our hands the instruments of power and of responsibility for the institution by ourselves of a stable Philippine government. We fully recognize and we are grateful from the bottom of our hearts for the confidence placed in us by the Government of the United States. We appreciate the appointment of the Hon. Francis Burton Harrison as governor general, considering it the unequivocal announcement of the new era, wherein we expect that the attitude of the people be one of decided cooperation and support. We believe that the experiments of imperialism have ended, and that the policy of colonial exploitation has passed into history. The time for suspicions has passed, and upon the opening of the doors of opportunity to Filipinos the weight of responsibility is made to rest upon them, which it were inexcusable cowardice to evade or refuse. Hence in a few days good understanding has been arrived at between Americans and Filipinos which in the past 13 years could not take root. We are convinced that each step taken, while relieving the American Government of its responsibilities in the islands, will fully demonstrate as in the past, the actual ability of the Filipino people to establish self-government, and under such government guarantee permanently the life, the property, and the liberty of the residents of the islands, whether native or foreign. We do not mean by this that there will be no difficulties or hindrances. We do not even hope that the campaign, open or secret, of the enemies of the Philippines cause will quickly end, but we feel sure that through the use of the faculties intrusted to us the Filipino people, by the grace of God and the help of America, will proudly emerge from the test, however difficult it be; and Resolved further, That a committee of seven be appointed by the speaker of the assembly to go to the office of the Governor General and deliver to him this resolution duly certified.

At the last meeting of the session ending February 28, 1914, Speaker Osmena submitted, before closing his speech, the following declaration, which was unanimously adopted:

We, the representatives of the Filipino people, constituting the Philippine Assembly, solemnly make the following DECLARATION.

In ratifying, as we do hereby ratify, the national aspiration to independence so often expressed by this assembly in previous sessions, especially in that of the 3d of February, 1911, we ratify our faith in the immortal principles of the Declaration of Independence made by the American people in 1776. This declaration, though written by Jefferson, belongs to humanity and yet holds good. Above the egoism of peoples clothed at times in the dazzling mantle of a feigned generosity and the pride of nations obsessed by the fleeting triumphs of an imperialism ambitious and aggressive, the history of many years tells us that the advancement and greatness of a nation may be firmly established without abandoning the fundamental principles of self-government, and that this doctrine may be preserved with loyalty and love through all changes and through the passing of many generations.

We consider the policy of the present President of the United States, and of his representative in the Philippines, the Governor General, as rightfully inspired by the principles of that declaration. Hence, in contrast to the previous administration, which, actuated by the idea of colonial expansion, could find but vague and indecisive words in tracing its line of conduct in the Philippines, the present administration from the first moment found within its sphere of action categoric and definite declarations as to what in its judgment should be the future of a Christian people of 8,000,000 placed merely by the chances of war in the hands of the United States.

These forceful declarations were made despite the persistent and apparently organized efforts principally of those who, being responsible for having established a government by force yesterday, are attempting now, under the specious pretext of subserving the interest of the Filipino, to keep the people of the United States by every possible means from doing justice to the Filipinos. The President of the United States, as leader of the party in power, and as the exponent of the ideas of its people in vogue now, has already started to rectify erroneous theories in respect to the Philippines, exemplified in 15 years of imperialistic administration. It is now within the constitutional authority of Congress to definitely decide the insistent demands submitted to it, with honor for the Americans and with justice for the Filipinos. Besides the basic principles of government established since remote ages, after the long sufferings and weariness borne by those who, like us, were oppressed and sought liberty, Congress has the good fortune to possess another specific rule, and ultimately solemnly adopted in three national conventions, and one of which, after ratification in Baltimore, won the campaign that culminated in the election of the present majority in Congress. We earnestly and respectfully urge the early adoption by Congress of those legislative measures that in its wisdom it believes should be adopted to make the promises of independence to the Philippines immediately effective.

Respecting ourselves, the Filipinos, we regard the early adoption of such legislation essential to our life as a people. Not only because we are contending with strong adversaries many miles away, far from our soil and our environment, and that we are destitute of the power of the ballot, but because it is fundamental for the permanent effectiveness of our efforts in behalf of the progress and welfare of our people that we have in our hands the guarantees of our future. In insisting on the immediate control of our affairs we are not actuated by the single desire to burden ourselves with the heavy weight of new responsibilities, but because we wish right now to establish the permanent bases of our political nationality, and, step by step, with confidence and assurance, to move forward, so that without unnecessary and sudden changes we may build with our own hands, piece by piece, and following the pattern which popular conscience advises us to be the best, the governmental structure, having as its main duty the promotion of happiness, the preservation of peace, and the protection of life and property of the natives and of the foreigners of good will who may live and settle in our Philippine territory.

On February 16, 1915, the Philippine Commission and the Philippine Assembly approved the following resolutions:

Resolved by the Philippine Commission and the Philippine Assembly in joint session assembled, in the Marble Hall of the Ayuntamiento Building in Manila, That the Governor General be, and he is hereby, requested to send the following message from the Philippine Legislature to the President of the United States:

"We express our deep gratitude for the unwavering interest shown by the President in behalf of the people of the Philippine Islands. This reiteration of intention to support the Filipino people in their petition for an independent government shows the sincerity and perseverance with which the administration proposes to carry out the plan for the independence of the Philippines, and that this intention is the same as that communicated to the people of the Philippine Islands in so solemn a manner on the 6th of October, 1913, and afterwards ratified by the President in his subsequent messages to Congress.

"For our part, we again reiterate, in the name of the Filipino people, the national desire and purpose set forth on many former occasions. We have already made such substantial progress in local government that it has been deemed wise and desirable to give to the people the practical management of their affairs, both municipal and provincial. The result of the reform extending popular control in provincial government has demonstrated that the hopes of success of those responsible for this measure, adopted because of full confidence in the capacity of the people, has justified the action. The confidence of the Government of the United States has been also fully justified by the result of extending Filipino control in the insular government. Notwithstanding that the tumult of the world's greatest war still continues and that everywhere the effect has been felt in financial and economic crises, yet in spite of the limited resources of our government and the continuing limitations of our commerce, the government of the Philippine Islands has successfully met its every necessary expenditure without resort to additional loans either from the United States or foreign Governments.

"But, living not alone for the present, our foresight goes far beyond, and we wish to assure a stable future for our people. We desire an increase of the elements of our national life and progress. We ask yet more, and for that reason in reiterating, as we hereby do reiterate, our urgent petitions for liberty and independence for the people of the Philippine Islands we, the elected representatives of the Filipino people, express our confidence that the efforts of the President of the United States to secure the fulfillment of his promises and the realization of our lawful hopes will obtain early and complete success."

On February 4, 1916, the Philippine Assembly unanimously approved the following political declaration:

It has always been customary with the Philippine Assembly at every session before adjournment to ratify its faith in the principles of liberty and independence of the Filipino people, not because such principles need be repeated each time in order to find a firm lodgment in the heart of the popular chamber; no; but to demonstrate to the world that neither time nor circumstances, often disheartening, has succeeded in diverting the representatives of the people from the line of conduct mapped out since the beginning of their public life. During that period of our struggle against dominant imperialism we felt it our duty to face the fact, and, despite the precarious situation and the timidity of a few people, frankly to state to our sovereign, the American people, the sole ambition of our existence. And so we did. At the dawn of a new era for the Philippines those sacred principles which heretofore were abhorred by some now find the doors of hope opened, so that all, without any exception, may freely enter and receive a hearty welcome.

The news coming from the Senate of the United States would indicate that the final hour has struck. In the acts of the insular administration here, as well as in those of the United States Government, the most sincere intentions to do us full justice are apparent. For this reason the Philippine Assembly, the depositary of popular aspirations, can not but see with satisfaction that its long and persevering efforts and its insistent and fervid demands are upon the point of being crystallized into material and tangible form. On the eve of such transcendent events, after the uncertainty and struggles of the past, and in the midst of our hopes for speedy emancipation, we, the representatives assembled, turn our eyes now to the Capitol of the United States and once more await with persistence and faith the enactment of the pending measure. The tenacity, efforts, activities, and sacrifices shown by our Resident Commissioners have been no small factor in the struggle now about to effect this happy consummation. They have been, and are, the guiding spirits of this great campaign. We applaud their splendid and patriotic work, and we recognize that no one could have done within so short a time what they have done in behalf of this country. We expect that as Members of the House of Representatives they will lose no opportunity to move the patriotism of the American people and appeal to the sentiments of humanity and justice of their Representatives. Our fervant desire is that the longed-for measure be not delayed in its passage. We Filipinos earnestly desire it. Once again we are one in this plea, as we were in the revolution. We feel confident that Divine Justice will grant us in peace what it could not grant us in time of war.

On October 16, 1917, the same Philippine Legislature approved another joint resolution, which says:

Be it resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the Philippines, in joint session assembled in the Marble Hall of the Ayuntamiento, That the Governor General be, and hereby is, requested to send the following message to the President of the United States:

"The Philippine Legislature deems it a duty incumbent upon it to voice the unequivocal expressions of the loyalty of the people of these islands to the cause of the United States of America in the present war and in this solemn manner to ratify and transmit the same to the American people. We realize that in this war there are being tried in the balance the greatest principles of humanity and right which in future will be the foundation of the stability, peace, and security of all nations, whether they be great or small or belong to one race or another.

"Our loyalty to the cause is based on the evident justice of the enforced intervention of the American people in this war, in which they have been guided solely by the supreme interest of defending universal democracy and upholding the right of small nations to live in confidence and security under their own governments, safe from the threats and perils of autocracy and imperialism.

"We firmly believe that the final triumph of democracy, in securing for the world the principle of nationality for the benefit of the small nations, will finally enable our people to attain the ideals for which we have always struggled, namely, our constitution into a free and independent nation, with a democratic government of law and order, ready to be another instrument of democracy and universal progress."

On November 20, 1918, upon receipt of official notification of the signing of the armistice, the Philippine Legislature approved the following message to the President of the United States:

Whereas the Chief Executive has just informed the legislature that it may take official cognizance of the termination of hostilities in Europe under the terms of the armistice laid down by the United States and her associated Governments; and

Whereas said terms of the armistice are such as to insure the advent of peace: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the Philippines, assembled in joint session in the Marble Hall of the Ayuntamiento, That a message of the most heartfelt congratulations be sent to the President of the United States for the brilliant success obtained by the United States in the terrible war just ended, together with the expressions of the confident expectation of the Filipino people that this victory of power shall be converted into the victory of right by the glorious realization of the great ideals of humanity, justice, and liberty and self-government enunciated and reiterated by President Wilson;

Be it further resolved, That this body express, and does hereby express, the gratitude of the Filipino people to the United States for the part they were allowed to take in the most far-reaching enterprise ever undertaken by democracy, the first part of which, fought in the field of arms, has successfully ended;

Be it finally resolved, That the Filipino people, which have unqualifiedly sided with the United States when the war was thrust upon her, hereby renew their adherence to the noble purposes sought in the war, and they place themselves again, as heretofore, at the pleasure of the American people, ready to contribute their modest but cordial and determined service in the forthcoming task of reconstruction and peace. The Filipino people believe that Providence, in choosing the American people as the leaders in this stupendous and immortal enterprise, has ordained in His high designs that through the complete development and application to all peoples of the principles which have given birth to the United States the fruit of victory, gained at the cost of untold sacrifices, shall not have come to naught; that the world be made safe for democracy; that the rights and liberties of the small nations be forever secured and guaranteed; that the people desiring to be free be liberated and allowed to establish, without fear or hindrance, a government of their own choosing, and change it at will, when so demanded by their best interests; that the weak be not at the mercy of the strong; and that the spirit of selfishness and domination be destroyed, and established in its place among all free men of the world, a new kingdom of constructive and equal justice, based upon foundations that will make it universal, secure, and permanent. And when all these things shall have been accomplished the universal belief shall have been confirmed, that the war which has happily ended has been fought in the interest of free humanity and the everlasting peace of the world.

In each and every one of these documents the sentiment of the Filipinos for their independence, a living sentiment, constant and ever-growing, is reflected. Neither the years that have passed nor the benefits received from the American Government have in any manner changed this sentiment. The Filipinos to-day, more than ever, believe that the time has come when the political relations between the two countries should be settled and adjusted with a view to a final solution. It is for this reason that the legislature enacted a law creating a committee on independence, charged with the duty of studying the means of and taking the necessary steps for negotiating with the Government of the United States the terms of the independence of the Philippines. This committee has deemed it necessary to send to the United States a special mission, which is not a political body. The economic interests of the country predominate in it. Out of the 26 full-fledged members, 14 have no official connections, are not in active politics; 4 officially represent agricultural interests; 2 represent industrial interests; 4 represent commercial interests; 1 represents the Catholics of the country; 1 represents the laborers; 1, formerly a Resident Commissioner in Washington, is now a business man; and 1 represents the medical profession. These 14 men have official representation of the economic forces of the country, and they are all for the immediate independence of the Philippines.

Nothing could better explain the present attitude of the Filipinos and their determination to obtain their independence from the Government and people of the United States than the documents hereto appended, where the legislature defines the powers of the Philippine mission and states its duties. (See Appendices "A" and "B.")

Respectfully submitted.

APPENDIX A.

Fourth Philippine Legislature, special session of 1919.

Resolution of the Senate and House of Representatives of the Philippines, in joint session assembled, adopting a declaration of purposes for the guidance of the commission of independence.

Whereas the commission of independence has informed the Philippine Legislature that it is ready to receive from it instructions or declarations for its future guidance, in order to insure the best possible performance of the duties of the commission: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the Philippines, in joint session assembled in the Marble Hall of the Ayuntamiento, That the following declaration of purposes be, and the same hereby is, adopted, to wit:

DECLARATION OF PURPOSES.

The Philippine question has reached such a stage that a full and final exchange of views between the United States of America and the Philippine Islands has become necessary. We need not repeat the declarations respecting the national aspirations of the Filipino people. Such declarations have been made from time to time in the most frank and solemn manner by the constitutional representatives of the Philippine nation and are a matter of permanent record in public documents covering more than a decade of persistent efforts, particularly during the last three years. America, on her part, has been sufficiently explicit in her purposes from the beginning of her occupation of the Philippines. It is true that the treaty of Paris, whereby the sovereignty formerly exercised by Spain passed to the United States, was negotiated and concluded without the intervention or consent of the Filipinos, and that the United States of America did not occupy the Philippine Archipelago upon a previous categorical declaration like that formulated and made public before the occupation of Cuba. But, aside from certain differences in the details of both occupations which, not having been foreseen upon the declaration of war between the United States and Spain, subsequently gave rise to debate and differences of opinion regarding procedure, it is an incontrovertible fact that the definite purpose of the United States in both cases was the same: The disinterested liberation of the peoples subjugated by Spain. The American flag that waved over Cuba for lofty reasons of humanity and justice, scrupulously observed and respected after the victory, is the same flag which, when the war spread to this part of the globe, extended its protecting folds over another people anxious for justice and liberty. And that American flag could not stand for emancipation in Cuba and at the same time for forcible subjugation in the Philippines. The difference, if such ever existed, consisted only in matters of detail not in the affirmative and observance of the cardinal principles. In one case, owing to the proximity of Cuba to the American shores, the terms of the problem were known at the outset and provisions had been made for its solution. In the other, the lack of adequate information in the United States as to the true conditions of the Philippine problem, aggravated by long distance, momentarily obscured the question and naturally gave rise to a less determined and speedy procedure. Thus while Cuba became free and independent after scarcely four years of American occupation, the Philippines, which professed the same ideals as their sister of the Antilles, continue in a state of dependency after more than 20 years of such occupation.

In submitting the Philippine question to the Government and people of the United States, the commission of independence will find it unnecessary to refer to the natural acerbity of the situation or to the anxiety of our people which two decades of occupation have only served to accentuate. The steadfastness of our position is not due to mere sentiment but to the justice of our cause, sanctified by the laws of God and nature not only but admitted in the promises solemnly made by the United States and accepted by the Philippines. Although attention should respectfully be invited to the fact that the Filipino people have never renounced their independence, not even in the moments of the greatest adversity brought about by the enforced or voluntary submission of their own leaders, yet the commission of independence in dwelling upon the promises made will unreservedly and with the deepest gratitude recognize that they were made freely and generously to a small and powerless people after they had suffered defeat in the field of battle. The deliberate attitude of our country in reposing confidence in those promises and laboring peacefully in pursuance thereof must also be asserted. Thus, after the rupture of relations occasioned by three years of war, during which the right of the Filipinos to their independence was disputed, unsuccessfully so far as they were concerned, violence gave way to harmony and hostility to cooperation; and thanks to the growing influence of the new conditions of peace, Americans and Filipinos who a short time ago fought each other and stained the Philippine soil with blood, undertook jointly together, on the basis of a friendly undertaking, a magnificent labor which has been carried on with the orderly progress of liberty and self-government.

The commission must not lose sight of the fact that the altruistic ideals and the wise and efficient aid of America in peace justly won for her our confidence and gratitude. Far from allowing a policy of selfish exploitation to direct the destinies of these islands, America proclaimed and insisted that the interest and welfare of the Philippines were to be considered a sacred trust confided to the people of the United States. Instead of the national spirit being stifled, it was announced from the outset that the natural development of self-government would be promoted. The total surrender of the government of the municipalities to popular control, the constant increase in the measure of self-government in the administration of the Provinces, and the growing participation of the people in the management of the central government and of national affairs; the plan of a general free elementary education conceived from the start; the establishment of the national assembly, with the subsequent addition of an elective senate, and, finally, the acceptance of the offers of adhesion and aid of the Philippines to the cause of America in the recent war, based on the principles of justice and self-government, liberty and security for small nations, as proclaimed by the Government of the United States, are fundamental facts of the policy of America in these islands which have appealed to the heart and brightened the hopes of the Filipino people. President Roosevelt, proudly contemplating, rather than the initial results of the work, the loftiness and purity of the principles enunciated, said with good reason that "No great civilized power has ever handled with such wisdom and disinterestedness the affairs of a people committed by the accident of war to its hands." "Save only our attitude towards Cuba," Mr. Roosevelt continued, "I question whether there is a brighter page in the annals of international dealing between the strong and the weak than the page which tells of our doings in the Philippines." (Jan. 27, 1908.) And subsequently he proclaimed in a message to Congress that "the Filipino people, through their officials, are therefore making real steps in the direction of self-government" and that he hoped and trusted that these steps would mark "the beginning of a course which will continue till the Filipinos become fit to decide for themselves whether they desire to be an independent nation." (Dec. 8, 1908.) In the opinion of William H. Taft, who implanted our civil régime, the national policy with regard to the Philippines contemplated a gradual and constant extension of popular control, and making a logical deduction, he said, "When the Filipino people as a whole, show themselves reasonably fit to conduct a popular self-government, maintaining law and order and offering equal protection of the laws and civil rights to rich and poor, and desire complete independence of the United States, they shall be given it." (Jan. 23, 1908.) These statements of Mr. Taft, made while he was Secretary of War, were confirmed by him when, as President of the United States, he said in a message to Congress: "We should endeavor to secure for the Filipinos economic independence and to fit them for complete self-government, with the power to decide eventually, according to their own largest good, whether such self-government shall be accompanied by independence." (Dec. 6, 1912.)

On March 4, 1913, there was a change in the administration of the United States, and the power passed from the Republicans to the Democrats. Seven months later Hon. Francis Burton Harrison, the new Governor General, communicated to the Filipino people the following message from President Wilson:

"We regard ourselves as trustees, acting not for the advantage of the United States, but for the benefit of the people of the Philippine Islands. Every step we take will be taken with a view to the ultimate independence of the islands and as a preparation for that independence. And we hope to move toward that end as rapidly as the safety and the permament interests of the islands will permit. After each step taken experience will guide us to the next." (Oct. 6, 1913.)

On the occasion of the change in the Philippine Commission, which acted as the upper house of the legislature, the Filipinos were given an effective majority in both houses, and in accordance with the new policy, that in the administration of affairs in the Philippines America desired not her own counsel, but the counsel of the Filipinos, the Filipinization of the service was accelerated and other administrative measures were adopted to extend the popular control in the government. Finally, maintaining all the progress made and emphasizing the steps toward independence, frankly announced by President Wilson, the Congress of the United States approved the new organic law for the Philippines of August 29, 1916, which formally promises the Filipinos their independence and grants them a more autonomous government. Thus the burden of the international responsibilities assumed by the United States by virtue of the treaty of Paris passed in effect to the hands of the Filipino people, and a pact was virtually consummated between America and the Philippines, analogous to that established between America and Cuba by the passage of the Teller resolution, which led to the war between America and Spain and publicly defined America's purpose at that time.

During this period of confident waiting, when our attitude was one of mere cooperation as well as when we assumed the new powers conferred by the Jones law, the commission of independence will find throughout the entire record of over 20 years positive facts demonstrating our full capacity for national independence and self-government. In the plan of a general free education and of sanitary improvements; in the vast public-works program with respect to roads and bridges, public buildings, and irrigation systems; in the fostering of agriculture, industry, and commerce, including the provision of banking facilities, port improvements, and an adequate system of transportation by land and sea; in the establishment of an efficient civil service and an independent judiciary; in the constant development of self-government in the local organizations and the central government and in the adoption of measures for the free and orderly exercise of the popular suffrage; in the exercise, in fine, of all the political powers intrusted to us no effort has been spared to promote the public good. Any unprejudiced critic will find after an impartial examination that we have successfully created a condition which demonstrates that the Filipino people, in managing their own affairs, can maintain law and order and afford equal protection to all, whether foreigners or nationals.

Despite the party struggles that precede the elections, particularly those that attended the first general election held on the occasion of the inauguration of the Philippine Assembly, the work of that body and that of the present purely elective legislature which succeeded it show that there exists in these islands a strong and complete national unity which places general interests above petty local partisanships. In our budget system, successfully implanted since both houses became elective, no costly extravagance, local selfishness, or "log-rolling" and "pork-barrel" practices find any place. Our financial system and the appearance of cabinet members before the houses of the legislature have effected a coordination of forces and leadership which has promoted the efficiency of the administration and assured its responsibility to the people. The stability of the present Government, managed almost entirely by Filipinos, has been put to a test not only by the extension of its authority to all the remote districts of the islands inhabitated by Mohammedans and other non-Christian Filipinos, where, as in the rest of the country, there now reigns perfect order maintained by civil officers, but also by the uninterrupted maintenance of a complete state of peace, order, and security during the recent war which devastated the fields of Europe and sowed the seed of restlessness and discontent throughout the world.

As an evidence of the appreciation of the high purposes and disinterested work of the Americans who have aided the Filipinos, all useful public institutions in existence at the inauguration of the Philippine Assembly in 1907 have been preserved and perfected. Notwithstanding the policy of Filipinization implanted by President McKinley, no American employee in sympathy with this country and with the common work carried on has been retired from the service against his will and without an equitable compensation. It must be a source of legitimate pride and satisfaction to every American to know that the noble and humanitarian purposes expressed by President McKinley and his successors in their instructions, messages, and other official documents as the reason for American occupation has been successfully attained by the united and harmonious effort of Americans and Filipinos.

Now, in applying the principles enunciated in documents and utterances on the Philippines to the conditions now existing in the islands, the independence mission will find the following facts:

That there exist at present in the Philippine Islands the conditions of order and government which America has for nearly a century and a half required in all cases in which she has recognized the independence of a country or the establishment of a new government, not even excepting the case of the government of Gen. Huerta in Mexico, which she refused to recognize because it was stained with blood and established through intrigue, deceit, and crime.

That there exist likewise in the Philippines all the conditions of stability and guaranties for law and order that Cuba had to establish to the satisfaction of America in order to obtain her independence, or to preserve it, during the military occupation of 1898–1902 and during the intervention of 1906–1909, respectively.

That the "preparation for independence" and the "stable government" required by President Wilson and the Congress of the United States, respectively, contain no new requisite not included in any of the cases above cited.

That these prerequisites for Philippine independence are the same as those virtually or expressly established by the Republican administrations that preceded President Wilson's administration.

That during the entire time that the Filipino people have been with America they have been living in the confidence that the American occupation was only temporary, and that its final aim was not aggrandizement or conquest, but the peace, welfare, and liberty of the Filipino people.

That this faith in the promises of America was a cardinal factor, not only in the cooperation between Americans and Filipinos during the years of peace but also in the cooperation between Americans and Filipinos during the late war;

That the condition of thorough development of the internal affairs of the country and the present international atmosphere of justice, liberty, and security for all peoples are the most propitious for the fulfillment by America of her promises and for her redemption of the pledges she has made before the world.

In the light of these facts and considerations the Filipino people are confident that it will be possible to arrive at a satisfactory final decision, as we deal no longer with a disputed question but are merely endeavoring to agree upon the final adjustment of a matter with regard to which, according to President Wilson's words, there exists, so far as fundamentals are concerned, "a perfect harmony of ideals and feelings" between the Governments of the United States and of the Philippine Islands, which harmony has brought about "that real friendship and mutual support which is the foundation of all sound political policy." (Nov. 29, 1918.)

Therefore, so far as it is humanly possible to judge and say, we can see only one aim for the commission of independence: Independence; and we can give only one instruction: To get it. Thus America, in adding another glory to her banner by establishing the first really democratic republic in the East, will apply a second time, generously and freely, the same measure of humanity and justice that she applied in the case of Cuba, which is but a logical and natural sequence of the immortal principles of the Declaration of Independence. This declaration, which belongs to all humanity, has now as much force as it had in the days when America proclaimed it. America will thus vindicate the memory of President McKinley, to whom the "forcible annexation" of peoples meant "criminal aggression," and who upon taking over the Philippines "for high duty in the interest of their inhabitants and for humanity and civilization," solemnly said: "Our sacrifices were with this high motive. We want to improve the condition of the inhabitants, securing them peace, liberty, and the pursuit of their highest good."

Thus finally America will carry out the efforts and assurances of President Wilson when, upon the signing of the armistice, he said to the Filipinos: "I hope and believe that the future holds brighter hope for the States which have heretofore been the prey of great powers and will realize for all the world the offers of justice and peace which have prompted the magnificent cooperation of the present war" (Nov. 29, 1918).

The Filipinos will thus have a better opportunity to demonstrate how deeply rooted is their gratitude for America when, after her voluntary withdrawal from these islands, we preserve here the immortal spirit of her democratic institutions and associate with her in her future enterprises of justice and peace in carrying to the darkest corners of the earth, which lack happiness because their people do not control their own destinies, the quickening flame of justice, democracy, and liberty.

APPENDIX B.

Instructions from the Commission of Independence to the Philippine Mission.

MANILA, P. I., March 17, 1919.

By authority of the Philippine Legislature, and acting under its instructions, the Commission of Independence has resolved that the following statement be sent to the Philippine Mission:

The Philippine Mission will please convey to the Government of the United States the frankest assurance of the good will, friendship, and gratitude of the Filipino people, and submit with as much respect as confidence the question of Philippine independence, with a view to its final settlement. The attention of the Government of the United States is respectfully invited to the summary of facts and propositions considered in the declaration of purposes approved by the Philippine Legislature on March 8, 1919.

It is singularly fortunate for the Philippine nation that there seems to be no controversy concerning either the pertinent principles or the capital facts of the matter. The Filipinos venture to believe that all that is necessary is a frank exchange of views in order to arrive in a prompt and satisfactory manner at a definite adjustment of details which will result in the complete and final execution of the plans outlined in accordance with the principles already established and agreed upon.

It is well known that these principles are so old that many of them, and one may even say all of them, already found faithful expression in the immortal days of 1776, when in the New World a people smaller and with less resources than the Filipino people entered upon the fearless undertaking of establishing a new government founded upon the proposition that its just powers were derived not from the will of monarchs but from the consent of the governed. It was not the first time that a people threw off the yoke of a foreign Government, but it was the first case in which a people dissatisfied with the political bonds which had connected them with their former sovereign, invoking the laws of God and nature, established the principles of liberty and justice not only for themselves but also for the other subject peoples of the world.

Having lived for over two decades side by side with the people of the United States, the Filipino people have become convinced that those principles are now as real and powerful as in the days when they were enunciated. Although it has not been possible to avoid certain isolated expressions made in apparent violation of those principles, yet it can not be denied that the only authorized declarations regarding the American policy in these islands have been specific and definite, and having been reiterated from time to time have led the Filipino people to believe, as they have with good reason believed, that the purposes of America were not of domination or self-aggrandizement, but of altruism, humanity, and liberty.

On the basis of this understanding the attitude of the Filipinos has been one of confident waiting. Busily engaged in the reconstruction that necessarily followed the war, as well as in the reaffirmation of their personality, the Filipino people have successfully exercised the political powers conferred upon them, first giving their loyal and peaceful cooperation, and subsequently assuming an almost complete control of their internal affairs. Their national record of over 20 years, from the first day of American occupation until the present, is an open book, and is now unhesitatingly submitted to the examination and criticism of the world.

Moreover, the triumph of democracy in the moral and political evolution of human institutions through the recent war has infused new life into the principles enunciated in 1776, and in fact has confirmed and ratified the promises of 1916. The Filipino people, seeing their own cause involved in the cause of the United States in that war, gave their support to the same. They not only placed all their modest energies and resources at the service of Ameria, but in the spirit of a real and active community of ideals and interests they resolutely assumed the international responsibilities of that country in the Philippines. It will not be amis to say now that during all that time of commotion and restlessness the public order was maintained here as perfectly as in the preceding years, and the American flag continued to float undisturbed, not because it was supported by a military force, of which there was hardly any, but because of the loyal and vigilant allegiance of the Filipinos.

Now that the war is over and the world is engaged in the application of the principles that have come out triumphant from it; now that the Filipino people have met the tests to which their capacity has been submitted, can it be deemed inopportune or ill-advised for them to submit the pending question to the United States or to any other competent tribunal of the world for its final adjustment? The problem being so varied in its aspects, the Filipino people will welcome an opportunity to discuss the terms of the concession of independence and the scope of the covenants necessary for the guaranty, safety, and stability of the new State and for the establishment and maintenance of such external relations, especially with America, as may be equitable and beneficial and as the circumstances may demand. In this respect they are guided by the spirit of the steps previously taken with the Government of the United States, especially by reason of the mutual understanding and benefit that were taken into account when the independence bill of 1914 was drafted. Inasmuch as the situation of the international affairs has been altered by the irresistible force of the principles consecrated by the recent war, it is evident that the plan contained in that bill can not be carried into effect without certain suitable revisions. One of them is that, inasmuch as the Filipino people believe in the efficacy of a general concert of responsible powers established for the common cause of justice and the preservation of the peace of the world, they would be ready to agree to any arrangement by which the Philippines would be enabled to participate in the concert as soon as possible.

The Filipino people would not be just to themselves if at this moment, when their political separation from the sovereign country is being urged, they should fail to express in the clearest and most definite manner the sentiments and purposes that inspire their action. They therefore deem it their duty to affirm: That independence, instead of destroying or weakening, will strengthen the bonds of friendship and appreciation arising from the gratitude of the Filipino people not only for the final measure of complete justice and humanity that they confidently expect, but for all the previous disinterested work so splendidly performed for the benefit of the Philippines by so many faithful sons and daughters of America; that this gratitude will be the fundamental factor in the future relations between the United States and the Philippine Islands; that in the present state of the international affairs the Filipino people merely aspire to become another conscious and direct instrument for the progress of liberty and civilization; that in the tranquil course of their years of constitutional development they will maintain for all people inhabiting their hospitable land the essence and benefit of democratic institutions; that they will continue to associate, in so far as this will be acceptable and their strength will permit, in the work of reconstruction, justice, and peace carried on by the United States in continuation of those other undertakings, the high purpose of which was the cause, according to President Wilson, "of the magnificent cooperation during the war" between the American and Filipino peoples; and, finally, that in thus preserving their best traditions and institutions in the new situation which will strengthen and perfect them, the Filipino people will continue to make this country, as heretofore, a place of law and order, justice and liberty, where Americans and foreigners, as well as nationals, may live peacefully in the pursuit of happiness and prosperity and safe in the enjoyment of their property as well as of their rights and their liberty.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JULIUS KAHN,

OF CALIFORNIA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Monday, June 9, 1919.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, I herewith append the "Summary of the Conditions of Peace" for printing in the RECORD, according to the leave to print accorded me to-day. It is as follows:

SUMMARY OF THE CONDITIONS OF PEACE AS PRESENTED TO THE GERMAN PLENIPOTENTIARIES AT VERSAILLES MAY 7, 1919.

The treaty of peace between the 27 allied and associated powers on the one hand and Germany on the other was handed to the German plenipotentiaries at Versailles to-day.

It is the longest treaty ever drawn. It totals about 80,000 words, divided into 15 main sections, and represents the combined product of over a thousand experts working continually through a series of commissions for the three and a half months since January 18. The treaty is printed in parallel pages of English and French, which are recognized as having equal validity. It does not deal with questions affecting Austria, Bulgaria, and Turkey, except in so far as binding Germany to accept any agreement reached with those former allies.

Following the preamble and deposition of powers comes the covenant of the league of nations as the first section of the treaty. The frontiers of Germany in Europe are defined in the second section; European political clauses given in the third; and extra-European political clauses in the fourth. Next are the military, naval, and air terms as the fifth section, followed by a section on prisoners of war and military graves, and a seventh on responsibilities. Reparations, financial terms, and economic terms are covered in sections 8 to 10. Then comes the aeronautic section, ports, waterways, and railways section, the labor covenant, the section on guarantees, and the final clauses.

Germany, by the terms of the treaty, restores Alsace-Lorraine to France, accepts the internationalization of the Saar Basin temporarily and of Danzig permanently, agrees to territorial changes toward Belgium and Denmark and in East Prussia, cedes most of Upper Silesia to Poland, and renounces all territorial and political rights outside Europe, as to her own or her allies' territories, and especially as to Morocco, Egypt, Siam, Liberia, and Shantung. She also recognizes the total independence of German-Austria, Tchecho-Slovakia, and Poland.

Her army is reduced to 100,000 men, including officers; conscription within her territories is abolished; all forts 50 kilometers east of the Rhine razed; and all importation, exportation, and nearly all production of war material stopped. Allied occupation of parts of Germany will continue till reparation is made, but will be reduced at the end of each of three five-year periods if Germany is fulfilling her obligations. Any violation by Germany of the conditions as to the zone 50 kilometers east of the Rhine will be regarded as an act of war.

The German Navy is reduced to 6 battleships, 6 light cruisers, and 12 torpedo boats, without submarines and a personnel of not over 15,000. All other vessels must be surrendered or destroyed. Germany is forbidden to build forts controlling the Baltic, must demolish Heligoland, open the Kiel Canal to all nations, and surrender her 14 submarine cables. She may have no military or naval air forces, except 100 unarmed seaplanes until October 1 to detect mines, and may manufacture no aviation material for six months.

Germany accepts full responsibility for all damages caused to allied and associated Governments and nationals, and agrees specifically to reimburse all civilian damages, beginning with an initial payment of 20,000,000,000 marks, subsequent payments to be secured by bonds to be issued at the discretion of the Reparation Commission. Germany is to pay shipping damage on a ton-for-ton basis by cession of a large part of her merchant, coasting, and river fleets, and by new construction; and to devote her economic resources to the rebuilding of the devastated regions.

She agrees to return to the 1914 most-favored-nation tariffs, without discrimination of any sort; to allow allied and associated nationals freedom of transit through her territories, and to accept highly detailed provisions as to prewar debts, unfair competition, internationalization of railroads and rivers, and other economic and financial clauses. She also agrees to the trial of the ex-Kaiser by an international high court for a supreme offense against international morality, and of other nationals for violation of the laws and customs of war, Holland to be asked to extradite the former and Germany being responsible for delivering the latter.

The league of nations is accepted by the allied and associated powers as operative upon ratification of the treaty and by Germany in principle but without membership. Similarly an international labor body is brought into being, with a permanent office and an annual convention. A great number of international bodies of different kinds and for different purposes are created, some under the league of nations, some to execute the peace treaty. Among the former is the commission to govern the Saar Basin until a plebiscite is held 15 years hence; the internationalized free city of Danzig guaranteed by the league and under a high commissioner appointed by it; and various commissions for plebiscites in Malmedy, Schleswig, and East Prussia. Among those to carry out the peace treaty are the reparations, military, naval, air, financial, and economic commissions, the international high court and military tribunals to fix responsibilities, and a series of bodies for the control of international rivers.

Certain problems are left for solution between the allied and associated powers, notably details of the disposition of the German fleet and cables, the former German colonies, and the values paid in reparation. Certain other problems, such as the laws of the air and the opium, arms, and liquor traffic, are either agreed to in detail or set for early international action.

PREAMBLE.

The preamble names as parties of the one part the United States, the British Empire, France, Italy, and Japan, described as the five allied and associated powers, and Belgium, Bolivia, Brazil, China, Cuba, Ecuador, Greece, Guatemala, Haiti, the Hedjaz, Honduras, Liberia, Nicaragua, Panama, Peru, Poland, Portugal, Roumania, Serbia, Siam, Tchecho-Slovakia, and Urnguay, who, with the five above, are described as the allied and associated powers, and on the other part, Germany.

It states that: "Bearing in mind that on the request of the then Imperial German Government an armistice was granted on November 11, 1918, by the five allied and associated powers, in order that a treaty of peace might be concluded with her, and whereas the allied and associated powers being equally desirous that the war in which they were successively involved directly or indirectly and which originated in the declaration of war by Austria-Hungary on July 28, 1914, against Serbia, the declaration of war by Germany against Russia on August 1, 1914, and against France on August 3, 1914, and in the invasion of Belgium, should be replaced by a firm, just, and durable peace," the plenipotentiaries, "having communicated their full powers found in good and due form have agreed as follows:

"From the coming into force of the present treaty the state of war will terminate. From that moment and subject to the provisions of this treaty official relations with Germany, and with each of the German States, will be resumed by the allied and associated powers."

SECTION I.—LEAGUE OF NATIONS.

The covenant of the league of nations constitutes Section I of the peace treaty, which places upon the league many specific in addition to its general duties. It may question Germany at any time for a violation of the neutralized zone east of the Rhine as a threat against the world's peace. It will appoint three of the five members of the Saar Commission, oversee its régime, and carry out the plebiscite. It will appoint the high commissioner of Danzig, guarantee the independence of the free city, arrange for treaties between Danzig and Germany and Poland, and be the final authority on any alienating of the independence of German-Austria. It will work out the mandatory system to be applied to the former German colonies, and act as a final court in part of the plebiscites on the Belgian-German frontier, and in disputes as to the Kiel Canal, and decide certain of the economic and financial problems. An international conference on labor is to be held in October under its direction, and another on the international control of ports, waterways, and railways is foreshadowed.

MEMBERSHIP.

The members of the league will be the signatories of the covenant and other States invited to accede, who must lodge a declaration of accession without reservation within two months. Any State, Dominion, or colony may be admitted, provided its admission is agreed to by two-thirds of the assembly. A State may withdraw upon giving two years' notice, if it has fulfilled all its international obligations.

SECRETARIAT.

A permanent secretariat will be established at the seat of the league, which will be at Geneva.

ASSEMBLY.

The assembly will consist of representatives of the members of the league, and will meet at stated intervals. Voting will be by States. Each member will have one vote and not more than three representatives.

COUNCIL.

The council will consist of representatives of the five great allied powers, together with representatives of four other members selected by the assembly from time to time; it may coopt additional States, and will meet at least once a year. Members not represented will be invited to send a representative when questions affecting their interests are discussed. Voting will be by States. Each State will have one vote and not more than one representative. Decisions taken by the assembly and council must be unanimous, except in regard to procedure, and in certain cases specified in the covenant and in the treaty, where decisions will be by a majority.

ARMAMENTS.

The council will formulate plans for a reduction of armaments for consideration and adoption. These plans will be revised every 10 years. Once they are adopted, no member must exceed the armaments fixed without the concurrence of the council. All members will exchange full information as to armaments and programs, and a permanent commission will advise the council on military and naval questions.

PREVENTION OF WAR.

Upon any war, or threat of war, the council will meet to consider what common action shall be taken. Members are pledged to submit matters of dispute to arbitration or inquiry, and not to resort to war until three months after the award. Members agree to carry out an arbitral award, and not to go to war with any party to the dispute which complies with it; if a member fails to carry out the award, the council will propose the necessary measures. The council will formulate plans for the establishment of a permanent court of international justice to determine international disputes or to give advisory opinions. Members who do not submit their case to arbitration must accept the jurisdiction of the council or the assembly. If the council, less the parties to the dispute, is unanimously agreed upon the rights of it, the members agree that they will not go to war with any party to the dispute which complies with its recommendations. In this case a recommendation by the assembly concurred in by all its members represented on the council and a simple majority of the rest, less the parties to the dispute, will have the force of a unanimous recommendation by the council. In either case, if the necessary agreement can not be secured, the members reserve the right to take such action as may be necessary for the maintenance of right and justice. Members resorting to war in disregard of the covenant will immediately be debarred from all intercourse with other members. The council will in such cases consider what military or naval action can be taken by the league collectively for the protection of the covenants, and will afford facilities to members cooperating in this enterprise.

VALIDITY OF TREATIES.

All treaties or international engagements concluded after the institution of the league will be registered with the secretariat and published. The assembly may from time to time advise members to reconsider treaties which have become inapplicable or involve danger to peace. The covenant abrogates all obligations between members inconsistent with its terms, but nothing in it shall affect the validity of international engagements, such as treaties of arbitration or regional understandings like the Monroe doctrine for securing the maintenance of peace.

THE MANDATORY SYSTEM.

The tutelage of nations not yet able to stand by themselves will be intrusted to advanced nations who are best fitted to undertake it. The covenant recognizes three different stages of development requiring different kinds of mandates:

(a) Communities like those belonging to the Turkish Empire, which can be provisionally recognized as independent, subject to advice and assistance from a mandatory in whose selection they should be allowed to vote.

(b) Communities like those of Central Africa, to be administered by the mandatory under conditions generally approved by the league, where equal opportunities for trade will be allowed to all members; certain abuses, such as trade in slaves, arms, and liquor, will be prohibited, and the construction of military and naval bases and the introduction of compulsory military training will be disallowed.

(c) Other communities, such as Southwest Africa and the South Pacific Islands, best administered under the laws of the mandatory as integral portions of its territory.

In every case the mandatory will render an annual report, and the degree of its authority will be defined.

GENERAL INTERNATIONAL PROVISIONS.

Subject to and in accordance with the provisions of international conventions existing or hereafter to be agreed upon, the members of the league will in general endeavor, through the international organization established by the labor convention, to secure and maintain fair conditions of labor for men, women, and children in their own countries and other countries, and undertake to secure just treatment of the native inhabitants of territories under their control; they will intrust the league with the general supervision over the execution of agreements of the suppression of traffic in women and children, etc., and the control of the trade in arms and ammunition with countries in which control is necessary; they will make provision for freedom of communications and transit and equitable treatment for commerce of all members of the league, with special reference to the necessities of regions devastated during the war; and they will endeavor to take steps for international prevention and control of disease.

International bureaus and commissions already established will be placed under the league, as will all those to be established in the future.

AMENDMENTS TO THE COVENANT.

Amendments to the covenant will take effect when ratified by the council and a majority of the assembly.

SECTION II.—BOUNDARIES OF GERMANY.

Germany cedes to France Alsace-Lorraine, 5,600 square miles, in the southwest, and to Belgium two small districts between Luxembourg and Holland, totaling 382 square miles. She also cedes to Poland the southeastern tip of Silesia beyond and including Oppeln, most of Posen, and West Prussia, 21,686 square miles, East Prussia being isolated from the main body by a part of Poland. She loses sovereignty over the northeastmost tip of East Prussia, 40 square miles north of the River Memel, and the internationalized areas about Danzig, 729 square miles, and the basin of the Saar, 738 square miles, between the western border of the Rhenish Palatine of Bavaria and the southeast corner of Luxemburg. The Danzig area consists of the "V" between the Nogat and Vistula Rivers made a "W" by the addition of a similar "V" on the west, including the city of Danzig. The southeastern third of East Prussia and the area between East Prussia and the Vistula north of latitude 53° 30′ is to have its nationality determined by popular vote, 5,788 square miles, as is to be the case in part of Sleswig, 2,787 square miles.

BELGIUM.

Germany is to consent to the abrogation of the treaties of 1839 by which Belgium was established as a neutral State, and to agree in advance to any convention with which the allied and associated powers may determine to replace them. She is to recognize the full sovereignty of Belgium over the contested territory of Moresnet and over part of Prussian Moresnet, and to renounce in favor of Belgium all rights over the circles of Eupen and Malmedy, the inhabitants of which are to be entitled within six months to protest against this change of sovereignty either in whole or in part, the final decision to be reserved to the league of nations. A commission is to settle the details of the frontier, and various regulations for change of nationality are laid down.

LUXEMBOURG.

Germany renounces her various treaties and conventions with the Grand Duchy of Luxembourg, recognizes that it ceased to be a part of the German Zollverein from January 1, last, renounces all rights of exploitation of its railways, adheres to the abrogation of its neutrality, and accepts in advance any international agreement as to it, reached by the allied and associated powers.

LEFT BANK OF THE RHINE.

As provided in the military clauses, Germany will not maintain any fortifications or armed forces less than 50 kilometers to the east of the Rhine, hold any maneuvers, nor maintain any works to facilitate mobilization. In case of violation, "she shall be regarded as committing a hostile act against the powers who sign the present treaty, and as intending to disturb the peace of the world." "By virtue of the present treaty, Germany shall be bound to respond to any request for an explanation which the council of the league of nations may think it necessary to address to her."

ALSACE-LORRAINE.

After recognition of the moral obligation to repair the wrong done in 1871 by Germany to France and the people of Alsace-Lorraine, the territories ceded to Germany by the treaty of Frankfort are restored to France, with their frontiers as before 1871, to date from the signing of the armistice, and to be free of all public debts.

Citizenship is regulated by detailed provisions distinguishing those who are immediately restored to full French citizenship, those who have to make a formal application therefor, and those for whom naturalization is open after three years. The last-named class includes German residents in Alsace-Lorraine, as distinguished from those who acquire the position of Alsace-Lorrainers as defined in the treaty.

All public property and all private property of German ex-sovereigns passes to France without payment or credit. France is substituted for Germany as regards ownership of the railroads and rights over concessions of tramways. The Rhine bridges pass to France, with the obligation for their upkeep.

For five years manufactured products of Alsace-Lorraine will be admitted to Germany free of duty to a total amount not exceeding in any year the average of the three years preceding the war, and textile materials may be imported from Germany to Alsace-Lorraine and reexported free of duty. Contracts for electric power from the right bank must be continued for 10 years.

For 7 years, with possible extension to 10, the ports of Kehl and Strasbourg shall be administered as a single unit by a French administrator, appointed and supervised by the Central Rhine Commission. Property rights will be safeguarded in both ports, and equality of treatment as respects traffic assured the nationals, vessels, and goods of every country.

Contracts between Alsace-Lorrainers and Germans are maintained, save for France's right to annul on grounds of public interest. Judgments of courts hold in certain classes of cases, while in other a judicial exeuatur is first required. Political condemnations during the war are null and void, and the obligations to repay war fines is established as in other parts of allied territory.

Various clauses adjust the general provisions of the treaty to the special conditions of Alsace-Lorraine, certain matters of execution being left to conventions to be made between France and Germany.

THE SAAR.

In compensation for the destruction of coal mines in northern France, and as payment on account of reparation, Germany cedes to France full ownership of the coal mines of the Saar Basin, with their subsidiaries, accessories, and facilities. Their value will be estimated by the Reparation Commission and credited against that account. The French rights will be governed by German law in force at the armistice, excepting war legislation, France replacing the present owners, whom Germany undertakes to indemnify. France will continue to furnish the present proportion of coal for local needs and contribute in just proportion to local taxes. The basin extends from the frontier of Lorraine, as reannexed to France, north as far as St. Wendel, including on the west the valley of the Saar as far as Saarholzbach, and on the east the town of Homburg.

In order to secure the rights and welfare of the population and guarantee to France entire freedom in working the mines, the territory will be governed by a commission appointed by the league of nations, and consisting of five members, one French, one a native of the Saar, and three representing three different countries other than France and Germany. The league will appoint a member of the commission as chairman, to act as executive of the commission. The commission will have all powers of government formerly belonging to the German Empire, Prussia, and Bavaria; will administer the railroads and other public services, and have full power to interpret the treaty clauses. The local courts will continue, but subject to the commission. Existing German legislation will remain the basis of law, but the commission may make modifications after consulting a local representative assembly, which it will organize. It will have the taxing power, but for local purposes only; new taxes must be approved by this assembly. Labor legislation will consider the wishes of the local labor organizations and the labor program of the league. French and other labor may be freely utilized, the former being free to belong to French unions. All rights acquired as to pensions and social insurance will be maintained by Germany and the Saar Commission. There will be no military service but only a local gendarmerie to preserve order. The people will preserve their local assemblies, religious liberties, schools, and language, but may vote only for local assemblies. They will keep their present nationality, except so far as individuals may change it. Those wishing to leave will have every facility with respect to their property. The territory will form part of the French customs system, with no export tax on coal and metallurgical products going to Germany, nor on German products entering the basin, and for five years no import duties on products of the basin going to Germany or German products coming into the basin for local consumption. French money may circulate without restriction.

After 15 years a plebiscite will be held by communes to ascertain the desires of the population as to continuance of the existing régime under the league of nations, union with France, or union with Germany. The right to vote will belong to all inhabitants over 20 resident therein at the signature. Taking into account the opinions thus expressed, the league will decide the ultimate sovereignty. In any portion restored to Germany the German Government must buy out the French mines at an appraised valuation; if the price is not paid within six months thereafter, this portion passes finally to France. If Germany buys back the mines, the league will determine how much of the coal shall be annually sold to France.

GERMAN-AUSTRIA.

Germany recognizes the independence of German-Austria as inalienable except by consent of the league of nations.

TCHECHO-SLOVAKIA.

Germany recognizes the entire independence of the Tchecho-Slovak State, including the autonomous territory of the Ruthenians south of the Carpathians, and accepts the frontiers of this State as to be determined, which in the case of the German frontier shall follow the frontier of Bohemia in 1914. The usual stipulations as to acquisition and change of nationality follow.

POLAND.

Germany cedes to Poland the greater part of Upper Silesia, Posen, and the province of West Prussia on the left bank of the Vistula. A field boundary commission of seven, five representing the allied and associated powers and one each representing Poland and Germany, shall be constituted within 15 days of the peace to delimit this boundary. Such special provisions as are necessary to protect racial, linguistic, or religious minorities, and to assure freedom of transit and equitable treatment of commerce of other nations, shall be laid down in a subsequent treaty between the five allied and associated powers and Poland.

EAST PRUSSIA.

The southern and the eastern frontier of East Prussia as facing Poland is to be fixed by plebiscites, the first in the Regency of Allenstein, between the southern frontier of East Prussia and the northern frontier of Regierungsbesirk Allenstein, from where it meets the boundary between East and West Prussia, to its junction with the boundary between the circles of Oletsko and Augersburg, thence the northern boundary of Oletsko to its junction with the present frontier, and the second in the area comprising the circles of Stuhn and Rosenburg and the parts of the circles of Marienburg and Marienwerder east of the Vistula.

In each case German troops and authorities will move out within 15 days of the peace, and the territories be placed under an international commission of five members appointed by the five allied and associated powers, with the particular duty of arranging for a free, fair, and secret vote. The commission will report the results of the plebiscites to the five powers, with a recommendation for the boundary, and will terminate its work as soon as the boundary has been laid down and the new authorities set up.

The five allied and associated powers will draw up regulations assuring East Prussia full and equitable access to and use of the Vistula. A subsequent convention, of which the terms will be fixed by the five allied and associated powers, will be entered into between Poland, Germany, and Danzig, to assure suitable railroad communication across German territory on the right bank of the Vistula between Poland and Danzig, while Poland shall grant free passage from East Prussia to Germany.

The northeastern corner of East Prussia about Memel is to be ceded by Germany to the associated powers, the former agreeing to accept the settlement made, especially as regards the nationality of the inhabitants.

DANZIG.

Danzig and the district immediately about it is to be constituted into the "Free City of Danzig" under the guarantee of the league of nations. A high commissioner appointed by the league of nations, and resident at Danzig, shall draw up a constitution in agreement with the duly appointed representatives of the city, and shall deal in the first instance with all differences arising between the city and Poland. The actual boundaries of the city shall be delimited by a commission appointed within six months from the peace, and to include three representatives chosen by the allied and associated powers, and one each by Germany and Poland.

A convention, the terms of which shall be fixed by the five allied and associated powers, shall be concluded between Poland and Danzig which shall include Danzig within the Polish customs frontiers, though with a free area in the port; insure to Poland the free use of all the city's waterways, docks, and other port facilities, the control and administration of the Vistula, and the whole through railway system within the city, and postal, telegraphic, and telephonic communication between Poland and Danzig; provide against discrimination against Poles within the city, and place its foreign relations and the diplomatic protection of its citizens abroad in charge of Poland.

DENMARK.

The frontier between Germany and Denmark will be fixed in accordance with the wishes of the population. Ten days from the peace, German troops and authorities shall evacuate the region north of the line running from the mouth of the Schlei, south of Kappel, Schleswig, and Friedrichstadt along the Eider to the North Sea south of Tonning; the workmen's and soldiers' councils shall be dissolved; and the territory administered by an international commission of five, of whom Norway and Sweden shall be invited to name two.

The commission shall insure a free and secret vote in three zones. That between the German-Danish frontier and a line running south of the island of Alsen, north of Flensburg and south of Tondern to the North Sea north of the island of Sylt will vote as a unit within three weeks after the evacuation. Within five weeks after this vote the second zone, whose southern boundary runs from the North Sea south of the island of Fehr to the Baltic south of Sygum, will vote by communes. Two weeks after that vote the third zone running to the limit of evacuation will also vote by communes. The international commission will then draw a new frontier on the basis of these plebiscites, and with due regard for geographical and economic conditions. Germany will renounce all sovereignty over territories north of this line in favor of the associated Governments, who will hand them over to Denmark.

HELIGOLAND.

The fortifications, military establishments, and harbors of the islands of Heligoland and Dune are to be destroyed under the supervision of the allies by German labor, and at Germany's expense. They may not be reconstructed, nor any similar works built in the future.

RUSSIA.

Germany agrees to respect as permanent and inalienable the independence of all territories which were part of the former Russian Empire, to accept the abrogation of the Brest-Litovsk and other treaties entered into with the Maximalist Government of Russia, to recognize the full force of all treaties entered into by the allied and associated powers with States which were a part of the former Russian Empire, and to recognize the frontiers as determined thereon. The allied and associated powers formally reserve the right of Russia to obtain restitution and reparation on the principles of the present treaty.

SECTION IV.—GERMAN RIGHTS OUTSIDE EUROPE.

Outside Europe, Germany renounces all rights, titles, and privileges as to her own or her allies' territories to all the allied and associated powers, and undertakes to accept whatever measures are taken by the five allied powers in relation thereto.

COLONIES AND OVERSEAS POSSESSIONS.

Germany renounces in favor of the allied and associated powers her oversea possessions, with all rights and titles therein. All movable and immovable property belonging to the German Empire or to any German State shall pass to the Government exercising authority therein. These Governments may make whatever provisions seem suitable for the repatriation of German nationals, and as to the conditions on which German subjects of European origin shall reside, hold property, or carry on business. Germany undertakes to pay reparation for damage suffered by French nationals in the Cameroons or its frontier zone through the acts of German civil and military authorities and of individual Germans from 1st January, 1900, to 1st August, 1914. Germany renounces all rights under the convention of 4th November, 1911, and 28th September, 1912, and undertakes to pay to France in accordance with an estimate presented and approved by the Reparation Commission all deposits, credits, advances, etc., thereby secured. Germany undertakes to accept and observe any provisions by the allied and associated powers as to the trade in arms and spirits in Africa, as well as to the general act of Berlin, 1885, and the general act of Brussels of 1890. Diplomatic protection to the inhabitants of former German colonies is to be given by the Governments exercising authority.

CHINA.

Germany renounces in favor of China all privileges and indemnities resulting from the Boxer Protocol of 1901, and all buildings, wharves, barracks, forts, munitions of war, ships, wireless plants, and other public property, except diplomatic or consular establishments, in the German concessions of Tientsin and Hankow, and in other Chinese territory except Kiao-Chow, and agrees to return to China at her own expense all the astronomical instruments seized in 1900 and 1901. China will, however, take no measures for disposal of German property in the legation quarter at Pekin without the consent of the powers signatory to the Boxer Protocol.

Germany accepts the abrogation of the concessions at Hankow and Tientsin, China agreeing to open them to international use. Germany renounces all claims against China or any allied and associated Government for the internment or repatriation of her citizens in China, and for the seizure or liquidation of German interests there since August 14, 1917. She renounces in favor of Great Britain her State property in the British concession at Canton, and of France and China jointly of the property of the German school in the French concession at Shanghai.

SIAM.

Germany recognizes that all agreements between herself and Siam, including the right of extraterritoriality, ceased July 22, 1917. All German public property, except consular and diplomatic premises, passes without compensation to Siam, German private property to be dealt with in accordance with the economic clauses. Germany waives all claims against Siam for the seizure and condemnation of her ships, liquidation of her property, or internment of her nationals.

LIBERIA.

Germany renounces all rights under the international arrangements of 1911-1912 regarding Liberia, more particularly the right to nominate a receiver of the customs, and disinterests herself in any further negotiations for the rehabilitation of Liberia. She regards as abrogated all commercial treaties and agreements between herself and Liberia, and recognizes Liberia's right to determine the status and condition of the reestablishment of Germans in Liberia.

MOROCCO.

Germany renounces all her rights, titles, and privileges under the act of Algeciras and the Franco-German agreements of 1909 and 1911, and under all treaties and arrangements with the Sherifian Empire. She undertakes not to intervene in any negotiations as to Morocco between France and other powers, accepts all the consequences of the French protectorate there, and renounces the capitulations. The Sherifian Government shall have complete liberty of action in regard to German nationals, and all German protected persons shall be subject to the common law. All movable and immovable German property, including mining rights, may be sold at public auction, the proceeds to be paid to the Sherifian Government and deducted from the reparation account. Germany is also required to relinquish her interests in the State Bank of Morocco. All Moroccan goods entering Germany shall have the same privilege as French goods.

EGYPT.

Germany recognizes the British protectorate over Egypt declared on December 18, 1914, and renounces as from August 4, 1914, the capitulations and all the treaties, agreements, etc., concluded by her with Egypt. She undertakes not to intervene in any negotiations about Egypt between Great Britain and other powers. There are provisions for jurisdiction over German nationals and property, and for German consent to any changes which may be made in relation to the Commission of Public Debt. Germany consents to the transfer to Great Britain of the powers given to the late Sultan of Turkey for securing the free navigation of the Suez Canal. Arrangements for property belonging to German nationals in Egypt are made similar to those in the case of Morocco and other countries. Anglo-Egyptian goods entering Germany shall enjoy the same treatment as British goods.

TURKEY AND BULGARIA.

Germany accepts all arrangements which the allied and associated powers make with Turkey and Bulgaria with reference to any rights, privileges, or interests claimed in those countries by Germany or her nationals and not dealt with elsewhere.

SHANTUNG.

Germany cedes to Japan all rights, titles, and privileges, notably as to Kiao-Chow, and the railroads, mines, and cables acquired by her treaty with China of March 6, 1898, and by other agreements as to Shantung. All German rights to the railroad from Tsingtao to Tsinanfu, including all facilities and mining rights and rights of exploitation, pass equally to Japan, and the cables from Tsingtao to Shanghai and Chefoo, the cables free of all charges. All German State property, movable and immovable, in Kiao-Chow, is acquired by Japan free of all charges.

SECTION V.—MILITARY, NAVAL, AND AIR.

"In order to render possible the initiation of a general limitation of the armaments of all nations, Germany undertakes directly to observe the military, naval, and air clauses which follow."

MILITARY FORCES.

The demobilization of the German Army must take place within two months of the peace. Its strength may not exceed 100,000, including 4,000 officers, with not over seven divisions of infantry and three of cavalry, and to be devoted exclusively to maintenance of internal order and control of frontiers. Divisions may not be grouped under more than two army corps headquarters staffs.

The great German general staff is abolished. The army administrative service, consisting of civilian personnel not included in the number of effectives, is reduced to one-tenth the total in the 1913 budget. Employees of the German States, such as customs officers, forest guards, and coast guards, may not exceed the number in 1913. Gendarmes and local police may be increased only in accordance with the growth of population. None of these may be assembled for military training.

ARMAMENTS.

All establishments for the manufacture, preparation, storage, or design of arms and munitions of war, except those specifically excepted, must be closed within three months of the peace and their personnel dismissed. The exact amount of armament and munitions allowed Germany is laid down in detailed tables, all in excess to be surrendered or rendered useless. The manufacture or importation of asphyxiating, poisonous, or other gases, and all analogous liquids is forbidden, as well as the importation of arms, munitions, and war materials. Germany may not manufacture such materials for foreign Governments.

CONSCRIPTION.

Conscription is abolished in Germany. The enlisted personnel must be maintained by voluntary enlistments for terms of 12 consecutive years, the number of discharges before the expiration of that term not in any year to exceed 5 per cent of the total effectives. Officers remaining in the service must agree to serve to the age of 45 years, and newly appointed officers must agree to serve actively for 25 years.

No military schools except those absolutely indispensable for the units allowed shall exist in Germany two months after the peace. No associations, such as societies of discharged soldiers, shooting or touring clubs, educational establishments, or universities may occupy themselves with military matters. All measures of mobilization are forbidden.

FORTRESSES.

All fortified works, fortresses, and field works situated in German territory within a zone 50 kilometers east of the Rhine will be dismantled within three months. The construction of any new fortifications there is forbidden. The fortified works on the southern and eastern frontiers, however, may remain.

CONTROL.

Interallied commissions of control will see to the execution of the provisions for which a time limit is set, the maximum named being three months. They may establish headquarters at the German seat of government and go to any part of Germany desired. Germany must give them complete facilities, pay their expenses, and also the expenses of execution of the treaty, including the labor and material necessary in demolition, destruction or surrender of war equipment.

NAVAL.

The German Navy must be demobilized within a period of two months after the peace.

She will be allowed 6 small battleships, 6 light cruisers, 12 destroyers, 12 torpedo boats, and no submarines, either military or commercial, with a personnel of 15,000 men, including officers, and no reserve force of any character. Conscription is abolished, only voluntary service being permitted, with a minimum period of 25 years' service for officers and 12 for men. No member of the German mercantile marine will be permitted any naval training.

All German vessels of war in foreign ports, and the German high-sea fleet interned at Scapa Flow, will be surrendered, the final disposition of these ships to be decided upon by the allied and associated powers. Germany must surrender 42 modern destroyers, 50 modern torpedo boats, and all submarines, with their salvage vessels. All war vessels under construction, including submarines, must be broken up. War vessels not otherwise provided for are to be placed in reserve or used for commercial purposes. Replacement of ships except those lost can take place only at the end of 20 years for battleships and 15 years for destroyers. The largest armored ship Germany will be permitted will be 10,000 tons.

Germany is required to sweep up the mines in the North Sea and the Baltic Sea, as decided upon by the allies. All German fortifications in the Baltic defending the passages through the Belts must be demolished. Other coast defenses are permitted, but the number and caliber of the guns must not be increased.

During a period of three months after the peace, German high-power wireless stations at Nauen, Hanover, and Berlin will not be permitted to send any messages except for commercial purposes, and under supervision of the allied and associated Governments, nor may any more be constructed.

Germany will be allowed to repair German submarine cables which have been cut, but are not being utilized by the allied powers, and also portions of cables which, after having been cut, have been removed, or are, at any rate, not being utilized by any one of the allied and associated powers. In such cases the cables, or portions of cables, removed or utilized remain the property of the allied and associated powers, and accordingly 14 cables or parts of cables are specified which will not be restored to Germany.

AIR.

The armed forces of Germany must not include any military or naval air forces except for not over 100 unarmed seaplanes to be retained till October 1 to search for submarine mines. No dirigibles shall be kept. The entire air personnel is men retained till October. No aviation grounds or dirigible to be demobilized within two months, except for 1,000 officers, and sheds are to be allowed within 150 kilometers of the Rhine or the eastern or southern frontiers, existing installations within these limits to be destroyed. The manufacture of aircraft and parts of aircraft is forbidden for six months. All military and naval aeronautical material under a most exhaustive definition must be surrendered within three months, except for the hundred seaplanes already specified.

SECTION VI.—PRISONERS OF WAR.

The repatriation of German prisoners and interned civilians is to be carried out without delay and at Germany's expense by a commission composed of representatives of the allies and Germany. Those under sentence for offenses against discipline are to be repatriated without regard to the completion of their sentence. Until Germany has surrendered persons guilty of offenses against the laws and customs of war, the allies have the right to retain selected German officers. The allies may deal at their own discretion with German nationals who do not desire to be repatriated, all repatriation being conditional on the immediate release of any allied subjects still in Germany. Germany is to accord facilities to commissions of inquiry in collecting information in regard to missing prisoners of war and in imposing penalties on German officials who have concealed allied nationals. Germany is to restore all property belonging to allied prisoners. There is to be a reciprocal exchange of information as to dead prisoners and their graves.

GRAVES.

Both parties will respect and maintain the graves of soldiers and sailors buried on their territories, agree to recognize and assist any commission charged by any allied or associated Government with identifying, registering, maintaining, or erecting suitable monuments over the graves, and to afford to each other all facilities for the repatriation of the remains of their soldiers.

SECTION VII.—RESPONSIBILITIES.

"The allied and associated powers publicly arraign William II of Hohenzollern, formerly German Emperor, for a supreme offense against international morality and the sanctity of treaties."

The ex-Emperor's surrender is to be requested of Holland, and a special tribunal set up, composed of one judge from each of the five great powers, with full guarantees of the right of defense. It is to be guided "by the highest motives of international policy, with a view of vindicating the solemn obligations of international undertakings and the validity of international morality," and will fix the punishment it feels should be imposed.

Persons accused of having committed acts in violation of the laws and customs of war are to be tried and punished by military tribunals under military law. If the charges affect nationals of only one State, they will be tried before a tribunal of that State; if they affect nationals of several States, they will be tried before joint tribunals of the States concerned. Germany shall hand over to the associated Governments, either jointly or severally, all persons so accused, and all documents and information necessary to insure full knowledge of the incriminating acts, the discovery of the offenders, and the just appreciation of the responsibility. The accused will be entitled to name his own counsel.

SECTION VIII.—REPARATION.

"The allied and associated Governments affirm, and Germany accepts, the responsibility of herself and her allies for causing all the loss and damage to which the allied and associated Governments and their nationals have been subjected as a consequence of the war imposed upon them by the aggression of Germany and her allies."

The total obligation of Germany to pay, as defined in the category of damages, is to be determined and notified to her after a fair hearing and not later than May 1, 1921, by an interallied reparation commission. At the same time a schedule of payments to discharge the obligation within 30 years shall be presented. These payments are subject to postponement in certain contingencies. Germany irrevocably recognizes the full authority of this commission, agrees to supply it with all the necessary information, and to pass legislation to effectuate its findings. She further agrees to restore to the allies cash and certain articles which can be identified.

As an immediate step toward restoration, Germany shall pay within two years 20,000,000,000 marks in either gold, goods, ships, or other specific forms of payment, with the understanding that certain expenses such as those of the armies of occupation and payments for food and raw materials may be deducted at the discretion of the allies.

Germany further binds herself to repay all sums borrowed by Belgium from the allies as a result of Germany's violation of the treaty of 1839 up to November 11, 1918, and for this purpose will issue at once and hand over to the Reparation Commission 5 per cent gold bonds falling due in 1926.

While the allied and associated Governments recognize that the resources of Germany are not adequate after taking into account permanent diminution of such resources resulting from the treaty, they require, and Germany undertakes, that she will make compensation for all damages caused to civilians under seven main categories:

(a) Damages by personal injury to civilians caused by acts of war, directly or indirectly.

(b) Damage caused to civilians, including exposure to the sea, resulting from acts of cruelty ordered by the enemy, and to civilians in the occupied territories.

(c) Damages caused by maltreatment of prisoners.

(d) Damages to the allied peoples represented by pensions and separation allowances, capitalized at the signature of this treaty.

(e) Damages to property other than naval or military materials.

(f) Damage to civilians by being forced to labor.

(g) Damages in the form of levies of fines imposed by the enemy.

"In periodically estimating Germany's capacity to pay, the Reparation Commission shall examine the German system of taxation, first, to the end that the sums for reparation which Germany is required to pay shall become a charge upon all her revenues, prior to that for the service or discharge of any domestic loan, and secondary, so as to satisfy itself that, in general, the German scheme of taxation is fully as heavy proportionately as that of any of the powers represented on the commission."

"The measures which the allied and associated powers shall have the right to take, in case of voluntary default by Germany, and which Germany agrees not to regard as acts of war, may include economic and financial prohibitions and reprisals and in general such other measures as the respective Governments may determine to be necessary in the circumstances."

The commission shall consist of one representative each of the United States, Great Britain, France, Italy, and Belgium, and, in certain cases, of Japan and Servia, with all other allied powers entitled, when their claims are under consideration, to the right of representation without voting power. It shall permit Germany to give evidence regarding her capacity to pay, and shall assure her a just opportunity to be heard. It shall make its headquarters at Paris; establish its own procedure and personnel; have general control of the whole reparation problem; and become the exclusive agency of the allies for receiving, holding, selling, and distributing reparation payments. Majority vote shall prevail, except that unanimity is required on questions involving the sovereignty of any of the allies, the cancellation of all or part of Germany's obligations, the time and manner of selling, distributing, and negotiating bonds issued by Germany, any postponement between 1921 and 1926 of annual payments beyond 1930 and any postponement after 1926 for a period of more than three years, the application of a different method of measuring damage than in a similar former case, and the interpretation of provisions. Withdrawal from representation is permitted on 12 months' notice.

The commission may require Germany to give from time to time, by way of guaranty, issues of bonds or other obligations to cover such claims as are not otherwise satisfied. In this connection and on account of the total amount of claims, bond issues are presently to be required of Germany in acknowledgment of its debt as follows: Twenty billion marks gold, payable not later than May 1, 1921, without interest; 40,000,000,000 marks gold, bearing 2½ per cent interest, between 1921 and 1926, and thereafter 5 per cent, with a 1 per cent sinking fund payment beginning in 1926; and an undertaking to deliver 40,000,000,000 marks gold bonds, bearing interest at 5 per cent, under terms to be fixed by the commission.

Interest on Germany's debt will be 5 per cent, unless otherwise determined by the commission in the future, and payments that are not made in gold may "be accepted by the commission in the form of properties, commodities, businesses, rights, concessions, etc." Certificates of beneficial interest representing either bonds or goods delivered by Germany may be issued by the commission to the interested power, no power being entitled, however, to have its certificates divided into more than five pieces. As bonds are distributed and pass from the control of the commission, an amount of Germany's debt equivalent to their par value is to be considered as liquidated.

SHIPPING.

The German Government recognizes the right of the allies to the replacement, ton for ton and class for class, of all merchant ships and fishing boats lost or damaged owing to the war, and agrees to cede to the allies all German merchant ships of 1,600 tons gross and upwards; one-half of her ships between 1,600 and 1,000 tons gross and one-quarter of her steam trawlers and other fishing boats. These ships are to be delivered within two months to the Reparation Commission, together with documents of title evidencing the transfer of the ships free from encumbrance.

"As an additional part of reparation," the German Government further agrees to build merchant ships for the account of the allies to the amount of not exceeding 200,000 tons gross annually during the next five years.

All ships used for inland navigation taken by Germany from the allies are to be restored within two months, the amount of loss not covered by such restitution to be made up by the cession of the German river fleet up to 20 per cent thereof.

In order to effect payment by deliveries in kind, Germany is required, for a limited number of years, varying in the case of each commodity, to deliver coal, coal-tar products, dyestuff, and chemical drugs in specific amounts to the Reparation Commission. The commission may so modify the conditions of delivery as not to interfere unduly with Germany's industrial requirements. The deliveries of coal are based largely upon the principle of making good diminutions in the production of the allied countries resulting from the war.

DEVASTATED AREAS.

Germany undertakes to devote her economic resources directly to the physical restoration of the invaded areas. The Reparation Commission is authorized to require Germany to replace the destroyed articles by the delivery of animals, machinery, etc., existing in Germany, and to manufacture materials required for reconstruction purposes; all with due consideration for Germany's essential domestic requirements.

As reparation for the destruction of the library of Louvain, Germany is to hand over manuscripts, early printed books, prints, et cetera, to the equivalent of those destroyed.

In addition to the above, Germany is to hand over to Belgium wings now at Berlin belonging to the altarpiece of the Adoration of the Lamb, by Hubert and Jan van Eyck, the center of which is now in the Church of St. Bavo at Ghent, and the wings, now at Berlin and Munich, of the altarpiece of the Last Supper, by Dirk Bouts, the center of which belongs to the Church of St. Peter at Louvain.

Germany is to restore within six months the Koran of the Caliph Othman, formerly at Medina, to the King of the Hedjaz, and the skull of the Sultan Mkwawa, formerly in German East Africa, to His Britannic Majesty's Government.

The German Government is also to restore to the French Government certain papers taken by the German authorities in 1870, belonging then to M. Rouher, and to restore the French flags taken during the war of 1870-71.

COAL, ET CETERA.

Germany is to deliver annually for 10 years to France coal equivalent to the difference between annual prewar output of Nord and Pas de Calais mines and annual production during the above 10 years. Germany further gives options over 10 years for delivery of 7,000,000 tons of coal per year to France, in addition to the above of 8,000,000 tons of Belgium, and of an amount rising from 4,500,000 tons in 1919 to 1920 8,500,000 tons in 1923 to 1924 to Italy at prices to be fixed as prescribed in the treaty. Coke may be taken in place of coal in ratio of 3 tons to 4. Provision is also made for delivery to France over three years of benzol coal tar and sulphate of ammonia. The commission has powers to postpone or annul the above deliveries should they interfere unduly with industrial requirements of Germany.

DYESTUFFS AND CHEMICAL DRUGS.

Germany accords option to the commission on dyestuffs and chemical drugs, including quinine, up to 50 per cent of total stock in Germany at the time the treaty comes into force, and similar option during each six months to end of 1924 up to 25 per cent of previous six months' output.

CABLES.

Germany renounces all title to specified cables, value of such as were privately owned being credited to her against reparation indebtedness.

SECTION IX.—FINANCE.

Powers to which German territory is ceded will assume a certain portion of the German prewar debt, the amount to be fixed by the Reparation Commission on the basis of the ratio between the revenues of the ceded territory and Germany's total revenues for the three years preceding the war. In view, however, of the special circumstances under which Alsace-Lorraine was separated from France in 1871, when Germany refused to accept any part of the French public debt, France will not assume any part of Germany's prewar debt there, nor will Poland share in certain German debts incurred for the oppression of Poland. If the value of the German public property in ceded territory exceeds the amount of debt assumed, the States to which property is ceded give credit on reparation for the excess, with the exception of Alsace-Lorraine. Mandatory powers will not assume any German debts or give any credit for German Government property. Germany renounces all right of representation on, or control of, State banks, commissions, or other similar international financial and economic organizations.

Germany is required to pay the total cost of the armies of occupation from the date of the armistice as long as they are maintained in German territory, this cost to be a first charge on her resources. The cost of reparation is the next charge, after making such provisions for payments for imports as the allies may deem necessay.

Germany is to deliver to the allied and associated powers all sums deposited in Germany by Turkey and Austria-Hungary in connection with the financial support extended by her to them during the war, and to transfer to the allies all claims against Austria-Hungary, Bulgaria, or Turkey in connection with agreements made during the war. Germany confirms the renunciation of the treaties of Bucharest and Brest-Litovsk.

On the request of the Reparation Commission, Germany will expropriate any rights or interests of her nationals in public utilities in ceded territories or those administered by mandatories, and in Turkey, China, Russia, Austria-Hungary, and Bulgaria, and transfer them to the Reparation Commission, which will credit her with their value. Germany guarantees to repay to Brazil the fund arising from the sale of Sao Paulo coffee which she refused to allow Brazil to withdraw from Germany.

SECTION X.—ECONOMIC CLAUSES.

CUSTOMS.

For a period of six months, Germany shall impose no tariff duties higher than the lowest in force in 1914, and for certain agricultural products, wines, vegetable oils, artificial silk, and washed or scoured wool, this restriction obtains for two and a half years more. For five years, unless further extended by the league of nations, Germany must give most-favored-nation treatment to the allied and associated powers. She shall impose no customs tariff for five years on goods originating in Alsace-Lorraine and for three years on goods originating in former German territory ceded to Poland, with the right of reservation of a similar exception for Luxembourg.

SHIPPING.

Ships of the allied and associated powers shall for five years and thereafter under condition of reciprocity, unless the league of nations otherwise decides, enjoy the same rights in German ports as German vessels and have most-favored-nation treatment in fishing, coasting trade, and tonnage, even in territorial waters. Ships of a country having no seacoast may be registered at some one place within its territory.

UNFAIR COMPETITION.

Germany undertakes to give the trade of the allied and associated powers adequate safeguards against unfair competition, and in particular to suppress the use of false wrappings and markings, and on condition of reciprocity to respect the laws and judicial decisions of allied and associated States in respect of regional appellations of wines and spirits.

TREATMENT OF NATIONALS.

Germany shall impose no exceptional taxes or restrictions upon the nationals of allied and associated States for a period of five years, and unless the league of nations acts for an additional five years. German nationality shall not continue to attach to a person who has become a national of an allied or associated State.

MULTILATERAL CONVENTIONS.

Some 40 multilateral conventions are renewed between Germany and the allied and associated powers, but special conditions are attached to Germany's readmission to several. As to postal and telegraphic conventions, Germany must not refuse to make reciprocal agreements with the new States. She must agree as respects the radio-telegraphic convention to provisional rules to be communicated to her and adhere to the new convention when formulated; in the North Sea fisheries and North Sea liquor traffic conventions, rights of inspection and police over associated fishing boats shall be exercised for at least five years only by vessels of these powers; as to the International Railway Union, she shall adhere to the new convention when formulated. China, as to the Chinese customs tariff arrangement, the arrangement of 1905 regarding Whang-Poo, and the Boxer indemnity of 1901; France, Portugal, and Roumania as to The Hague convention of 1903, relating to civil procedure; and Great Britain and the United States as to article 3 of the Samoan treaty of 1899, are relieved of all obligation toward Germany.

BILATERAL TREATIES.

Each allied and associated State may renew any treaty with Germany in so far as consistent with the peace treaty by giving notice within six months. Treaties entered into by Germany since August 1, 1914, with other enemy States, and before or since that date with Roumania, Russia, and Governments representing parts of Russia, are abrogated, and concessions granted under pressure by Russia to German subjects annulled. The allied and associated States are to enjoy most-favored-nation treatment under treaties entered into by Germany and other enemy States before August 1, 1914, and under treaties entered into by Germany and neutral States during the war.

PREWAR DEBTS.

A system of clearing houses is to be created within three months, one in Germany and one in each allied and associated State which adopts the plan, for the payment of prewar debts, including those arising from contracts suspended by the war; for the adjustment of the proceeds of the liquidation of enemy property, and the settlement of other obligations. Each participating State assumes responsibility for the payment of all debts owing by its nationals to nationals of the enemy States except in cases of prewar insolvency of the debtor. The proceeds of the sale of private enemy property in each participating State may be used to pay the debts owed to the nationals of that State, direct payment from debtor to creditor, and all communications relating thereto being prohibited. Disputes may be settled by arbitration, by the courts of the debtor country, or by the mixed arbitral tribunal. Any allied or associated power may, however, decline to participate in this system by giving Germany six months' notice.

ENEMY PROPERTY.

Germany shall restore or pay for all private enemy property seized or damaged by her, the amount of damages to be fixed by the mixed arbitral tribunal. The allied and associated States may liquidate German private property within their territories as compensation for property of their nationals not restored or paid for by Germany, for debts owed to their nationals by German nationals, and for other claims against Germany. Germany is to compensate its nationals for such losses, and to deliver within six months all documents relating to property held by its nationals in allied and associated States. All war legislation as to enemy property, rights, and interests is confirmed, and all claims by Germany against the allied or associated Governments for acts under exceptional war measures abandoned.

CONTRACTS.

Prewar contracts between allied and associated nationals, excepting the United States, Japan, and Brazil, and German nationals, are canceled, except for debts for acts already performed, agreements for the transfer of property where the property had already passed, leases of land and houses, contracts of mortgage, pledge or lien, mining concessions, contracts with Governments, and insurance contracts. Mixed arbitral tribunals shall be established of three members, one chosen by Germany, one by the associated State, and the third by agreement, or, failing which, by the present President of Switzerland. They shall have jurisdiction over all disputes as to contracts concluded before the present peace treaty.

Fire insurance contracts are not considered dissolved by the war, even if premiums have not been paid, but lapse at the date of the first annual premium falling due three months after the peace. Life insurance contracts may be restored by payments of accumulated premiums with interest, sums falling due on such contracts during the war to be recoverable with interest. Marine insurance contracts are dissolved by the outbreak of war, except where the risk insured against had already been incurred. Where the risk had not attached, premiums paid are recoverable; otherwise premiums due and sums due on losses are recoverable. Reinsurance treaties are abrogated unless invasion has made it impossible for the reinsured to find another reinsurer. Any allied or associated power, however, may cancel all the contracts running between its nationals and a German life insurance company, the latter being obligated to hand over the proportion of its assets attributal to such policies.

INDUSTRIAL PROPERTY.

Property rights as to industrial, literary, and artistic property are reestablished, the special war measures of the allied and associated powers are ratified; and the right reserved to impose conditions on the use of German patents and copyrights when in the public interest. Except as between the United States and Germany, prewar licenses and rights to sue for infringements committed during the war are canceled.

OPIUM.

The contracting powers agree, whether or not they have signed and ratified the opium convention of January 23, 1912, or signed the special protocol opened at The Hague in accordance with resolutions adopted by the third opium conference in 1914, to bring the said convention into force by enacting within 12 months of the peace the necessary legislation.

RELIGIOUS MISSIONS.

The allied and associated powers agree that the properties of religious missions in territories belonging or ceded to them shall continue in their work under the control of the powers, Germany renouncing all claims in their behalf.

SECTION XI.—AERIAL NAVIGATION.

Aircraft of the allied and associated powers shall have full liberty of passage and landing over and in German territory, equal treatment with German planes as to use of German airdomes, and with most-favored-nation planes as to internal commercial traffic in Germany. Germany agrees to accept allied certificates of nationality, airworthiness or competency, and licenses, and to apply the convention relative to aerial navigation concluded between the Allies and associated powers to her own aircraft over her own territory. These conditions apply until 1923, unless Germany has since been admitted to the league of nations or to the above convention.

SECTION XII.—FREEDOM OF TRANSIT.

Germany must grant freedom of transit through her territories by rail or water to persons, goods, ships, carriages, and mails from or to any of the allied or associated powers, without customs or transit duties, undue delays, restrictions, or discriminations based on nationality, means of transport, or place of entry or departure. Goods in transit shall be assured all possible speed of journey, especially perishable goods. Germany may not divert traffic from its normal course in favor of her own transport routes or maintain "control stations" in connection with transmigration traffic. She may not establish any taxes discriminating against the ports of allied or associated powers; must grant the latter's seaports all favors and reduced tariffs granted her own or other nationals, and afford the allied and associated powers equal rights with those of her own nationals in her ports and waterways, save that she is free to open or close her maritime coasting trade.

FREE ZONES IN PORT.

Free zones existing in German ports on August 1, 1914, must be maintained with due facilities as to warehouses, packing, and unpacking, without discrimination, and without charges except for expenses of administration and use. Goods leaving the free zones for consumption in Germany and goods brought into the free zones from Germany shall be subject to the ordinary import and export taxes.

The Elbe from the junction of the Vltava, the Vltava from Prague, the Oder from Oppa, the Nieman from Grodno, and the Danube from Ulm are declared international, together with their connections. The riparian States must insure good conditions of navigation within their territories unless a special organization exists therefor. Otherwise appeal may be had to a special tribunal of the league of nations, which also may arrange for a general international waterways convention.

INTERNATIONAL RIVERS.

The Elbe and the Oder are to be placed under international commissions to meet within three months, that for the Elbe composed of four representatives of Germany, two from Tchecho-Slovakia, and one each from Great Britain, France, Italy, and Belgium; and that for the Oder composed of one each from Poland, Prussia, Tchecho-Slovakia, Great Britain, France, Denmark, and Sweden. If any riparian State on the Niemen should so request of the league of nations, a similar commission shall be established there. These commissions shall upon request of any riparian State meet within three months to revise existing international agreements.

THE DANUBE.

The European Danube Commission reassumes its prewar powers, but for the time being with representatives of only Great Britain, France, Italy, and Roumania. The Upper Danube is to be administered by a new international commission until a definitive statute be drawn up at a conference of the powers nominated by the allied and associated Governments within one year after the peace. The enemy Governments shall make full reparations for all war damages caused to the European commission; shall cede their river facilities in surrendered territory, and give Tchecho-Slovakia, Serbia, and Roumania any rights necessary on their shores for carrying out improvements in navigation.

THE RHINE AND THE MOSELLE.

The Rhine is placed under the central commission, to meet at Strasbourg within six months after the peace, and to be composed of four representatives of France, which shall, in addition, select the president, four of Germany, and two each of Great Britain, Italy, Belgium, Switzerland, and the Netherlands. Germany must give France on the course of the Rhine included between the two extreme points of her frontiers all rights to take water to feed canals, while herself agreeing not to make canals on the right bank opposite France. She must also hand over to France all her drafts and designs for this part of the river. Belgium is to be permitted to build a deep draft Rhine-Meuse canal if she so desires within 25 years, in which case Germany must construct the part within her territory on plans drawn by Belgium. Similarly the interested allied Governments may construct a Rhine-Danube canal, both, if constructed, to come under the competent international commission. Germany may not object if the central Rhine commission desires to extend its jurisdiction over the Lower Moselle, the Upper Rhine, or lateral canals.

Germany must cede to the allied and associated Governments certain tugs, vessels, and facilities for navigation on all these rivers, the specific details to be established by an arbiter named by the United States. Decision will be based on the legitimate needs of the parties concerned. and on the shipping traffic during the five years before the war. The value will be included in the regular reparation account. In the case of the Rhine shares in the German navigation companies and property, such as wharves and warehouses held by Germany in Rotterdam at the outbreak of the war, must be handed over.

RAILWAYS.

Germany, in addition to most-favored-nation treatment on her railways, agrees to cooperate in the establishment of through-ticket services for passengers and baggage; to insure communication by rail between the allied, associated, and other States; to allow the construction or improvement within 25 years of such lines as necessary; and to conform her rolling stock to enable its incorporation in trains of the allied or associated powers. She also agrees to accept the denunciation of the St. Gothard convention if Switzerland and Italy so request, and temporarily to execute instructions as to the transport of troops and supplies and the establishment of postal and telegraphic service, as provided.

TCHECHO-SLOVAKIA.

To assure Tchecho-Slovakia access to the sea, special rights are given her, both north and south. Toward the Adriatic, she is permitted to run her own through trains to Fiume and Trieste. To the north, Germany is to lease her for 99 years spaces in Hamburg and Stettin, the details to be worked out by a commission of three representing Tchecho-Slovakia, Germany, and Great Britain.

THE KIEL CANAL.

The Kiel Canal is to remain free and open to war and merchant ships of all nations at peace with Germany. Subjects, goods, and ships of all States are to be treated on terms of absolute equality, and no taxes to be imposed beyond those necessary for upkeep and improvement, for which Germany is to be responsible. In case of violation of or disagreement as to these provisions, any State may appeal to the league of nations, and may demand the appointment of an international commission. For preliminary hearing of complaints, Germany shall establish a local authority at Kiel.

SECTION XIII.—INTERNATIONAL LABOR ORGANIZATION.

Members of the league of nations agree to establish a permanent organization to promote international adjustment of labor conditions, to consist of an annual international labor conference and an international labor office.

The former is composed of four representatives of each State, two from the Government and one each from the employers and the employed; each of them may vote individually. It will be a deliberative legislation body, its measures taking the form of draft conventions or recommendations for legislation, which, if passed by two-thirds vote, must be submitted to the law-making authority in every State participating. Each Government may either enact the terms into law; approve the principle but modify them to local needs; leave the actual legislation in case of a federal State to local legislatures; or reject the convention altogether without further obligation.

The international labor office is established at the seat of the league of nations as part of its organization. It is to collect and distribute information on labor throughout the world and prepare agenda for the conference. It will publish a periodical in French and English, and possibly in other languages. Each State agrees to make to it for presentation to the conference an annual report of measures taken to execute accepted conventions. The governing body is its executive. It consists of 24 members, 12 representing the Governments, 6 the employers, and 6 the employees, to serve for three years.

On complaint that any Government has failed to carry out a convention to which it is a party, the governing body may make inquiries directly to that Government, and in case the reply is unsatisfactory, may publish the complaint with comment. A complaint by one Government against another may be referred by the governing body to a commission of inquiry nominated by the secretary general of the league. If the commission's report fails to bring satisfactory action, the matter may be taken to a permanent court of international justice for final decision. The chief reliance for securing enforcement of the law will be publicity, with a possibility of economic action in the background.

The first meeting of the conference will take place in October, 1919, at Washington, to discuss the 8-hour day or 48-hour week; prevention of unemployment; extension and application of the international conventions adopted at Berne in 1906 prohibiting night work for women, and the use of white phosphorus in the manufacture of matches; and employment of women and children at night or in unhealthy work, of women before and after childbirth, including maternity benefit, and of children as regards minimum age.

LABOR CLAUSES.

Nine principles of labor conditions are recognized, on the ground that "the well-being, physical, and moral, of the industrial wage earners is of supreme international importance." With exceptions necessitated by differences of climate, habits, and economic development, they include: The guiding principle that labor should not be regarded merely as a commodity or article of commerce; right of association of employers and employees; a wage adequate to maintain a reasonable standard of life; the 8-hour day or 48-hour week; a weekly rest of at least 24 hours, which should include Sunday wherever practicable; abolition of child labor and assurance of the continuation of the education and proper physical development of children; equal pay for equal work as between men and women; equitable treatment of all workers, including foreigners; and a system of inspection, in which women should take part.

SECTION XIV.—GUARANTEES.

WESTERN EUROPE.

As a guarantee for the execution of the treaty, German territory to the west of the Rhine, together with the bridgeheads, will be occupied by allied and associated troops for 15 years. If the conditions are faithfully carried out by Germany, certain districts, including the bridgehead of Cologne, will be evacuated at the expiration of five years; certain other districts, including the bridgehead of Coblentz, and the territories nearest the Belgian frontier, will be evacuated after 10 years, and the remainder, including the bridgehead of Mainz, will be evacuated after 15 years. In case the interallied reparation commission finds that Germany has failed to observe the whole or part of her obligations, either during the occupation or after the 15 years have expired, the whole or part of the areas specified will be reoccupied immediately. If before the expiration of the 15 years Germany complies with all the treaty undertakings, the occupying forces will be withdrawn immediately.

EASTERN EUROPE.

All German troops at present in territories to the east of the new frontier shall return as soon as the allied and associated Governments deem wise. They are to abstain from all requisitions, and are in no way to interfere with measures for national defense taken by the Governments concerned.

All questions regarding occupation not provided for by the treaty will be regulated by a subsequent convention or conventions which will have similar force and effect.

SECTION XV.—MISCELLANEOUS.

Germany agrees to recognize the full validity of the treaties of peace and additional conventions to be concluded by the allied and associated powers with the powers allied with Germany, to agree to the decisions to be taken as to the territories of Austria-Hungary, Bulgaria, and Turkey, and to recognize the new States in the frontiers to be fixed for them.

Germany agrees not to put forward any pecuniary claims against any allied or associated power signing the present treaty based on events previous to the coming into force of the treaty.

Germany accepts all decrees as to German ships and goods made by any allied or associated prize court. The allies reserve the right to examine all decisions of German prize courts.

The present treaty, of which the French and English texts are both authentic, shall be ratified and the dispositions of ratification made in Paris as soon as possible. The treaty is to become effective in all respects for each power on the date of deposition of its ratification.

Naval Bill.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. HERBERT C. PELL, JR.,
OF NEW YORK,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Monday, June 16, 1919.

Mr. PELL. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me to be a very serious thing for us to make a cut in the naval estimates this year.

We may take Dewey's action at Manila to be the first serious fight of modern navies. There, you recollect, the American squadron annihilated the Spanish without losing a man. At Santiago our fleet completely destroyed Cervera's, and had only one man killed. At Tsu Shima Togo beat Rojestvensky almost without loss.

In this war the Germans finished an English squadron without suffering any harm themselves off Coronal; and these same Germans, in their turn, were shattered by Sturdee's fleet at the Falkland Islands. In every one of these battles the defeated side was completely annihilated and the victor suffered practically no loss at all. If there is one thing made more clear than another by this war, it is that the second best navy is about as good as the second best poker hand—a bad thing to bet on, and you are ruined if you are called.

Both in England and here magnificent armies have been raised from the people, but fleets can not be extemporized. In any war we must stand to win or lose with what we have in the beginning. The command of the sea means to-day, as it has always meant, the command of the world, and no nation will willingly give it up without a struggle. It is now England's, but if we start now we can take it, and keep it, and leave the dominance of the world to Americans of all future generations. It is a great opportunity, and one not lightly to be put aside.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. FELIX CORDOVA DAVILA, OF PORTO RICO,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Thursday, June 12, 1919.

Mr. DAVILA. Mr. Speaker, under the leave granted to me to extend my remarks in the RECORD I include a memorial addressed to me by the Chamber of Commerce of Porto Rico, dealing with the matter of the improvement of harbors in the island.

The memorial is as follows:

CAMARA INSULAR DE COMERCIO,
SECCION DE PONCE,
Ponce, P. R., May 26, 1919.

To the Hon. FELIX CORDOVA DAVILA,
Resident Commissioner of Porto Rico, Washington, D. C.

SIR: This branch of the insular chamber of commerce has resolved to raise this memorial and petition through you to Congress on behalf of the port of Ponce.

The port of Ponce, being the second in Porto Rico in commercial activities, has never undergone any improvements, exception being made of the municipal pier constructed five years ago.

We all recognize that the natural conditions of the port are not the best fitted for the protection of vessels, it being an open roadstead; but in spite of its unfavorable nature, it handles such an extensive volume of business and serves as a distributing center for such a large surrounding district and commands such an enviable position on the Caribbean Sea, looking to Panama, Venezuela, Colombia, Santo Domingo, Cuba, Jamaica, and the Lesser Antilles, that its future development and importance are of such a promise as to attract the attention of reflexive and enterprising men to the need of artificial betterments that would place this port on a proper level to fulfill its rôle in the interchange of commodities and in the facilities to navigation around this portion of the American Hemisphere.

Harbor conditions in Porto Rico are very similar to those in the Territory of Hawaii a few years ago, and it is convenient to refer you on this point to the official mission which went to those islands to study and report on the problem of harbors. Representative J. HAMPTON MOORE, of Pennsylvania, who recently visited us, was a member of the mission sent over to Hawaii, where they found that only one port was developed to a satisfactory degree, just as it is happening in Porto Rico that, outside of San Juan, there is no other harbor that seems worth the consideration of the Federal Government.

Furthermore, in relation to Federal assistance in Hawaiian harbors, we are pleased to cite the following from the report of the governor of those islands for 1915: "The United States engineering officer in Honolulu is in charge of the harbor work under the Federal Government. On the island of Ohau the redredging of the entrance channel to Honolulu Harbor was completed to project dimensions. * * * On the island of Maui the end of the breakwater at Kahului Harbor was injured during a storm and repaired. * * * On the island of Hawaii, at Hilo Harbor, no new work was done on the breakwater. The contractor has built a breakwater at Waipio, on the same island, installed his working plant, and is now in a position to commence work on the Hilo Breakwater." From which we infer that the Federal Government has rendered important improvements in several Hawaiian harbors, so that after the commission was sent over, it is not Honolulu the only harbor in which dredging and construction of breakwaters has been undertaken.

It would be of great value and serve as an initial impulse to have a survey made of the port of Ponce, and, thereupon, to report all available technical data, thus making of this survey the foundation for the proper action by Congress. It will be pertinent to remind you now of a survey taken of this port on or about 1906 by initiative of Mr. Alejandro Albizu, then a deputy collector in this port. In the report of which, submitted to the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors, by Maj. C. C. Flager, this engineer was of the opinion that the "harbor was not worthy of improvement by the United States under the present existing conditions."

Since then, circumstances have changed materially and variedly, as we will endeavor to demonstrate further on. The Panama Canal has been open to international commerce; naval bases have been established in Guantanamo, Cuba, and in all probabilities will be established on the Virgin Islands, acquired lately by the United States; commerce with Santo Domingo has grown largely, due to the American guaranty there, and to the hundreds of Porto Ricans that flock over to the sugar plantations and centrals in the sister Antille; the municipal pier has been built, but is insufficient to clear one-third of the tonnage exchanged through this port; crude petroleum tanks have been erected; and as soon as peace turns the situation normal there might be coal warehouses for bunkering steamers in this port.

Now, we are pleased to call your particular attention to the comparative information given below, so that you will be in a position to analyze and infer the changes effected since 1906, and to judge the legitimate right of this community to ask for harbor improvements in accordance with actual conditions and future prospects.

First, let us compare the exportations and importations through Ponce from 1906 to 1917:

Value of goods shipped to the United States.

Port.	1906	1907	1908	1909
San Juan	$7,193,140	$9,421,708	$11,296,141	$9,977,084
Ponce	4,645,451	4,858,548	5,448,681	5,469,143

Port.	1914	1915	1916	1917
San Juan	$2,077,351	$3,659,853	$1,694,921
Ponce	3,725,862	2,223,593	2,670,889	$2,597,800
Mayaguez	1,521,885	839,046	738,616
Guanica	11,502	5,205	6,611

Let us point out further that, should the conditions of the port of Ponce be bettered, there would be every chance to secure through it the shipment of all the sugar manufactured in the neighboring sugar estates, such as Central Rufina, Central San Francisco, Central Cortada, etc.

And such betterment of port conditions would lead also to the coming to Ponce for shipment of several products from other towns which are at present sent to San Juan at an increased cost.

On the other hand, improvements in the port of Ponce will be of great advantage for the American merchant marine, as it would afford safe protection against storms and similar sea risks. The same argument may be advanced as to what concern the American Navy.

Value of goods received from foreign countries.

Port.	1906	1907	1908	1909
San Juan	$1,488,358	$1,945,653	$1,807,141	$1,647,217

Mayaguez	383,527	236,784	232,318
Guanica	260,526	334,753	417,344

This gradual increase in the foreign importations through Guanica is due to the importation of sugar cane from Santo Domingo during the grinding season. It will not continue any longer as soon as the Central Romana is completed on the other island.

Value of the trade of Porto Rico with the United States and of Porto Rico with foreign countries.

	United States.		Foreign countries.
	Imports.	Exports.	Imports.	Exports.
1906	$19,224,881	$19,142,461	$2,602,784	$4,115,669
1907	25,686,285	22,070,133	3,580,887	4,926,167
1908	22,677,376	25,891,281	3,148,289	4,753,209
1909	23,681,854	26,394,312	2,925,781	3,996,913
1910	27,097,654	32,095,645	3,537,201	5,864,574
1911	34,671,958	34,765,409	4,115,039	5,182,958
1912	38,470,963	42,873,401	4,511,928	6,832,012
1913	33,155,005	40,538,625	3,745,057	8,564,942
1914	32,568,368	34,423,180	3,838,419	8,679,582
1915	30,929,831	42,311,920	2,554,465	7,044,987
1916	35,892,515	60,952,768	3,058,641	5,778,805
1917	49,539,249	73,115,224	4,005,524	7,855,693

From the above tables it will be seen that, on the average, Ponce handles 10 per cent of the value shipped to the United States, 40 per cent of the value exported to foreign countries, and about 30 per cent of the value imported from foreign countries. So a conclusion is easily drawn that the Ponce Harbor clears over 25 per cent of the commerce in Porto Rico, exception being made of importations from the mainland which are not accounted for by ports.

The chief foreign exportation of Ponce is coffee. In fact, the great war practically cut off our European markets for this bean, excepting to Spain.

Coffee exported from Porto Rico and Ponce, and proportion, from 1914 to 1917 (war period).

Year.	Porto Rico.		Ponce.		Per cent of value.
	Pounds.	Value.	Pounds.	Value.
1914-15	50,211,947	$8,193,500	16,370,200	$2,328,400	30
1915-16	51,125,620	7,082,790	15,702,700	2,550,500	33
1916-17	32,144,283	5,049,283	16,599,400	2,485,600	50
1917 (one-half year)	19,807,573	2,946,040	6,249,700	927,100	31

In normal times, previous to the war, Ponce exported not less than one-half of all the coffee in Porto Rico to Spain, Italy, France, Austria, Germany, and Cuba, as this harbor is the natural outlet for the coffee raised in the neighboring municipalities of Yauco, Coamo, Villalba, Juana Diaz, Adjuntas, Jayuya, Guayanilla, Barros, Barranquitas, and Penuelas.

In table below you will appreciate, as indicated in the headings, the region for which Ponce is the distributing market on the southern part of the island.

Municipality.	Real property.	Personal property.	Value of coffee acreage.	Population, 1910.
Ponce	$15,005,305	$4,712,622	$781,685	63,444
Yauco	2,808,055	470,867	600,095	31,504
Coamo	1,670,960	228,910	245,300	17,129
Villalba	769,116	94,384	219,046	29,157
Juana Diaz	3,974,233	312,500	179,125
Adjuntas	2,009,400	143,990	1,032,915	16,954
Guayanilla	1,812,840	227,025	231,355	10,354
Peñuelas	1,330,454	128,550	199,835	11,991
Jayuya	1,333,260	90,540	695,890	9,297
Barros	1,023,200	63,790	248,100	15,028
Barranquitas	622,530	44,720	45,780	10,503
Total	32,359,353	6,517,898	4,479,126	215,361

This population, 215,361, of course, is to-day over 245,000 inhabitants, which represents one-fifth of the entire population of the island of Porto Rico. The value of the coffee acreage is 32 per cent of the whole acreage dedicated to this cultivation, which totalizes 47,057 acres.

Sugar is another of the principal exports to be accredited to this port. Practically all shipments are to the mainland. A table follows:

Sugar shipped to the United States through Ponce.

Year.	Pounds.	Value.
1914-15	38,747,500	$1,792,600
1915-16	71,724,500	3,557,900
1916-17	61,859,600	3,342,200
1917 (one-half year)	11,132,400	736,600

Cigars come next in importance. The amounts shown in this table represent, more or less, 15 per cent of the total shipped by Porto Rico:

Cigars shipped to the United States through Ponce.

Year.	Milliards.	Value.
1914-15	13,821	$506,900
1915-16	12,563	410,700
1916-17	26,670	981,000

Oranges also are exported through Ponce, and during the year 1916-17, $233,000 worth of that fruit was shipped, which is about one-fourth of what the island shipped in that year.

As to tonnage movement in this harbor we had a yearly prewar average and a war average as follows:

Tonnage.

	Foreign.		Coastwise
	Entered.	Cleared.	Entered.	Cleared.
	Tons net.	Tons net.	Tons net.	Tons net.
Prewar	181,145	179,002	329,249	320,899
War	123,087	124,631	375,452	360,334

These averages are based upon the years 1911 to 1918, and do not include small sailing craft plying between ports of Porto Rico.

A table of customs receipts for a number of years will convey another idea of the comparative importance inherent to the port of Ponce:

Port.	1906	1907	1908	1909	1910	1911
San Juan	$503,467	$697,533	$645,940	$523,167	$579,457	$665,396
Ponce	209,867	396,805	271,530	248,246	291,646	344,340
Mayaguez	83,454	110,658	127,013	107,325	86,420	117,018
Guanica						20,480

Port.	1912	1913	1914	1915	1916
San Juan	$731,761	$652,375	$424,783	$263,487	$218,383
Ponce	353,579	303,040	220,525	111,441	102,829
Mayaguez	126,992	128,385	92,596	37,355	29,544
Guanica	30,680	22,413	37,787	44,800	53,259

The above proportions represent for Ponce 27 per cent of collections for the whole district, about 50 per cent of the receipts for San Juan, and three times as much as Mayaguez or Guanica.

To manipulate the volume of commerce implied in the above tables and statements Ponce has only 1 pier and some 50 lighters; the bay has no protection against rough weather; therefore, at first glance, anybody may appreciate that it is an obvious necessity to construct breakwaters and to dredge the port. These improvements would constitute extremely fair attraction and security to shipping, merchants, and nagivators, as well as it will make of the port of Ponce what it has a perfect right to be—the second harbor in the island and the first on the southern side.

It would be proper here to quote a paragraph from the pamplet entitled "Soil Survey from Arecibo to Ponce," by C. W. Dorsey and others, survey made in 1902: "Transportation facilities are limited within the area surveyed. Ponce and Arecibo possess harbors, or, rather, open roadsteads, where steamships call and receive cargoes of sugar, coffe, rum, and tobacco; but on account of the poor harbor facilities it is necessary for the large vessels to anchor offshore at both of these ports, and the cargoes are carried to the vessels in lighters."

If you consider the facts stated in this memorial in the light of justice and from a commercial angle, we do not doubt the least that the improvements for the Ponce Harbor will be made patent to your mind.

Therefore, resuming the aforesaid, we firmly and respectfully believe that prompt attention must be extended by the Federal Government to the Ponce Harbor with a view to construct breakwaters and to dredge the bay in so far as it will be in accordance with present conditions.

We remain, sir, with high consideration, your fellow citizens.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. ROYAL C. JOHNSON,

OF SOUTH DAKOTA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Wednesday, June 18, 1919.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, it is my intention to-day to call attention to some of the activities of the Bureau of Military Intelligence, which I do not believe will merit the approval of American citizens.

On June 12, last, former Sergt. Hugh Jeffries of the 23d Engineers, who was wounded and gassed in the Argonne battle, went to Camp Devens to see his comrades of the late war. Without notice and, as I believe, without authority of law, he was summarily arrested, searched, and his private papers were confiscated. If this can be done in a free country, to a free American citizen, who at the beginning of the war voluntarily left his wife and four children to fight in France with the American Army, it is apparent to me that there is an assumption of authority which we can not endure. I take no serious exception to the actions of the officers referred to, personally, because they were but carrying out orders, and working on the plan and along the lines that were adopted by the American Army in France. It is the system and not the individual to which I call attention. This happens to be the United States of America and not Europe; and we will permit of no assumption of authority in this country. I have no personal interest in connection with the episode. I am not a member of the organization of which Sergt. Jeffries is the president, although I agree with much of its platform; and I have not contributed nor can I contribute in any way to it; but I do take an interest in him as a citizen of the United States and as a returned soldier.

When the time comes that speeches delivered by Senator CHAMBERLAIN and myself on the floor of the House and Senate can be seized by the Bureau of Military Intelligence as inimical to the country's welfare, or the copy of a bill designed to reform the injustices of the court-martial procedure can be seized by that bureau without objection on my part, I shall be ready to surrender my American citizenship. We have a right in the United States to a free press and to free speech so long as that right is not used against organized Government and against the rules of civilized society. Those who can not abide by these rules should be deported from the country. If I had my way about it, I would deport or imprison every anarchist, every I. W. W., and every man who will not abide by the rules of society or advocates a change in them except by the use of the ballot. But procedure such as that to which I refer only fans the discontent of these insane, disloyal, or criminal agitators. May I suggest that the Bureau of Military Intelligence might reform itself from the inside.

Following is a letter I have received from Sergt. Jeffries relative to this matter:

JUNE 14, 1919.

Hon. ROYAL C. JOHNSON, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Having learned through a friend in Washington who has a son in the regiment, that the 23d Engineers, of which I was a member, had landed at Boston on June 9, and that they were to be dispersed from Camp Devens, I went up to meet them, arriving at Camp Devens on the morning of June 12. As they are Regular Army men, though all volunteers and enlisted only for the duration of the war, and from every State of the Union, there was no "Welcome home" for them. They just came home like so many cattle—units of human material, each unit carrying a number on an aluminum dog tag—and this is the last time this grand organization will ever be together, so I was very anxious to see them again.

I had been gassed in the Argonne, and when I left the company to go to the hospital I promised every man that if I got home before the company did I would come to Washington and do everything in my power to secure the release of John F. Hinkley, a man in our company who, having committed no crime except that of offending a brutal and cowardly commanding officer by asking for a pass to go to another detachment to see a friend from the same town in the States, had been sentenced to dishonorable discharge from the Army, forfeiture of all pay and allowances due and to become due, and confinement at hard labor for a period of three years at Fort Jay, N. Y. This man was a fine, big, patriotic, skilled worker, a volunteer, and he left a wife and five children in Kingston, N. Y., who were absolutely dependent on the allotment and allowance, amounting to $62.50 per month, which was canceled by this court-martial sentence. This happened in July of 1918, while we were on the Lorraine front in France, and Jack was still in a prison camp in France.

I came to Washington immediately after getting my discharge—April 4, 1919—and began work on this case. Then I went to my home at Danbury, Wis., to see my own wife and four children for the first time in 17 months, from whom I had not been able to hear a word in any way for more than six months previous to my landing at Philadelphia. After remaining at home for 10 days I returned to Washington to take up this case again, and had been very actively engaged on it up until a few days before the regiment came home.

After a series of heartbreaking delays and disappointments I secured a copy of the court-martial record, which shows, on the face of it, that an outrage had been perpetrated; but before the authorities would give me a copy, although I had secured an order from the Secretary of War for it, they considered the case in private, not giving me a chance to appear and represent this man, and ordered the unexecuted portion of the sentence remitted and that he be restored to duty, so that when I met the boys at Camp Devens Jack was there.

In France and then on this side I found a great many of the soldiers had had like experiences in their companies. At St. Aignan, France, where I was sent from the hospital early in January, there were thousands of soldiers, and among them were over 2,000 noncommissioned officers who had been selected from the ranks of the various divisions of the American Expeditionary Forces and placed in officers' training camps. At the signing of the armistice they were thrown out of the camps to avoid the danger of promotion which might crowd out some of the more fortunate ones who had been advanced through other means than sheer ability demonstrated on the field of battle. We had hundreds of discussions and conferences while waiting in the mud and filth there, and decided that to secure the reliefs and reforms to which we and the American people as a whole were entitled an organization was necessary, so we all agreed to stand behind the five purposes which are set forth in the pamphlet which I inclose, and to me came the honor of being selected by those incomparable men to carry out the initial work of promulgating this organization, which I have done to the best of my ability. The organization was legally perfected on June 11 in Washington, D. C., and I took with me some of these pamphlets when I went to meet my old outfit.

Before I had been at Camp Devens an hour I was quite rudely jerked up by a captain and a lieutenant while sitting talking to the members of my old company, Company L, and accused of spreading illegal propaganda. My personal effects were searched and I was questioned, very rudely, as to my past life and present intentions. The men all ganged around and vouched for me in no uncertain tone of voice, claiming me as their own, and this saved me from violence and from restraint for the time being. Later on in the day, just as I was about to say good-bye to the men—to many of them for the last time, perhaps—I was seized in a dramatic manner, calculated, I presume, to impress the soldiers, and whirled away in a car driven by a colonel, with other officers assisting.

They took me to an office in the camp. My portfolio and hand bag were taken from me and I was subjected to an inquiry lasting about two hours, the record being kept by a stenographer. The camp intelligence officer did most of the questioning, but the colonel took a hand quite frequently, and they seemed to be sure that they had caught a red-handed Bolshevik. Among my papers they found copies of speeches which you had made in Congress on the court-martial, with certain passages marked in lead pencil, also a CONGRESSIONAL RECORD with some of the speeches of Senator CHAMBERLAIN marked, and a copy of an address which Lieut. Col. Ansell delivered a short time ago at the commencement exercises in his old home town in North Carolina, and a copy of House bill 367, entitled "A bill to establish military justice," which was introduced by you, I believe; and this seemed to them to be convicting, prima facie, as it were, so they took from me this stuff and other personal papers, including an original signed and acknowledged copy of the articles of association of the American Military Reform Association, of which I am president. They asked me if I was not intelligent enough to know that such literature as this was demoralizing to soldiers and would tend to weaken the morale of the Army, incite to trouble, etc. I assured them that it was my belief that only the men who stood for these things could regain the confidence of the soldier, who had fought and won this war under such a terrible handicap, and who had almost lost confidence in humanity in general as a result of the injustices to which he has been subjected under this military tyranny. That it is these men, who are standing for these high principles in Congress, who give the soldier reason to believe that we will yet get the reform and the relief and the justice which we are going to require, through appropriate legislation and without violence or coercion being necessary. That it is very unsafe to make the soldiers who are returning from overseas now believe that they are not going to be allowed to exercise the right of free speech, the right of petition, the right of a free press, and the right to organize for high and honorable purposes, just because it may spell calamity for a comparative few who are now occupying high positions, who are the selfish and inefficient beneficiaries of this war, as against the great majority of the soldiers and their people who made a sacrifice—an investment—through their service to their country and their flag.

These officers gave me a receipt for the papers they took from me, and they promised that they would return them to me not later than the morning of June 14. This is the evening of June 14, and the papers have not been returned yet. I want them, and I also want a copy of the proceedings, as this will save me the necessity of ever writing an autobiography, for they made me reveal the innermost secrets of my life and account for all the time I have spent in and out of the Army.

I would take it as a great favor, sir, if you can assist me to secure a return of these papers, and the speeches in particular, as I had marked the passages which we want to feature in the first issue of our magazine, the American Sentry, which is due to appear soon.

Respectfully,

(Signed) HUGH JEFFRIES,
Formerly Sergeant, L Company, Twenty-third Engineers, American Expeditionary Forces.

Upon receipt of this letter I wrote the Secretary of War as follows:

On Thursday, June 12, former Sergt. Hugh Jeffries, of Company L, Twenty-third Engineers, went to Camp Devens to meet the men with whom he served in France. While there he took a few subscriptions for a magazine of which he intends to soon start the publication. While sitting in the barracks with members of his former company he was examined by a captain and a lieutenant, who questioned his authority for being there. They also searched a portfolio which he was carrying with him, and he was instructed to take no further subscriptions to his magazine. Later, at about 7 p. m., he was suddenly arrested by a colonel and a lieutenant, taken to the provost marshal's office, and subjected to a thorough examination in the presence of a stenographer, his testimony taken, and his effects thoroughly searched again.

Taken from Mr. Jeffries at the time were the following:

One copy Searchlight with contents, consisting of personal papers and manuscript.

Twelve copies of the American Military Reform Association. Articles of association of the American Military Reform Association.

Three receipt books.

One copy H. R. 367

Receipt for these articles was signed by Royal H. Place, first lieutenant, Infantry, Thirty-sixth Infantry, camp intelligence officer.

I respectfully request immediate return of the articles taken from Mr. Jeffries, which may be addressed to him at my office in the House Office Building, together with a copy of the transcript of the proceedings, which will be furnished the Military Intelligence Bureau at Washington, and the findings thereon.

Respectfully, yours,

(Signed) ROYAL C. JOHNSON.

In conclusion I wish to insert copy of the pamphlet referred to in Sergt. Jeffries's letter setting forth the purposes of the American Military Reform Association, to which apparently exception has been taken:

The American Military Reform Association, Washington, D. C.,
Hugh Jeffries, president.

The American Military Reform Association is the outgrowth of many conferences of soldiers and citizens in the United States and in the A. E. F. camps in France. It is primarily a citizens' organization, with certain well-defined purposes, and is in no way opposed to the American Legion, which is a soldiers' organization, nonpartisan and nonpolitical.

PURPOSE.

The object of this association shall be to secure, by appropriate National and State legislation, certain reforms in our military laws and policies which appear to be necessary and to be the inevitable outcome of the experience gained in the World War.

The policy of the association shall be at all times to discountenance any sentiment or action which is aimed in any way to attack, undermine, or discredit the Constitution of the United States, the established law of the land, or legally constituted authority. The association is opposed to the principles proposed by the Bolshevists, the I. W. W.'s, and any and all organized efforts wherein reform or revolution is sought to be brought about through violence or coercive measures, for the reason that it is recognized by this association that under the Constitution and the laws of the United States all reforms which are deemed necessary by the sovereign people can be brought about in an orderly, peaceable manner through the rights of free speech, the free press, petition, and exercise of suffrage, and that the present established machinery of government, if availed of, is fully sufficient for the carrying out of the will of the people in matters of reform which shall appear to them to be necessary from time to time.

The purpose of this association is to assist in every honorable and legitimate manner in the securing, through appropriate legislation and through cooperative effort and assistance, of the following reliefs and reforms:

1. Immediate and unconditional abolition of all forms of censorship of letters and publications.

2. Complete restoration of the rights of free speech and a free press, including the right to criticise the Government, the Army and the Navy, and officials, both civil and military.

3. An immediate reform of the court-martial system along the lines proposed and recommended in Senate bill No. 64 introduced by Senator CHAMBERLAIN, and House bill No. 367 by Representative JOHNSON, of South Dakota, in the first session of the Sixty-sixth Congress, in the interests of justice, humanity, and efficiency, as opposed to despotic, tyrannical personal authority and so-called expediency.

4. An immediate review of all courts-martial cases by an unprejudiced judicial tribunal, vested with full powers and jurisdiction, to the end that in so far as may now be possible justice may be done in all cases where sentences have been illegally imposed or appear to be of undue severity.

5. A change in our national military system wherein all despotic, autocratic, arbitrary authority now held by officers is entirely removed; wherein the line of demarcation in our Army which separates the enlisted men from the officers' personnel under the assumption that the enlisted man has neither honor, intelligence, nor ability, and that the officer is possessed of all these qualifications, but to a degree only commensurate with his rank, is entirely effaced, and wherein all to whom authority may be delegated shall be accountable for the proper exercise of that authority to those over whom the authority is exercised and to the sovereign people, instead of only to those of higher rank.

A system based on the good American principles of justice, humanity, and efficiency, which will, in so far as is humanly possible, make the most effective use of our man power and our material resources in our preparations for national defense and in case of war, and under which our Army, in times of peace, may be employed in the great work of national improvements such as construction and improvement of highways, railways, and waterways, and in the development of natural resources, with 100 per cent efficiency as the goal.

A system wherein promotions come only as a reward of real merit and wherein the enlisted man is guaranteed an honest opportunity to gain advancement through ability and application, up to the highest rank in the Army, based on the sound principles and practices which have been developed and proven out in the development of the great business and industrial organizations of the United States.

A system wherein the pay of officers and enlisted men shall approximate the pay of men of like ability employed in similar work in our civil life; wherein the requirements as to application and production shall equal or excel those of our business and industrial institutions, and wherein the opportunity for individual initiative and progress shall receive the fullest consideration.

An honest, four-square, democratic, American-made military system in place of the old, despotic, inefficient, unjust, wasteful, caste-breeding system which has come down to us from the old-time military establishments of England and Germany, and which is unnecessary and wholly unbearable to a liberty-loving, brave, and intelligent people.

MEMBERSHIP.

Membership in the association is open to all citizens and residents of the United States or its dependencies who believe in its purposes and on the following terms, payable in advance, by personal check, draft, money order, or currency:

Annual membership, $1 annually.
Sentry membership, $2 annually.
Contributing membership, $5 annually.
Sustaining membership, $10 annually.
Life membership, $50, one payment.
Patron membership, $100, one payment.

NOTE.—All memberships except the $1 annual membership include a year's subscription to the American Sentry.

Send in your name and address and fee for the class of membership you desire. Ask for information as to the forming of local chapters. Organizers wanted in every locality to further the purposes of the association. An attractive proposition will be offered those who wish to help.

The American Sentry, to be published semimonthly by the association, will carry a great deal of very interesting reading material prepared by some of the best writers in the world, and it will also afford the soldiers of the American Expeditionary Forces a chance to tell the truth about their Army Experiences in this country and in France and Germany.

Address:

THE AMERICAN MILITARY REFORM ASSOCIATION,
HUGH JEFFRIES, President, Washington, D. C.

Army Appropriation Bill.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. THOMAS S. WILLIAMS,

OF ILLINOIS,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Thursday, June 12, 1919.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, on Tuesday we passed the railroad appropriation bill giving the sum of $750,000,000 to the Railroad Administration for the operation of the railroads. The Secretary of the Treasury said that $1,200,000,000 would be required and asked Congress to appropriate that amount. After careful consideration of the request of the Secretary of the Treasury the Committee on Appropriations decided that $750,000,000 would be sufficient, and the House supported the committee in its recommendation, thus saving to the Treasury and to the taxpayers the sum of $450,000,000 on the one item of operating expenses of the railroads.

Now comes the annual appropriation bill for the support of the Military Establishment for the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1919, and ending June 30, 1920. The War Department submitted estimates asking for $1,117,289,488.50. This amount would support an average army of 509,909 enlisted men and 28,140 officers. This was the sum carried in the bill reported to the House last February and which failed of passage in the Senate in the closing days of the last session. The present bill as amended provides for an average army for the coming year of 300,000 men and 16,000 officers, and carries an appropriation of $718,654,591, being a saving over the amount requested by the Secretary of War of $398,634,897.50. This added to the amount saved by the reduced appropriation to the Railroad Administration makes a total of $848,634,897.50. I submit this is a good start on the program of economy and retrenchment in the expenditures of the public funds promised the American people by the Republican majority of this House. The saving of a billion dollars in these two appropriation bills vindicates the wisdom of the people in electing a Republican Congress last fall and abundantly justifies the so-called "filibuster" in the closing days of the last Congress that prevented the passage of these and other supply bills and compelled the President, much against his will, to call the new Congress in extra session.

While the War Department urgently requested a larger sum than is carried in the present bill I have no doubt it is amply sufficient in every way to meet the legitimate requirements of the Army for the coming fiscal year. It is a much larger amount than would have been necessary if the War Department had demobilized the Army as promptly as it could have done and as promptly as the American people desired after the signing of the armistice on November 11, 1918. There is no reason why our Army should not have been reduced to a peace basis by the middle of July.

When the armistice was signed everyone knew the war was over so far as America was concerned. The enemy had surrendered unconditionally and lay broken and prostrate, unable to renew the struggle. Our soldiers had been called to the colors to fight the war to a victorious conclusion, and when that purpose was accomplished they were entitled to be discharged and returned to their homes just as rapidly as it was physically possible to release them. That was not done.

When the armistice came there were 1,700,000 soldiers in the training camps in the country. It was known that they would not be sent overseas. They were not needed in the Army on this side. These men should have been released just as fast as their discharges could be written out and sent home as fast as the trains could carry them. The Government had no further use for them as soldiers and they were entitled to immediate discharge. But this was not done. For months it was almost impossible to get these boys out of the camps. Members of Congress were deluged with letters and telegrams from the parents and relatives of soldiers asking why they could not be discharged and demanding an explanation why it was that after the war was over and the Government had no further need of them in the Army they were being held when they were so badly needed at home.

Members of Congress were not able to give any satisfactory answer to these questions from anxious fathers and mothers—none could be given. More than a million of these boys were held in camps month after month following the armistice at a cost of hundreds of millions of dollars to the Government. This money should have been saved. A speedy demobilization of the troops in home camps at the conclusion of the war would have saved the Government many times the amount required to support the Army the coming year on a peace basis. The refusal of the War Department to release these soldiers was not only an act of rank injustice to the soldiers and their families but it was also a most unjustifiable and unnecessary waste of the people's money.

We had overseas at the close of the war about 2,000,000 men. They were entitled to be returned home at the earliest possible moment. It has not been done. On May 1 we still had in Europe 1,200,000 of these soldiers, over one-half of the total number there at the time of the armistice. This number has been reduced to about 700,000 at the present time.

Why have they been kept there all these months? We were able to send them over at the rate of 300,000 per month when the war closed. Could they not have been returned at the same rate? We sent them over amidst the greatest dangers and difficulties, through seas infested with submarines and floating mines. Could they not be returned as rapidly in times of peace, when the deadly submarine menace had been removed and danger no longer lurked in the highways of the sea? It can not be said this delay was caused because of the lack of shipping, because more ships are now available than when we were sending them over, and the tremendous tonnage then necessary to send over munitions and war supplies is no longer required. To say they have been returned home as rapidly as possible is to confess that our great Government can transport its soldiers away from home overseas, when death lurks on every hand, to foreign battle fields to die in battle more speedily than it can return them to their homes in times of peace. We will not make this confession, because it is not true. They have not been sent home as speedily as possible or as they should have been.

Why were they unnecessarily detained there? I know it is not the wish of Congress nor of the American people that our soldiers should be held for a single day to police any of the occupied territory of Europe. As was said the other day by the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN], we have no tangible interests in Europe that require the presence of our troops there.

I hope our good President, before he comes home again, will perfect arrangements for the early return of every American soldier now in Europe. I hope if he does not do this that Congress will without delay find some way to see that it is done.

We have about 225,000 troops in occupied portions of Germany. They should be immediately taken out of there and brought home. Why are they held there? We have exacted no indemnity from Germany that requires the use of our troops to collect. If standing armies are required in Europe to maintain the new boundary lines now being established between nations or to collect indemnities levied against defeated nations, let those who are interested and who are profiting thereby furnish the soldiers required and pay the expenses necessary to such undertakings. We all know that England, France, Italy, and Japan emerge from this war with large territorial gains. They have each enormously extended their possessions and brought millions of people under their flags who before the war lived under other sovereigntics. They are the nations benefited by maintaining the integrity of the new map of the world. We come out of the war without indemnities or increased possessions and should not be called upon to furnish either men or money to safeguard the gains of other nations.

American soldiers should not be used to police any part of the world or to build up any of the devastated portions of countries engaged in the recent war. That was no part of the duties for which they were called to the colors and should not be made their duty now.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. THOMAS M. BELL,
OF GEORGIA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Wednesday, June 18, 1919.

Mr. BELL. Mr. Speaker, I take pleasure in registering my approval of the immediate repeal of the so-called daylight-saving act. This act is supposed to have been a "war measure," and, if so, now that the war is over, it evidently has served its purpose. If any of the people of this great country have been benefited by this law, they are the people living in the great cities; and I am willing to grant this as being true; yet, at the same time, it has been a great inconvenience to the millions of farming people, upon whom we all depend.

It is urged, and it is true, that we now need more producers if the high cost of living is to be reduced, and we should make the hours of labor as pleasant, convenient, and attractive as possible for the great mass of people who are now relied upon for so much. I am, therefore, ready to vote for the repeal in toto of this law. I am sure that a large majority if not the whole people of my district desire its repeal.

It is true that no law of this character could be enacted that would meet the convenience of everyone, but if we are called upon to legislate at all in this way it is our duty to consider the convenience of those who are most needed in bringing back to this country normal times, so that we may as much as possible be relieved of many annoyances which follow the wake of war.

Our President, Commander in Chief of our forces engaged in the European war, favored this daylight-saving law during the war activities, feeling and believing that coal, food, and fuel would thereby be saved and that "war gardens" would be made which otherwise would not be, but the President no doubt now realizes, as we do, that there is no longer any reason for the continuance of this measure.

The debate upon the floor to-day for and against the repeal of this law calls to my mind a colloquy that occurred in my district between two negroes who felt they were equal to any emergency as representatives of their race. One said, in the discussion of the greatest men, living or dead, that Joshua was the greatest man who ever lived. The other, in response to this statement, asked: "Why do you say that Joshua was the greatest man who ever lived," He said, "'Cause Joshua stopped the sun for one hour so he could fight a battle." The other said, "I agree that Joshua did stop the sun for one hour so that he might have daytime in order to fight a battle and that Joshua was a very great man, but, in my humble judgment, he was not the greatest man who ever lived, but that Woodrow Wilson is the greatest man living or dead." The first speaker said, "Why do you say that Woodrow Wilson is the greatest man?" "'Cause Woodrow Wilson ran the sun up one hour, licked the devil out of the Germans, and there's where he skint Joshua."

Mr. Speaker, we did lick the Germans, and now that the war is over let us get back to the normal time and put the sun back where Joshua left it. Let us not only get back to normal times so far as daylight saving is concerned, but we should employ every intelligent method by which we may reduce the high cost of living, reduce the taxes as much as possible which have been imposed upon the people, allow the farmer a price for his products commensurate with that which he has to buy, encourage by wholesome legislation the soldier boys who have and will return from the battle fields of Europe to go back to their homes satisfied with the great work they have accomplished, where they can live happily with their fathers and mothers and wives, and feel that their Government is the greatest on the earth, and that much depends upon them as individuals and citizens to bring about normal conditions, progress, and development in the land we love so well.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. C. BASCOM SLEMP,

OF VIRGINIA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Wednesday, June 18, 1919.

Mr. SLEMP. Mr. Speaker, the daylight-saving law is before the House for consideration and I desire to express my own attitude concerning it. So far as I am personally concerned, and having regard only to my personal habits, the daylight-saving law has operated most satisfactorily. I feel that in some way or other I have had one more hour's time at my disposal than hitherto and I have accomplished that much more on account of it. But, Mr. Speaker, when I learned that the subject of the repeal of this legislation would be brought before Congress, I wired to prominent men in various counties in the district I have the honor to represent and I am convinced that the majority of the people of the district favor the repeal of this law.

While a Member of Congress desires to act in accordance with the wishes of his constituents on all subjects of legislation, yet a matter of this kind, which is really personal to every individual, offers an especial appeal to a Member to vote as his district wants. The gentlemen whom I consulted are men in whose judgment I have every confidence. Some are farmers, one is a member of a labor union, two are manufacturers, three are coal operators, one a lumber operator, one an honored judge on the bench, one a popular clerk of the county court, another a lawyer, and others of general activities. Some are pleased with the law, others, and I think undoubtedly the majority, favor its repeal, and I therefore ask to be recorded in favor of a repeal of the law.

I submit my own telegram and the answers thereto, omitting names:

Telegram I sent, as follows:

Bill to repeal daylight-saving law will be up Monday. Please advise me how this law has operated generally with the people.

Member of Congress, Washington, D. C.:

Ninth district practically all on eastern time and normally 25 to 30 minutes ahead of sun. Daylight-saving law shuts district 1 hour and 30 minutes ahead of sun Hours worked in practically all industries have been reduced recently from 10 to 8. Daylight saving causes work to commence too early and leaves too much daylight after work stops. Would therefore favor its repeal.

MY DEAR SIR: Your telegram received this morning. Personally I like the daylight-saving plan, and I think the professional and business men about the towns do. But I find the farmers, and especially those who work on the farms, are practically unanimous against it, many of them refusing even to put their clocks forward. Among laboring men there seems to be division, many liking it because of the extra time they get after hours, while many others, especially those living some distance from their work, oppose it.

I believe, however, on the whole, that a majority of the people in our county, and probably in all our counties, would be in favor of repeal of the law.

DEAR BASCOM: Replying to your letter of recent date, I beg to say that I am not very well acquainted with the sentiment of any people other than that of the farming classes of this county. They are almost unanimously in favor of the repeal of the present so-called daylight-saving law. I do not believe that anyone in this county has paid any attention to it. I note in to-day's paper that the Senate is having some fun over the league of nations treaty. Hoping that you are well and happy, I am,

DEAR BASCOM: The daylight-saving law is a fraud, so far as farmers concerned. Don't get men to work any earlier; but they all insist on quitting on the fast time. Think it should be abolished.

Very truly,

R. W. DICKENSON.

The Navy in the War.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. ISAAC SIEGEL,
NEW YORK,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Wednesday, June 18, 1919.

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Speaker, when the naval appropriation bill was being considered in the House it was realized by all the Members that it was urgent to pass it without lengthy discussion in order that it might become a law before July 1.

For a long time credit was only given to the Army for the great service it had rendered in the recent conflict. Many who should have known better failed to grasp the wonderful and extraordinarily brilliant achievements of the Navy in carrying over to the other side the millions of our boys in khaki without the loss of as many men as some thought would be the case. We lost practically no men when our own boys in blue were acting as escort. Our losses took place when we left the matter of protection to the naval ships of one of our Allies.

No braver set of men ever lived or gave to a people greater service than those brave young firemen and engineers who served upon the large transports such as the Leviathan and Northern Pacific. They knew when they were way down in the bottom of these ships that if a torpedo ever struck the engine room that they could never hope to even have the slightest chance or opportunity to fight for their lives. Yet they asked no questions and constantly kept at the assigned task, fearing no danger and prepared to meet their Maker at any time.

Without disparaging in the slightest degree the great service rendered by the Army, let us at all times bear in mind that the Navy did its full share to help win the war.

We also seem to forget that there has been practically no complaint of any kind or description of the medical and surgical treatment accorded to the men who served in the Navy. For the uniform courteous care and treatment given to them great credit is due to Dr. Braisted, the Surgeon General of the Navy, and his valued assistant, Dr. Lane.

The report of that indefatigable worker and surgeon, Commander William Seaman Bainbridge, of New York, published under the direction of Admiral Braisted, contains a full, thorough, and accurate description of the surgical achievements accomplished during the war. This report has been widely commented upon by laymen and has received the most favorable criticism on the part of the men of the medical and surgical professions.

The country owes a debt of gratitude to these eminent surgeons in the naval service, who day in and day out, week in and week out, month in and month out have given the best that was in them to their coworkers wearing the blue.

It is only the men in the service who have received this care who know how well it has been performed. They have told their relatives and friends about it, and at last it is coming home to Members of Congress. It is fitting and proper that a few words of appreciation may be said in praise of the service of these men because the public at large has not had time to say it.

The newspapers have been filled with the constant criticism—and justly so—of the method of trials which have been had under the courts-martial system prevalent in the Army. The Navy has endeavored in every way to treat its men fairly when they have violated any of its rules or regulations. Practically no just criticism has been uttered by any persons in this country of any trial conducted by a naval court-martial.

The whole country has been elated over the wonderful success achieved by Lieut. Read in making his successful trip through the air to Europe, and it is looking forward with great confidence to a trip across the Pacific to be made by the naval aviators.

Let us therefore at all times recognize that the war was won by the Army, the Navy, and the Marine Corps. Let us give credit to all of the three services, and as the years roll by let us continue to give them that measure of praise which they have so gallantly and fairly won under the most trying circumstances when the Nation was in peril.

Let us at the same time never forget the service which was rendered by both the military and naval intelligence forces at a time when the Republic needed prompt and effective results.

Let us honor all of these men who served us at a time when they were needed most. We look to them with unabated assurance to sustain every governmental official in enforcing law and order all over America and at every time and place to preach the doctrine of real and true, undiluted Americanism.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. WILLIAM D. BOIES,
OF IOWA,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Wednesday, June 18, 1919.

Mr. BOIES. Mr. Speaker, it occurs to me that the matters considered and the things said or the position taken by any Member on this floor when this unnatural so-called daylight-saving law was enacted has no place in this debate upon the question of its repeal. Members should, and in all probability will, vote on the question of this law's repeal as they now feel and as they now understand is in the interest of the great majority of the American people.

The law has been a damage to the country, and of no practical benefit to anyone. It has been a nuisance to the best interests of the business of the country and the convenience of the people. It interferes with the orderly habits of men based upon the natural order of things as regulated by the rising and the setting of the sun. You will all remember that when it was declared by Congress that a state of war existed between this country and Germany that the cry—yes, more than a cry, a supplication—was made to the farmers to produce food, more and more food, not only for the people of this country and for the soldiers of the country but starving humanity the world over.

The farmers, their wives, and children answered this cry and loyally laid off their coats and devoted 16 hours of the 24 per day to the work of the farms all over the country. They did more; they loyally and patriotically observed the mandate of this Government that they should only use a certain amount of the food thus produced by them; that they should deny themselves and live frugally, that everything possible might flow in the direction of success for the American cause, and especially for the sustenance and welfare of the boys on the field of battle, far from home, in a strange land.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania says that the farmers of the country do not constitute more than 10 per cent of the people, and that he is representing the other 90 per cent. Why, the gentleman does not represent 25 per cent of the people if it were true that he represented everybody in this country, outside of the farmers, favorable to the retention of the law.

The cry now for the repeal of this law is almost universal, and the reason for its repeal is 100 per cent.

You gentlemen from New York City would starve to death in 12 months if the farmers of the country should lay an embargo against you. New York City was made possible by the farmers of this country, and its future is only possible because of the money that flows into its banks, directly and indirectly, from agriculture.

Remember that you must eat in order to live, and that the farmer furnishes the eats. You should rise up in you refinement and call him blessed.

The farmers of this country are entitled to exceptional consideration. They only came into their own within the past few years. Do your duty by them. They have nourished you all these years. Vote for the repeal of this objectionable law.

Gen. Pershing's Memorial Day Speech.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. CHAS. POPE CALDWELL,

OF NEW YORK,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Wednesday, June 18, 1919.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD I insert the following:

GEN. PERSHING'S MEMORIAL DAY SPEECH.

"Memorial Day this year has for us a peculiar significance. Our Nation has taken an important part in the greatest war of history. With tremendous expenditure of life and treasure an end has come to the terrible conflict which has wrung the world for four years. It was a war against forces of conquest that had violated every law of humanity. It was waged against militarism and despotism and their arbitrary extension to other lands.

"Thousands of brave men had fallen in defense of their firesides, till allied hope seemed all but lost. In righteousness our people rose and our Armies in ever-increasing numbers vigorously threw their strength with the Allies on the side of civilization. Reared in a land of freedom, these valiant men, but partially skilled in arms, came willing to give up their lives to the cause without desire for gain. By their energy and their devotion the tide of war was turned, invaded lands set free, and human liberty saved from destruction.

"The principles which our forefathers fought to establish the heroic dead who lie here fought to maintain, and their ideals have become our gift to the Old World. But beyond this our own people, through these sacrifices, have gained much, both as individuals and as a Nation. There is given us a more lofty conception of the grandeur of human liberty, and with it a distinct vision of a better world. To realize these fully the foundations of society must be laid deeper and the structure more firmly built.

"The times demand of us clearness in thought and firmness in action. The solidity of our national institutions must be the bulwark against insidious and destructive tendencies. The glory of our inheritance must remain the high command of our flag, the emblem of all that free men love and cherish. Strengthened by the test of war, and with an abiding faith in the Almighty, let us be steadfast in upholding the integrity of our traditions as a guide to future generations at home and as a beacon to all who are oppressed. It is especially given the soldier to know clearly the price of liberty. Those to whom America pays tribute here to-day came to us in the full vigor of their youth. They left their homes encouraged by loved ones who remained behind. As they went to battle they were uplifted with a holy inspiration. Realizing their mighty task and their obligations to their country, they fought with unparalleled stoicism and determination. We saw enthusiasm and confidence carry them on with irresistible force. We saw them at Cantigny, again at Chateau-Thierry, at St. Mihiel, and on this historic ground in the decisive battle of the war. We can again see them yonder moving forward; they steadily advance across shell-torn fields under withering fire. They cheer and gallantly charge the enemy's strong position. They put him to flight in the shock of arms. Onward, ever onward, they go during weary days and sleepless nights of continuous struggle, on to the final great victory.

"We weep to-day over their graves because they are our flesh and blood; but even in our sorrow we are proud that they so nobly died, and our hearts swell within us to think that we fought beside them. To the memory of these heroes this sacred plot is consecrated as a shrine where future generations of men who love liberty may come to do homage. It is not for us to proclaim what they did; their silence speaks more eloquently than words; but it is for us to uphold the conception of duty, honor, and country for which they fought and for which they died. It is for us, the living, to carry forward their purposes and make fruitful their sacrifice.

"And now, dear comrades, farewell. Here under the clear skies, on the green hillsides, and amid the glowing fields of France, in the quiet hush of peace, we leave you forever in God's keeping."

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. HENRY I. EMERSON,

OF OHIO,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Wednesday, June 18, 1919.

Mr. EMERSON. Mr. Speaker, under the consent given to extend remarks I desire to insert a letter that meets with my hearty approval. I wish that Congress would assert itself and do something to compel the return of the soldiers we now have in France. I have done all I could as an individual Member, but hope some action may be taken by reason of our united effort.

The letter is as follows:

EAST CLEVELAND, OHIO, June 13, 1919.

Mr. H. I. EMERSON, City.

DEAR SIR: You may feel satisfied that you have done your duty so far as the men in France are concerned, but I wish to tell you that in that case you are the only one who feels that way about it.

The petition which I presented to you asked for "information" as to when the men would return. If the Members of Congress are absolutely powerless to secure information or in any way influence the War Department, then, Mr. EMERSON, I should think the Members would resign and engage themselves in some useful occupation or profession.

They certainly should have been classed as "nonessential labor" under the draft law.

You speak of a congressional record. This, in my opinion, is something that doesn't mean anything.

In the meantime, while you are blaming the War Department, the War Department says it is up to Pershing, and I presume by the time you reached him it would be some one else. The men are still in France and actually not receiving enough to eat. If you think this is far-fetched, make inquiry among the returned men. Anyone sufficiently interested can secure the facts; and if Congress did what they are put in Washington for, it would be immediately taken care of.

Yours, very truly,

GREEK GORRELL.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. HENRY I. EMERSON,

OF OHIO,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Thursday, June 19, 1919.

Mr. EMERSON. Mr. Speaker, under leave granted me to revise and extend my remarks on an amendment I proposed to the naval appropriation bill I neglected to insert the inclosed letter, which I now desire to insert in the RECORD. It is a letter from the Collings, Taylor Co., of Cleveland, Ohio:

CLEVELAND, OHIO, June 10, 1919.

Hon. H. I. EMERSON, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: We have noticed in the daily papers from time to time certain statements regarding a proposed bill being presented to Congress relative to the labeling of textiles in order that the public will know just what the different textiles are composed of. We think this is a very good move, provided it is carried out in detail.

The only information we have been able to gather from the Wool Growers' Association is that they seem to discriminate against so-called shoddy, which is properly known as reworked wool; and, with this in mind, we wish to suggest that if anything is done along these lines that all ingredients should enter into the make-up of this bill and the labeling of the goods, as a good many other articles are used as substitutes for wools in the manufacture of so-called woolen goods. For instance, a certain per cent of hemp or sisal or wood fiber and silk or wood-fiber noils, silk noils, and, worst of all, some goods are constructed with a large percentage of cotton in same, which is the most detrimental of any fiber that enters into what are known as woolen goods. No doubt you can refer to the records of the Government, because during the war at first they started to make khaki clothing for the Army containing about 20 per cent of cotton; but after it was tried out it was found inadvisable to continue to make the goods and use 20 per cent of cotton, and it was discontinued just as soon as found unsatisfactory.

As we have stated before, the bill seems to be a discrimination against reworked wool, and statistics will show that it is impossible to get enough woolen goods to clothe the people of this country without introducing the so-called wastes and reworked wool. Therefore we appeal to you as Representative of a district where we have two of the finest mills in the country producing so-called reworked wool. We have no objection to a bill of this kind being put through, provided all ingredients are stated along with the so-called reworked wool; and we ask you, on behalf of this community, to see that our material is not discriminated against, and if a bill of this kind is put through we want to see fair play.

The most objectionable of all the fibers that go into so-called woolen goods is the cotton, and we ask you to see that cotton is included in this bill, provided it is passed.

Yours, very truly,

THE COLLINGS, TAYLOR CO.,
CHAS. TAYLOR.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. HENRY I. EMERSON,

OF OHIO,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Wednesday, June 18, 1919.

Mr. EMERSON. Mr. Speaker, under the consent given to extend remarks on the daylight-saving bill I desire to insert in the RECORD an article by Mr. A. R. Gillespie, of Cleveland, Ohio, who has done more to assist the Government during the war by way of suggestions than any man in the United States.

The matter referred to is as follows:

HISTORICAL DOCUMENT SUPPLEMENT OF "MY STRUGGLE FOR LIBERTY."

CLEVELAND, OHIO, May 17, 1919.

Hon. H. I. EMERSON, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: Kindly allow me to present to you a brief outline of my struggle for liberty, so that you can bring it before Congress in any way that you see fit. It is my intention of doing this without any injustice to any of the officials whom I communicated with during the World War and who were members of our Federal Government.

About 10 years ago I realized the necessity of bringing the ideals of social living upon a higher form of decency. Although I will admit that I have not kept pace with this thought and began a series of subjects by reading literature of the best selection, all fiction stories, I omitted to get concrete ideas.

In the last six years I have read more than 2,000 various periodicals and textbooks. During six years of my early working life, I worked as beliman in the hotels of Michigan and Ohio. In this occupation I made a specialty of listening to the best speakers that came to these hotels from time to time. It was the custom of most of the boys to indulge in drinking champagne and other drinks during these occasions, but this fad did not interfere with my plan of hearing the valuable talks that the speakers gave from time to time. These corridor sittings and archway listening posts eventually brought me sound and big ideas, although they are scattered somewhat.

I also made it part of my plan always when I had the opportunity to talk to old people, as their conversations proved a great asset to my life. After such an experience then came the World War with its many problems to solve. I had on several occasions wrote our Federal Government concerning different matters ever since I was 16 years of age, so it was an easy matter for me to adjust myself to the practicableness of offering suggestions to our Government, in behalf of the World War for liberty.

The following are most of the suggestions I made in behalf of the World War to our Federal Government, the United States of America:

Suggestion: "Gold medals," Miss Jeannette Rankin, Member of Congress, Washington, D. C. (Jan. 12, 1918):

"After observing the participants' activities in this war by the various Americans and how their accomplishments have given me the impression that something should be done to show the public just what part some of them have taken in this conflict, I propose at this time that this Government should issue gold medals."

Suggestion—"Four-minute telephone conversations," Hon. Woodrow Wilson, President United States of America, Washington, D. C. (Feb. 5, 1918):

"Some time ago I informed Dr. Harry A. Garfield of an idea that came to me regarding the conserving of the fuel by the means of limiting the telephone conversations to four minutes each, with the exception of governmental conversations. If you think this practical, I hope that you will urge Dr. Garfield to consider the idea. I advised him that this idea should be enforced throughout the United States, and that there were 10,000,000 telephones in the United States, and by limiting the telephone conversations to four minutes there would be a decrease of about 3 per cent in electricity and more than 51,000 tons of coal saved per year, allowing 1 ton a day for 100,000 telephones."

Suggestion—"Miniature airplane," Hon. N. D. Baker, Secretary of War, Washington, D. C. (Nov. 30, 1917):

"It would be self-guided, travel 100 miles per hour, stop at specific places, carry 20 or 30 pound bombs, self-destructive, would not be much over 10 feet in length, operate by gasoline, electricity, and steam. Would be used only when 50,000 were ready."

Suggestion—"Improved wage scale," Hon. Woodrow Wilson, President of the United States of America, Washington, D. C. (Dec. 17, 1917):

"After relating to your pending decision regarding the operation of the railroads by the United States of America, I thought it advisable to say something concerning the situation as I see it, in part.

"Mr. President, in my short employment by the New York Central lines I have come to the conclusion that there is a vast difference in the wage scale and the amount that the employees should actually receive in some departments. This spirit of low wages has a tendency to keep the man of high intelligence and education from entering the railroad service. There are too many men in the railroad service who have not had enough education, and, to my mind, the country receives low efficiency in transportation.

"I hope that these ideas of salaries and intelligence will benefit you in your investigation of the railroads."

Suggestion—"Carelessness in drafting men," Hon. N. D. Baker, Secretary of War, Washington, D. C. (Oct. 6, 1917):

"Mr. Baker, why I call your attention to this fact is that many young men give up their positions and business so as to comply with the Nation's call to arms and then are rejected at the national camps. As you can plainly see, that much time, money, and opportunities are lost through this carelessness."

Suggestion—"Use of discarded railway ties," Hon. William G. McAdoo, Director General of Railroads, Washington, D. C. (Jan. 3, 1918):

"A. R. Gillespie, East Ninety-seventh Street, Cleveland, Ohio, suggested to the Government the use of discarded railway ties to help the fuel situation."

"Saturday he received a letter from William G. McAdoo, Director General of Railroads, stating that his suggestion would be given consideration.

"'The railroads,' Gillespie wrote, 'condemn 80,000,000 ties annually They utilize 20,000,000 and destroy 60,000,000.'" (The Cleveland Press.)

Suggestion—"Bureau of Reconstruction," Hon. Woodrow Wilson, President of the United States of America, Washington, D. C. (Oct. 24, 1918):

"This reconstruction would be operated to increase the intelligence of the whole Nation from every viewpoint, and the complete requirements of energy, money, and time should be used in bringing this necessary issue to pass. I might say that we should go at this without a selfish thought. Some of the subjects that could be taught are nursing, medicine, dentistry, law, agriculture, teaching of general education, bookbinding, and the ideals of social life."

Suggestion—"Dining Car Diplomacy," Hon. William G. McAdoo, Director General of Railroads, Washington, D. C. (Oct. 24, 1918):

"From my observation, I consider it a necessity to improve the dining-car diplomacy among railway waiters of the United States of America Railroad Co., due to the fact that we are having foreign diplomats coming from the old country from time to time, and because of the need of pushing civilization to the front for greater efficiency. I realize that inspectors are on the lookout and instruct from time to time, but they are not 'up to snuff.' The thing to do is to get somebody that really understands etiquette and knows humanity. Now, I believe that women are the best adapted for this refined instructorship position."

Suggestion—"Hot Springs Mineral Water as a Health Builder for Soldiers," Hon. N. D. Baker, Secretary of War, Washington, D. C. (May 10, 1918):

"After considering many of the new thoughts that come to me from time to time, I have decided that the idea of Hot Springs mineral water would be a wonderful way in building the health of our young men up to a stage of high degree. The common visits of our most learned people to these springs is enough to state its value as a health builder."

Suggestion—"Why Germany Will Be for Peace and Submit to All Fair Proposals," Hon. Woodrow Wilson, President of the United States of America, Washington, D. C. (Oct. 26, 1918):

"4. The United States Government has entered the war with her population of 110,000,000 and an intelligent fresh Army.

"5. All of the past battles have been fought on the soil outlining the German territory. We, the Allies, are now nearing the German boundary line, and through this are causing the morale in Germany to be broken."

Suggestion—"Introducing democracy into the trenches and disarming of Germany for world decency," Hon. Woodrow Wilson, President of the United States of America, Washington, D. C. (July 14, 1917):

"Consider this plan for world decency. Soldiers fighting in this war should organize a system whereby they will be able to bring or help bring about an immediate close of the war for the sake of humanity."

"Democracy must win in this age for world decency of the people, consequently time demands the soldiers in the trenches have a voice in this struggle."

Suggestion—"Staff of colored men be sent to Europe," Hon. Emmett J. Scott, special Assistant Secretary of War, Washington, D. C. (Aug. 5, 1918):

"There are many problems that confront the boys from time to time, and it would be an advisable idea, I believe, to have somebody representing us in this capacity. These boys represent many stages of life, and especially from a vocational standpoint, which after an investigation will show that they have many valuable thoughts and suggestions to make which would be worth knowing. Several field secretaries could gather these ideas and other information that they would be able to observe and then convey them to you, whenever necessary, for your presentation to the Secretary of War."

Suggestion—"Partly Government directorship and ownership of railroads," Hon. William G. McAdoo, Director General of Railroads, Washington, D. C. (Dec. 23, 1918):

"Am pleased to know that you have changed your mind to partly Government directorship of the railroads, as I believe it is the only practical way at this time. Only a certain amount of the people at this time have high ideals and maintain them, and it will be some time before the majority of the selfishness that exists will evaporate from this life; hence in the practicalness of complete Government control I do believe that the Government's right to invest at least one-half billion or one whole billion dollars in the railroads."

Suggestion—"Recruiting of 2,400 stevedore and transport men, allowing the promotion of intelligent, industrious, and worthy men," Hon. N. D. Baker, Secretary of War, Washington, D. C. (Sept. 11, 1917):

"That there are plenty of opportunities open to colored men in the service at this time is indicated in a letter received yesterday by A. R. Gillespie, 2272 East Ninety-seventh Street, from the Quartermaster Department at Washington.

"In a letter to the Secretary of War Baker recently Mr. Gillespie pointed out there are scores of well-educated colored men whose services to the Government in transport and clerical work would prove invaluable.

"Applicants may apply to Army recruiting stations, requesting to be assigned to stevedore regiments at Newport News, Va. If the recruiting officers advise they have no authority for making such assignments, applicants are requested to wire The Adjutant General's Office, Washington, for authority." (The Cleveland Plain Dealer.)

Suggestion—"Valuable News," Maj. Boening, commanding officer Tenth Battalion, One hundred and fifty-ninth D. B., Camp Taylor, Ky. (Oct. 30, 1918):

"1. Request that you use the value that is contained in the article on 'Personal discipline essential' of this week's issue of 'The Trench and Camp.'

"2. I am aware of the fact that you desire me not to mention the subject on saluting, which this article, you will note, contains.

"3. Again kindly let me suggest that you use this valuable news by seeing that it is placed on the bulletin boards of our battalion, so that it can be read by our comrades: 'Improved delayed mail and back pay for the soldiers at the base hospital' would have been other suggestions that I should have made, but the chaplains that I worked for would not approve of it because they said it was part of their work.

"These suggestions were on account of the request from the War Department for an interview with me."

Suggestion—"Liberty whistles as advertisement," Hon. William G. McAdoo, Secretary of Treasury, Washington, D. C.:

"I would suggest that you have liberty whistles spread throughout the entire country at the disposal of children, so that they can blow for liberty."

Suggestion—"Float of suggestions," Mr. M. A. Vinson, Liberty loan committee, Cleveland, Ohio (Apr. 15, 1918):

"Some few days ago I received a letter from Hon. William G. McAdoo, regarding myself participating in the third Liberty loan parade. I wrote him and he referred me to your committee for approval.

"This part that I want to have is a float of suggestions by me to the Government which were actual facts. I would wear an Uncle Sam's coat costume, have Government truck, cannon, soldiers guarding it to the number of a squad, American flag, and then the suggestions would be displayed in some form on the truck. The art manager of the Cleveland Plain Dealer said that he would design the float if the loan committee would write a letter of approval."

Suggestion—"Cloth tops and rubber-bottom shoes," Mr. Herbert C. Hoover, Food Administrator, Washington, D. C. (Oct. 13, 1917):

"Recently I called the attention of the President, Hon. Woodrow Wilson, and the Secretary of War, Hon. N. D. Baker, to some details concerning the present war. Mr. Hoover, I want to continue doing the same; so at this time I would like to mention to you about the conservation of the leather supply for the Army. My plan for this idea is to ask the shoe manufacturer, men and women, to consider the making and wearing of shoes, respectfully, that consist of cloth tops and rubber bottoms. Trusting you will see your way clear to comply with this request.

"This I figured would save 100,000,000 pounds of leather and one-half to a billion dollars annually."

Suggestion—"Eat more ice cream," to the confectionery dealers of Cleveland, Ohio (Dec. 29, 1915). (A copy of this was also forwarded to Hon. N. D. Baker, Secretary of War, Washington, D. C., with other credentials):

"Having had the opportunity of working with the MacDiarmid Co., while there I observed that the confectionery dealers are not receiving the business they should. After a few weeks in the employ of the company I had noticed that a very large number of the customers, mostly men, do not buy in this line as much as they should.

"We all know that at the present time there is a great protest against the sale of intoxicating liquors; in fact, a large majority of the people think that in time the whole country will go dry. Don't you think this movement will help the confectionery business?

"Gentlemen, it is up to you to get started and try to encourage the people to eat more ice cream and other goods handled by confectionery stores. I suggest that the best way to get at this matter would be through advertising, a method which has made the majority of firms successful, and which seems to be the best method so far."

Suggestion—"Morgan safety hood," Hon. N. D. Baker, Secretary of War, Washington, D. C. (Jan. 28, 1918):

"The purpose of the helmet is to enable the wearer to enter a room filled with noxious gases, fumes, and smoke for the purposes of saving life and property, stopping the source of fumes, or locating and extinguishing fires. This helmet also can be used greatly in aiding the soldier on guard duty through rain, severe cold, checking strong winds, snow, and comes especially handy on submarines, boats, and ships.

"The CONGRESSIONAL RECORD says, on June 27, 1917, that Col. J. L. Tilson spoke on 'Gases in warfare' in 6,000 words, which was, in part, as follows: 'Some Germans were captured who had masks, and in a few days every woman in France was making them who could get the right kind of material.' Again, he says on a suggestion that officers returning from abroad reported that the masks were such efficient protection that both sides had practically discontinued the use of gas; the speaker said that the proposition was to enlarge the area of gas operations so that thorough protection by gas masks would be practical. He further says a gas mask is absolutely necessary for the life of anyone who is exposed to those deadly gases."

"Everybody, including horses, is forced to wear masks at certain points of danger against attacks by gas raiders." (London Times, Mar. 10, 1917.)

Suggestion—"Stop human world on behalf of peace," Mr. Henry Ford, Ford Motor Co., Detroit, Mich., and Hon. Woodrow Wilson, President of the United States of America (Jan. 9, 1916):

"I have always been in sympathy with your ideas of labor conditions and the spirit you show in bringing about peace across the waters. Mr. Ford, kindly let me suggest a few of my ideas concerning this peace movement of yours. I think that one of the most essential ways of conducting this affair should be through prayers to God by the mass of the people. I would suggest that you have a week of prayer, first starting it through a five-minute period of prayer, having the whole world to be silent at that time, causing every movable thing, such as ships and boats, trains, and every kind of movable industries, upon the face of the globe to stop if possible."

Suggestion—"Consolidated package freight," Hon. William G. McAdoo, Director of Railroads, Washington, D. C.:

"I pointed out to him that shipments consisting of small packages be consolidated, so as to be shipped on a heavier basis, to save time and money. This, I tried to show him, would save about $200,000,000 per annum."

I received the following letter in behalf of the Secretary of the Treasury regarding float of suggestions:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, March 30, 1918.

A. R. GILLESPIE, Esq.,
2272 East Ninety-seventh Street, Cleveland, Ohio.

MY DEAR MR. GILLESPIE: In behalf of the Secretary, permit me to acknowledge receipt of your letter of the 27th of March and to say that the arrangements for Liberty loan parades are left entirely in the hands of the local Liberty loan committees and are not controlled from the Treasury Department directly. I would suggest, therefore, that you take the matter up with the Cleveland committee, who will decide whether your request is proper.

Sincerely,
M. B. CLAGGETT,
Private Secretary.

After sending my letters to Hon. Newton D. Baker and Emmett J. Scott, special Assistant Secretary of War, for their review, I received the following two letters in reply:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, August 7, 1918.

Mr. A. R. GILLESPIE,
2272 East Ninety-seventh Street, Cleveland, Ohio.

DEAR SIR: Your letter addressed to the Secretary of War has been referred to me for acknowledgment, and I am venturing to hope that the reply I am herewith sending you covers your letter to the Secretary as well.

Yours, very truly,
EMMETT J. SCOTT,
Special Assistant, Office of the Secretary of War.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, August 7, 1918.

Mr. A. R. GILLESPIE,
2272 East Ninety-seventh Street, Cleveland, Ohio.

DEAR SIR: I have your letter of August 2 and note same carefully. All of the suggestions outlined by you are entitled to serious consideration, and I beg to assure you that I so regard them, and as opportunity offers I shall pass them on.

Yours, very sincerely,
EMMETT J. SCOTT,
Special Assistant, Room 131, War Department.

I was drafted under serial No. 10170, reclassified under No. 5889, and finally put in order No. 7009. Later, I claimed exemption on the grounds of supporting my mother, brother, and sister, as I have been the main support of them for the past 14 years; the draft board refused the claim three times, and then I carried it to Hon. Newton D. Baker, Secretary of War, and he replied as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, April 20, 1918.

Respectfully referred for consideration, Joseph P. Tumulty, Secretary to the President.

A. R. GILLESPIE,
2272 East Ninety-seventh Street, Cleveland, Ohio.

DEAR MR. GILLESPIE: I have read your telegram of March 10 which you attached to the note left for me at my office yesterday.

The whole question of deferred classification is by law placed in the hands of the local boards, and I do not feel justified in interfering in any case to affect or reverse their judgment.

Cordially, yours,
NEWTON D. BAKER,
Secretary of War.

After his refusal to interfere with the draft board's decision I wrote the President the following letter:

CLEVELAND, OHIO, May 18, 1918.

Respectfully referred for consideration, Joseph P. Tumulty, Secretary to the President.

Mr. WOODROW WILSON,
President United States of America, Washington, D. C.

MR. PRESIDENT: Kindly find inclosed letters from Secretary of War, Hon. Newton D. Baker, Provost Marshal Gen. E. H. Crowder, bearing upon my classification, and which I sent you to review.

My reason for asking for classification is on account of dependency by a brother, sister, and mother, and whom I have supported for the past 14 years. I have appealed to the local boards here three times, and they have failed to defer my classification, which I think ought to be according to law.

Also find inclosed my classification card. I have been interested in this war by offering the Government many suggestions, numbering about 20 in all, and which I think have been a great help to the officials, therefore I do not feel ashamed in asking for deferred classification because of my future possibility.

Sincerely, yours,
A. R. GILLESPIE,
2272 East Ninty-seventh Street.

According to my knowledge these statements are true.
LULU GILLESPIE, 50 years (mother).
LOUISE GILLESPIE, 15 years (sister).
JAMES GILLESPIE, 11 years (brother).

With this claim I inclosed letter from Hon. William G. McAdoo, Director General of Railroads, regarding the use of railway ties as a substitute for relieving the fuel situation, which read as follows:

(In your reply please refer to file No. G–237.)

UNITED STATES RAILROAD ADMINISTRATION,
W. G. MCADOO, DIRECTOR GENERAL OF RAILROADS,
Washington, D. C., January 12, 1918.

THEODORE H. PRICE,
Actuary to the Railroad Administration.

DEAR MR. GILLESPIE: The Director General requests me to acknowledge your letter of January 3 and to thank you very much for the suggestions therein contained.

You will, of course, appreciate the fact that vast numbers of suggestions bearing upon railroad problems have been made and intelligent consideration of all of them can not be had immediately. At the earliest possible moment, however, these matters will receive careful attention.

Cordially, yours,
(Signed) OSCAR A. PRICE,
Private Secretary.

A. R. GILLESPIE, Esq.,
2272 East Ninety-seventh Street, Cleveland, Ohio:

In behalf of the President, Woodrow Wilson, on my exemption claim, Roscoe S. Conkling wrote as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE PROVOST MARSHAL GENERAL,
Washington, May 23, 1918.

Mr. A. R. GILLESPIE,
2272 East Ninety-seventh Street, Cleveland, Ohio.

DEAR MR. GILLESPIE: By reference of the President, I have your letter dated May 18, with inclosures, which are returned herewith, relative to your classification by the local selective-service authorities, and I note your request that deferred classification be granted you on grounds of dependency.

Under the selective-service law and the regulations promulgated by authority thereof questions regarding to deferred classification of registrants are solely and exclusively for determination by local and district boards, and there is no authority in any other official to interfere with this jurisdiction in particular cases.

You can readily see that to intervene in special instances would inevitably result in undermining the confidence of the country in the system and eventually to disintegrate it, and therefore it is felt that the findings of the local authorities should not be disturbed.

E. R. CROWDER,
Provost Marshal General.
By ROSCOE S. CONKLING,
Major, Judge Advocate, Chief Classification Division.

Just a few days before being sent to the camp, I asked my board to send me to one of the training schools, and they refused, saying that the camp officials would take care of me. I did not get any consideration after consulting my captain. I always felt before going to camp that I would be misunderstood there. During my stay at Camp Zachary Taylor, Ky., I acted as secretary to one of the chaplains while in the One hundred and fifty-ninth Depot Brigade, being sent there by my captain. On account of my continued correspondence with Washington officials it brought hard feelings at the camp, and then I was forced to write to Hon. William G. McAdoo a note stating that he had better act in my behalf. With this note I inclosed the following letters:

CAMP ZACHARY TAYLOR,
Louisville, Ky., October 25, 1918.

From: Pvt. A. R. Gillespie, Forty-seventh Company, Twelfth Transport Battalion, One hundred and fifty-ninth Depot Brigade.
To: Hon. William G. McAdoo, Director General of Railroads.
Subject: "Dining-car courtesy."

1. From my observation I consider it a necessity to improve the dining-car diplomacy among railway waiters of the United States of America Railroad Co.

2. Due to the fact that we are having foreign diplomats coming from the old country from time to time and because of the need of pushing civilization to the front for the greatest efficiency.

3. Many times while riding across the country I have noticed waiters appealing to the passengers in an unbecoming way to be representing such an organization as our great railway system. This unit is exposed to the general public of every walk of life and is broad in its extension throughout the land of the United States of America. The waiters are not refined enough, as I see it, but are giving the best that is in them, or what they think is appropriate.

4. I know that inspectors are on the lookout and instruct from time to time, but they are not up to snuff. The thing to do is to get somebody that really understands etiquette and knows humanity. Now, I am inclined to believe that the women are the best adapted for this instructorship position. Men, as a rule, do not make such studies.

Pvt. A. R. GILLESPIE,
Forty-seventh Company, Twelfth Transport Battalion,
One hundred and fifty-ninth Depot Brigade, Louisville, Ky.

CAMP ZACHARY TAYLOR,
Louisville, Ky., October 24, 1918.

From: Pvt. A. R. Gillespie, Forty-seventh Company, Twelfth Transport Battalion, One hundred and fifty-ninth Depot Brigade.
To: Hon Woodrow Wilson, President of the United States of America and Commander in Chief of the United States Army.
Subject: Bureau of reconstruction.

1. Request from my thinking faculties that a bureau of reconstruction be established immediately by you and operated in behalf of the soldiers and civilians in the communities and camps.

2. There should be a chairman or director appointed to operate from a national standpoint and having its headquarters at some designated place.

3. This reconstruction would be operated to increase the intelligence of the whole Nation from every viewpoint and the complete requirements of energy, money, and time should be used in bringing the necessary issue to pass. I might say that we should go at this without a selfish thought.

4. Some of the subjects that could be taught are nursing, medicine, law, printing, dentistry, agriculture, teaching of general education, bookbinding, and the ideals of social life.

5. A great many people are under the impression that the camp life will last at least five years and probably permanently. We do not know the War Department that out of wounded men in Europe 15 per cent are disabled, and at some of the camps we will find nearly 50 per cent of the men are affected with venereal disease. We have got to cure these men before we can send them into civilian life. The Nation must be restored back to what God intended it to be.

Forty-seventh Company, Twelfth Transport Battalion,
One hundred and fifty-ninth Depot Brigade,

CAMP ZACHARY TAYLOR,
Louisville, Ky., October 26, 1918.

Why Germany will beg for peace and submit to all fair proposals.

1. Germany's best physical men have entered the war, and most of them have been either killed, wounded, or captured. Her present fighting unit consists of mostly old, young, and unfit men.

2. Germany's resources have been cut off from the rest of the world to a certain extent. Holland, Sweden, and some parts of Russia are her main imports. These countries at the beginning of the war were supplied freely, but now the Allies have limited them in their exports on account of conveying supplies to the Central Powers.

3. At the beginning of this war the greater part of the world was unprepared to fight, with the exception of Germany. After it had become known that it was going to be a World War and Germany was jeopardizing the safety of the world, then the neutral countries and others began to spend money for a larger army and navy.

4. The United States Government has entered the war, with her population of 110,000,000 and an intelligent, fresh Army.

5. All the past battles have been fought on soil outlying the German territory. We, the allies, are now nearing the German boundary line and through this are causing the morale in Germany to be broken.

6. (This paragraph omitted by Capt. P. H. Akins, of the Intelligence Office headquarters.) Germany has lost only from a standpoint of humanity and materially; she has not lost much. At this time it would be foolish for her to continue farther, as she has everything to lose and nothing to gain. She has been intelligent enough to prepare forty years ahead of time for this war and now is intelligent enough to stop at her declining days when her nation is about to be put into a perilous condition. Germany is now aroused and is looking toward the future.

7. We have made a success of our shipbuilding and the crossing of the ocean, this the Central Powers know.

8. The allies day by day are increasing their man power and outnumbering the Central Powers, producing more experienced men and taking a greater interest in the war.

9. (This paragraph was omitted by Capt. P. H. Akins, of Intelligence Office headquarters.) We ought to, as a Nation fighting in this war, march directly to Germany, disarm her, and establish a military guard in Berlin and all the outlying territory of Berlin in Germany regardless of whether she asks for peace or not. This paroling could last at least for a year.

SUGGESTION CONSOLIDATION OF PACKAGE FREIGHT.

MY DEAR MR. GILLESPIE: I take pleasure in acknowledging receipt of your further communication of October 23, and attached copies of letters directed to Mr. McAdoo and President Wilson, relative to dining-car service and the establishment of a Bureau of Reconstruction.

As the subject considered in your letter to the President is something outside the jurisdiction of the Railroad Administration, I will make no attempt to reply.

Every effort is being expended by the railroads to bring about satisfactory service on the dining cars as well as in all other departments, and to this end a national committee has recently been appointed which it is hoped will bring about uniform and satisfactory practices on all railroads. Consideration will be given your ideas in connection with the instruction of waiters along diplomatic lines.

Yours, very sincerely,

BALLARD DUNN,
Assistant Secretary.

The letter on reconstruction addressed to the President was signed by me with the typewriter only. A copy of the article on why Germany would beg for peace and submit to all fair proposals was sent to Hon. William Howard Taft, ex-President. He replied as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., October 31, 1918.

MY DEAR MR. GILLESPIE: I am glad that you have the opinions which your inclosure shows.

Sincerely, yours, WM. H. TAFT.

After writing Mr. McAdoo an order came, according to one of the company's clerks, stating that I must be interviewed on behalf of the War Department. Within a few days I was called to the major's office, of our battalion, and interviewed by 2 majors and about 10 lieutenants and captains. There I presented my proposal on why Germany would beg for peace and submit to all fair proposals, the letters on reconstruction and dining-car diplomacy. Maj. Boening presented and asked if I wrote them. I told him, "Yes." He then asked if I had any suggestions to make on behalf of the soldiers. I recommended proper saluting by the officers. Every officer in the room dropped his head, and the major said, "Not that kind of suggesting." I was then asked to prepare other suggestions. While at the battalion office I was sent to the infirmary for inspection for the development battalion. I passed this inspection with success. The suggestions that I prepared were improved back pay and delayed mail for the sick soldiers at the hospital. These the chaplains refused to approve on account of being part of their work.

Then I made the following suggestion, which was approved by the chaplains:

CAMP ZACHARY TAYLOR,
Louisville, Ky., October 30, 1918.

From: Private A. R. Gillespie, Forty-seventh Company, Twelfth Transport Battalion, One hundred and fifty-ninth Depot Brigade, United States Army.
To: Maj. Boening, commanding officer Tenth Battalion, One hundred and fifty-ninth Depot Brigade, United States Army.
Subject: Valuable news.

1. Request that you use the value that is contained in the article on "Personal discipline essential," of this week's issue of the Trench and Camp.

2. I am aware of the fact that you desire me not to mention the subject on saluting, which this article, you will note, contains.

3. Again kindly let me suggest that you use this valuable news by seeing that it is placed on the bulletin boards of our battalion, so that it can be read by our comrades.

4. I further suggest that you advance this idea so that it could be used in the entire camp if practical.

CLEVELAND, OHIO, May 12, 1919.

Hon. H. I. EMERSON, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Herein note various data that I have collected regarding the completion of the self-operating aeroplane that is in practice in the War Department now. This data is from my own credentials and true to the best of my ability. The purpose of this data is to prove that I gave the War Department the first plan of the said machine, the self-operating aeroplane.

Hon. Newton D. Baker, Secretary of War, announces the success of the machine, according to the Plain Dealer, Cleveland, Ohio, March 24, 1919, but he does not mention its origination. I appeal at this time for any consideration that Congress can give or order, if my statement of the self-operating aeroplane is found true.

The letter that I wrote Hon. Newton D. Baker, Secretary of War, read something like the following, the original being misplaced:

CLEVELAND, OHIO, November 30, 1917.

Hon. NEWTON D. BAKER,
Secretary of War, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I have before me in mind a machine that I think will help to win the war, and I wish that the Government would help me to materialize it. This device is in the form of a miniature aeroplane that I have in view. It would be self-guided, travel 100 miles per hour, stop at any specific place, carry a 20 to 30 pound bomb, self-destructive, would not be much more than 10 feet in length, operate by gasoline, electricity, or steam, and be used only when there would be 50,000 or more ready for use.

Kindly give this your careful consideration.

Yours, truly,

A. R. GILLESPIE,
2272 East Ninety-seventh Street, Cleveland, Ohio.

The reply was as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
BOARD OF ORDNANCE AND FORTIFICATION,
Washington, December 5, 1917.

Mr. A. R. GILLESPIE,
2272 East Ninety-seventh Street,
Cleveland, Ohio.

SIR: In reply to your letter of the 30th ultimo to the Secretary of War, I am directed to inform you that if you will comply with the provisions of the inclosed Memorandum for Inventors your invention will be carefully examined and appropriate action taken.

The board will assist in a test or the development of an invention only when it appears probable from the inventor's description that the invention is more effective, or can be made more effective, than the best device now used for the same purpose in the different military services. All communications with inventors are held as confidential.

Very respectfully,

G. L. ANDERSON,
Colonel, United States Army, retired.

Attached form headed as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
BOARD OF ORDNANCE AND FORTIFICATION.

MEMORANDUM FOR INVENTORS.

(War Department, Board of Ordnance and Fortification. Form No. S. 3—4560.)

After I found that the War Department did not suggest that I get into the service and help materialize it, and I proceeded to find a way to develop the self-operating machine. At this time I was working at the New York Central Railroad Co. at Collinwood, Ohio, as a clerk. I wrote Mr. R. B. Starbuck, assistant general manager west of Buffalo, N. Y., of the New York Central Railroad Lines, and he wrote me the following letter:

THE NEW YORK CENTRAL RAILROAD CO. (WEST OF BUFFALO).

Mr. A. R. GILLESPIE,
2272 East Ninety-seventh Street,
Cleveland, Ohio.

DEAR SIR: I have referred your letter of December 12 to Mr. D. R. MacBain, superintendent motive power, with request that he arrange so that you may present your plans to our mechanical department, located at Collinwood.

Yours, very truly,

R. D. STARBUCK,
Assistant General Manager.

Within less than a week I had the proposed interview with the New York Central Railroad Co.'s superintendent of motive power with Mr. D. R. MacBain, to determine if the idea could be used, in a private room in the Collinwood New York Central Railroad Co.'s office. With us, behind closed doors, was a stenographer who took our interview, which consisted of about 300 words. After the interview Mr. MacBain promised me that I would hear from it in a few days, but I did not, even after writing Mr. Starbuck. I am under the impression that a copy of this interview pertaining to the self-operating aeroplane was forwarded to the War Department. At this interview I proposed that the New York Central Railroad Co. allow me first to travel over their road free of charge to gather necessary information from the airplane field at Dayton, Ohio, Curtiss airplane factory at Buffalo, N. Y., and Thomas A. Edison's laboratory at Orange, N. J., to materialize the machine in cooperation with the New York Central Railroad Co.

Yours, sincerely,

A. R. GILLESPIE,
2272 East Ninety-seventh Street, Cleveland, Ohio.

Hon. Newton D. Baker announces the success of the self-run aeroplane as follows:

[Cleveland Plain Dealer.]

SELF-RUN PLANE IS WAR WEAPON—SECRETARY BAKER BARES SECRET OF UNITED STATES DEVICE.

FORT WORTH, TEX., March 24.

Under automattic control an airplane capable of carrying a heavy load and operated without a human guide, has made a trip of 100 miles and landed close to the point set out to reach, Newton D. Baker, Secretary of War, disclosed in an address here to-day.

The device which made such a flight possible and which has been kept secret, Mr. Baker said, is an automatic guide for airplanes and was invented in America. It is designed as an instrument of war, and the Secretary referred to it in describing to his audience the possible horrors of future wars if there is to be no league of nations.

Secretary Baker did not explain the exact nature of the invention, but he made it clear that the War Department considers it one of the most wonderful pieces of mechanism for war's destructive purposes.

There was nothing accomplished in this interview to broaden my activities. Prior to going to camp I made it part of my plan to go to Washington to see what had been accomplished by my various theories that I had offered from time to time. On my way to Washington, D. C., in the spring of 1918, I talked to Hon. William H. Taft, ex-President, who was just returning from Cleveland in behalf of the third Liberty loan on a Pennsylvania train. He interviewed me and said: "You must have a fine education; you ought to go to the officers' training school. You would make a good officer." He also said that he could not say that my letters were not valuable, "but when you go to Washington you will find the officials very busy, and they will not have much time to talk to you." While in Washington I went to the White House to see President Woodrow Wilson concerning my suggestions, and was met by his Secretary, Mr. Joseph P. Tumulty, who carried my letters that I had written a few days previous, stating that I would be in Washington, addressed to the President. Mr. Tumulty read my letters that were pertaining to the success of the war, and he said, "There is no question but what you have done a good work. The Secretary of War ought to write your draft board a letter and recommend that they exempt you."

I told Mr. Tumulty, after he had asked me why I wanted to see the President, that the full strength of the colored population should be thrust into the war, and that the people in general were only utilizing about 20 per cent of their brain power. He then informed me that the President had appointed all the experts that he thought was necessary. He also said, "You can talk to the President, providing some department under him recommends you." Thirty days after I left the White House 32 colored representatives were called for a conference, and in one period of 10 days also were 90,000 men shipped to Europe. When the armistice was signed the colored soldiers represented 15 per cent of the total soldiers in the National Army.

I also visited the War Department in hopes of seeing Hon. Emmett J. Scott, special Assistant Secretary of War, and found that he was touring the camps. His assistant informed me that Mr. Newton D. Baker, Secretary of War, had referred all my letters to Mr. Scott and was much impressed with them; Mr. Scott, also.

While there I recommended that colored speakers be sent out in behalf of the war and was informed that it was under consideration. After visiting Mr. Baker's office I found that he was in Baltimore, and it was suggested that I come back Wednesday noon and then would be allowed to see him, but, on account of being so busy that day, it was impossible for me to have a talk with him. He later wrote me a letter stating that he had received my note and telegram. The next day I visited Hon. William G. McAdoo's office and discovered that he was in the South, but I talked to his secretary and told him that there was a heavy drain upon the employees of the railroad, and that there were 3,000 colored railroad employees in the North that ought to be substituted, who were not working at that vocation at that time. He referred me to Mr. George Haines, of the War Labor Board, and he referred me to W. R. Connors, of Cleveland, Ohio, with the Colored Welfare Association there. I could not see why Mr. Haines should make such a suggestion. I also told Mr. McAdoo's secretary about how the breakage on the western division of the New York Central Railway amounted to $200,000 per annum and ought to cease. He was very pleased after reading some of my letters, and I left.

Most all my letters have been reviewed by Mr. Baker and Mr. Scott. After discovering that the country was at stake, I deemed it my supreme duty to contribute fully in its behalf.

Sincerely, yours,

A. R. GILLESPIE,
2272 East Ninety-seventh Street, Cleveland, Ohio.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. DAVID J. O'CONNELL,
OF NEW YORK,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Wednesday, June 18, 1919.

Mr. O'CONNELL. Mr. Speaker, the daylight-saving law is before the House for consideration, and in view of the hundreds of letters that have come to my desk from the great constituency I have the honor to represent in this body I desire to be heard on this question. It is my deliberate conviction that there has been no law placed upon the statute books of our country within the memory of any Member of this House that has afforded greater good to a greater number than the daylight-saving measure. It has commended itself to the crowded populations of the large cities of the country, and because of the ability of our people to leave their desks an hour earlier, and thus encourage the habit of the house garden, a tremendous amount of vegetable and truck gardening was effected that added to our material resources during the war period. In my trips across the continent from Maine to California, especially in the Middle West, I saw this feature of the advantage of the law.

Who can estimate the millions of dollars that were saved to our people as a result? Who can figure the educational value of this law in its encouragement of the spirit of thrift in the section comprising the congested areas of the United States? In the back yards of homes in my own district where a space 15 or 20 feet square was available it was utilized to raise potatoes, tomatoes, onions, corn, and equally useful food commodities. I had first-hand knowledge of what I say in the immediate section of my own home. Why destroy this new and wholesome tendency on the part of the people in the large centers of population? Why is it not better to maintain a condition that renders the greatest good to the largest number? Do the millions that live and have their being in great cities like New York have to lay aside a beneficent boon of this kind to satisfy the desire of 10 or 15 per cent of our citizenship as represented by the farmer? Or is New York useful or necessary only when the Government of the United States needs money for war or other equally important purposes? The great Empire State gives way to no section—North, South, East, or West—in its loyalty and patriotism to the land and the flag that protect us from enemies within and foes without.

The people of the great city of New York and its largest borough, Brooklyn, which I have the honor to represent in part in this House, are universally in favor of this law. Aside from its value as outlined in my previous reference, there is the advantage to the wage earner in the extra evening hour that he can utilize to give his wife and little children the blessings of a little fresh air at some park, at the seaside, or other place of amusement. In Brooklyn such an opportunity is possible, and the same is true of almost any section of Greater New York. Surely the hours of work in these strenuous days of absorbing and perpetual competition are nerve racking and arduous enough. When we take into consideration the heavy and increasing burdens of the high cost of living, the increasing rents, the wear and tear on the bread winner of the family in the effort to make ends meet and maintain his standard of living as befits an American citizen, we should grasp with avidity any plan that will ameliorate his condition and make his family and himself happy and contented.

This law as now existing helps just a little in this direction. It is an aid to the betterment of the health of that class of our people who, because of environment, are denied the blessings and great benefits afforded a residence in the rural districts, where green fields and country air are available. Then, too, there are thousands of workers in the factory, the office, the department store, and other places who by close economy and self-denial have saved sufficient to make a down payment on a little home in the suburbs of Brooklyn. They want this law continued during the summer months. They can be seen any evening rushing off by car and train to these their castles for a quick supper in order to get out to work in the garden and follow its progress toward the time when the little crop may be harvested. They form no inconspicuous part of our great population. They will watch with interest—yea, with anxiety—the action of the Congress on this matter and take a decided position on a question which so much concerns their happiness and prosperity.

I am appealing for the maintenance of the law with my distinguished colleagues from Brooklyn, all of whom, without regard to political affiliation, are a unit in its advocacy. The House should recognize and appreciate the fact that we represent the largest and most necessary section of the country, and serious attention should be given by the Members to the danger of repealing this legislation. It was good law in time of war and should be continued in time of peace. It added untold millions to the wealth of our people, and for that if for no other reason should have a permanent place on the statute books of the Nation. We have heard much during this debate about the balefulness of the morning dew on the crops of the farmers of the South and West. We have listened with awe and almost sympathy to what dire results will overwhelm the farmer unless this law is repealed. Reasons too numerous to mention are and have been advanced as to why daylight saving should never have come upon us, but no word against its practical value during the war has been uttered. No, Mr. Speaker. Then it was good law; then it had a practical value and appealed to all alike.

Have the advocates of this bill given any thought to the action of the New York State Legislature, which, in deference to the law enacted by the Congress, met the conditions fixed by the new time? All contracts in our State during the period affected are entered into under the new schedule. This is true also of the great State of Pennsylvania, if my memory serves me correctly. If you have any regard for good legislation, if you are unwilling to deny the rights of the many for the selfish benefits of the few, if you would appreciate the plea of the greatest and most responsible portion of the people of our united Commonwealths, you will vote to maintain this boon to the American people.

Fresh-Water Pearl-Button Industry.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. OSCAR E. BLAND,

OF INDIANA.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Friday, June 20, 1919.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, were it not for the fact that the employment of 20,000 needy wage earners and the investment of several millions of dollars are imperiled by delay, I would not at this time urge special consideration for the fresh-water pearl-button industry. I know there are a great number of thriving industries that are not adequately protected under our present tariff laws from cheap foreign competition. The President of the United States has recommended that certain industries should have protection by a bill enacted at the earliest possible date. The potash, glassware, and dyestuffs industries, while important, will suffer no greater injury by delay than the fresh-water pearl-button industry.

You may be surprised to know that in the States of New York, Iowa, New Jersey, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Indiana, Michigan, Illinois, Kansas, Arkansas, Ohio, West Virginia, Tennessee, Connecticut, Oklahoma, Missouri, and Massachusetts 20,000 families are dependent upon the fresh-water pearl-button industry, which industry grew into its present size practically since 1890, when, under the Dingley law, an adequate protective tariff was placed upon the American product. Prior to that time the pearl buttons in this country were for the most part imported from abroad. The protection afforded this industry encouraged the investment of money and the invention of machinery, with the result that throughout the West thousands of tons of fresh-water mussel shells have been taken from the Mississippi River and its tributaries. In the West factories equipped with cutting machines were established, and the little round disks for making the buttons were turned out in great quantities, and many of them shipped to the East, where they were polished, bored, carded, and marketed.

In 1914, from the meager reports obtainable through the United States Bureau of Fisheries, there were approximately 20,000 employees engaged in this work. In my State and district, on the Wabash River, and the two forks of the White River, and on some of the smaller tributaries of these streams, the gathering of shells has become quite an industry.

At Shoals, Ind., in Martin County, for a number of years there has existed a splendid little factory, where shells are purchased, and thrifty, enterprising workmen cut out the disks of practically all sizes for button making. I have watched this plant for a number of years, and, in my judgment, there has never been a more perfect lesson in the wholesomeness of the application of the protective-tariff doctrine than in connection with this little industry. I have visited it when quite a number of industrious men were engaged in everyday work, trying to fill the abundance of orders at hand. I observed that at these times there either was a protective-tariff statute protecting them or else a war condition prevailed that acted as a protection for their industry. The present war has not, as you will observe, been a sufficient protection, and I have seen it when it was as silent as a graveyard and when not a wheel turned for many months, and I observed that this was when it was not adequately protected by our tariff law.

In 1914, before the breaking out of the war, the evil effects of the Underwood tariff law were making themselves felt in all of our industrial life, and, of course, our little thriving industry could not escape the influx of foreign goods over the then and present inadequate protective-tariff rate, which is 25 per cent and 45 per cent ad valorem. I prophesied then what the result would be, and I am here this afternoon to tell you what the result is and what it will be in the near future. I do not claim any of the exceptional characteristics of a prophet, but it seems to me that ordinary horse sense is sufficient to enable one who is at all interested to know the result of the application to this industry of an inadequate protective tariff.

The rate under the act of 1890 on fresh-water pearl buttons was 2½ cents per line and 25 per cent ad valorem. I will here set out a table of the different rates of duty upon shell buttons from and including the act of 1890:

1890—2½ cents per line, 1/40 inch and 25 per cent ad valorem.
1894—1 cent per line per gross, 15 per cent ad valorem.
1897—1½ cents per line per gross, 15 per cent ad valorem.
1909—1½ cents per line per gross, 15 per cent ad valorem.
1913 (present Underwood Act)—25 per cent and 45 per cent ad valorem.

You can see that under the present law the specific duty was entirely omitted. The ad valorem duty is based on the value of the goods, and, as I will show you in this instance affords no protection and provides but a trifling revenue.

I hold in my hand one gross of 16-line fresh-water pearl buttons made in Japan from shells from the rivers in China. These buttons were ground, polished, bored, carded, packed, and shipped to the United States with a duty of probably between one-half and three-fourths of a cent. This duty was paid. They were sold to the jobber. He puts on his profits and sells this gross of buttons for the magnificent sum of 6 cents.

I have here one gross of 18-line buttons made in Japan, same kind of button but a little larger, jobber's price 7 cents; and here is a 20-line or one-half-inch button of the same kind, made in Japan, jobber's price 8 cents; and here is the 22-line button, one full gross of the same kind, made in Japan, sold by the jobber for 9 cents per gross.

Japan, of course, is sending us large quantities of sea-shell buttons. In passing I will say that they, of course, will take the market of American manufacturers of buttons from sea shells. Now, take this gross of 16-line buttons that sells here, including jobber's profits, at 6 cents, which includes the duty. You may be surprised to know that it costs American manufacturers 6 cents to pay the girl to sew these buttons on the card. The overhead charges of any one plant connected with the manufacture of this button in America are more than the entire cost to the Japanese manufacturer as he has laid the button down in America, to say nothing of the wages of the mussel digger and the grinder and the polisher and the borer.

What do you suppose the Japs pay in wages to their employees in the button factories? Let it be remembered that the button industry in Japan is regarded as a home industry, like a great many other industries, such as knitting, weaving, and so forth. It is done by hand, for the most part by members of the family, who work by the piece and carry their product to the central plant. Here is a table which shows the wages paid in Japan per gross, in cents:

Line No.	Cutters.	Grinders.	Facers.	Drillers.	Polishers.
14	$0.0163	$0.0050	$0.0227	$0.0057	$0.0001
16	.0178	.0050	.0227	.0057	.0001
18	.0199	.0050	.0256	.0064	.0001
20	.0227	.0070	.0284	.0071	.0002
22	.0270	.0071	.0327	.0078	.0002
24	.0320	.0071	.0391	.0093	.0002
26	.0391	.0093	.0333	.0214	.0002
28	.0498	.0107	.0640	.0128	.0002
30	.0640	.0121	.0853	.0142	.0002

The wages in this country differ in different localities. There are no unions connected with this industry, but there may be unions organized in these industries in the near future. The average cutting plant in the United States employs about 30 persons. The wages range between $1.75 to $4 per day. In Europe the wages range from 60 cents to $1.20 per day, while the wages in Japan, of course, are only a very small proportion of this sum. I am quoting from page 25 of the Tariff Information Series, No. 4, from the United States Tariff Commission, issued this year:

Japan has recently been supplying the United States with "dobu," shirt buttons made of a fresh-water shell, known as "dobugai," selling as low as 5 cents per gross, carded and duty paid. These are an 18-line staple shirt button, and, according to wage statements of domestic manufacturers, the Japanese selling price is less than the amount paid in the United States for cutting the blank from the shell, which is only one of several operations in manufacturing the finished button.

The American consul at Kobe, under date of September 5, 1917, reported that the operations of cutting, facing, drilling, grinding, and polishing for buttons made of the Chinese fresh-water shells called "dobu" vary in cost from 3.6 cents per gross for a 14-line button to 7.5 cents for a 26-line button. The same operations on buttons made of Japanese dobu cost about one-half the rates quoted for the Chinese shells.

"Dobugai" shells are shipped to Japan from Tientsin and Hankow, China. The development of this industry in China is comparatively new and the main demand is from Japan. The shells are found in the inland lakes of the region in and about Hankow, especially the Tungting Lake. Nearly 6,000,000 pounds of shells were exported from the Hankow district from January 1 to September 30, 1917, as compared with 40,000 pounds during the previous year. The prices of these shells have advanced from 1 tael to 3 taels per 133 pounds (1 tael in 1917 was equivalent to about $1 in gold) and from 1 tael to 5 taels in the Tientsin region. Exports of the Tientsin shells are not so great, but they are probably superior in quality to the Hankow shells. Japanese manufacturers are sending machinery to Hankow to cut the shells into blanks. The finishing processes of the buttons are completed in Japan. This is not, however, the only imported button competing with the domestic product. All shell buttons at present imported from foreign countries, especially those below 36 line, irrespective of the kind of shell used in their manufacture, can be obtained in the local markets at prices considerably lower than the American cost of production for similar goods. There has been an enormous increase in the importations of these buttons from foreign countries in recent years. As shown by official Japanese reports, imports from Japan alone increased from $28,057 in 1912 to $770,849 in 1916, or nearly twenty-eightfold. These Japanese importations are still rapidly increasing, and there seems to be no limit to the supply in the local markets available for prompt deliveries.

There was a time when the Japs would sell our manufacturers the blanks, and then we employed our workmen to grind, polish, and bore them; but the Japs have become too wise for that, and now they no longer sell us blanks. I am reliably informed that recently a plant which could not stand the competition in America was forced to quit, and the same was sold to Japanese capitalists, together with all the automatic machines. The plant has been dismantled and shipped to Japan, so we understand.

The recent Japanese commission, taking advantage of the splendid courtesy shown by this generous administration, studied the operation of our plants and the requirements of our trade, became familiar with our needs as to color, size, packing, crating, and so forth, and now, with American-made machines, made by American genius, they go into China, where there is an inexhaustible supply of shells that can be obtained for a pittance, and they send this pauper-labor product here and sell it so cheaply that already some of our investors have failed and the different plants are working but half time. I here insert a scale showing the disastrous but easily foretold effects of a policy which permits a gross of these buttons made in Japan to be sold in our markets for 6 cents after having paid only a duty of less than 1 cent.

Under the date of October 3, 1917, the Department of Commerce published in Commerce Reports the cost of producing a gross of buttons in Japan manufactured from Chinese and Japanese "dobu" shells, as follows:

Size.	Chinese dobu.	Japanese dobu.
14 line	$0.051	$0.021
16 line	.051	.021
18 line	.054	.025
20 line	.064	.030
22 line	.076	.034
24 line	.089	.042
26 line	.107	.053

Before the invasion of our markets by the yellow peril, conditions in the pearl-button industry were thriving. I read from the report of the Department of Commerce, May 14, this year, the following:

According to the census figures for 1914, the production of fresh-water pearl buttons in that year was $4,879,844, out of a total domestic production of buttons amounting to $16,233,198. Notwithstanding the increased cost of labor and raw materials and higher freight rates during the war period, there has been a decrease in the price of fresh-water pearl buttons. This is partly due to the installation of automatic machinery for sawing, grinding, facing, and drilling processes largely performed in the early stages of the industry by so-called hand machinery.

I wish some of you gentlemen would go down here to one of the department stores and go in and call for pearl buttons, not novelties or specialties, but the cheap pearl button used on workingmen's garments. Practically every card in the store is made in Japan. Let no one be deceived that they are going to get pearl buttons cheaper in the long run, because when the markets here have been taken by the Jap's product and our plants are down and out the wily Jap and the covetous importer will see to it that you pay the full penalty for your folly.

I also desire to insert in the RECORD a table taken from the official reports of Japan showing the export to the United States of pearl buttons covering the period between 1908 and 1916, and I desire to call your attention to the fact that from 1914, and including that year, which was the first year of the operation of the Underwood bill, the importations have been unusually and alarmingly large. I do not have at hand the figures for 1917 and 1918, but the report of the Tariff Commission shows, without giving the figures, that they have steadily increased by leaps and bounds until the markets of the American products are practically paralyzed; and, gentlemen of the committee, how could it be otherwise? Do you think that our boys will work for 6 or 7 cents a day, or do you think that our manufacturers can pay the wages they do pay and other expenses in proportion and compete with a people who can sell a gross of buttons and pay the duty and lay them down in the United States for 6 cents per gross? If you will read the report of the Tariff Commission you will find where they have been sold here for 5 cents per gross. The cunning Jap, every hour, is stealing the greatest market in the world, and when he has competition successfully throttled you may expect to pay the price he demands.

The only available figures on imports I have for 1918 and 1919 are from July, 1918, to February, 1919, inclusive, by month, which are furnished by the Department of Commerce:

Month.	Gross.	Value.
1918–July	234,690	$57,137
August	587,945	84,847
September	504,868	85,789
October	354,541	75,248
November	413,122	97,166
December	341,734	71,951
1919–January	195,216	61,390
February	590,820	123,792

Notwithstanding the fact that our factories are only working on half time, the American product is piling up and is not being used to any great extent, the following stocks of finished buttons being on hand on the dates indicated in the following table:

	Gross.
July 1, 1917	10,182,392
January 1, 1918	11,573,907
July 1, 1918	11,068,419
January 1, 1919	12,655,557
May 3, 1919	13,015,268

Recently, in view of the dull business conditions, the manufacturers of Muscatine, Iowa, were obliged to make a reduction in wages. The employees in the factories appealed to the governor of the State, who appointed a board of arbitration to investigate the situation. The manufacturers had no voice in the appointment of this board of arbitration to investigate the situation. The manufacturers had no voice in the appointment of this board. A report was made to the governor by the board, and I respectfully direct your attention to a paragraph in the report on the contention of the board, as follows. I am reading from the report on page 5:

"It is perfectly apparent that the pearl-button industry at the present time is in bad condition; that the manufacturing plants are very heavily overstocked, and are carrying and producing much more than they can readily sell at remunerative prices, and that they are not now, and probably will not for some time hence, make reasonable return on their investment. If all the buttons entering the American market were produced by American labor, the solution of this difficulty would be easy. Then a reasonable price based upon American wage could be demanded of the consumer, but the evidence in this case clearly shows that these buttons have to be sold by the manufacturers in open competition with the world's production. The evidence introduced before us clearly shows that Japan is flooding the American market with a similar class of buttons, made by the cheap labor of that country. So long as this product is compelled to be priced with goods made by cheap oriental labor, so long will wages be forced down to meet that competition. It is not in our power, of course, to remedy this situation or make any suggestions for remedying it. It is perfectly apparent that the only practical way of meeting this situation is for the United States to discourage the foreign importation of these cheap goods by placing a tariff on this commodity that would equal the difference between the cost of production at home and abroad, based upon reasonable wage scale, to the employees. Even free-trade England has learned the necessity of protecting its own laborers against competition from abroad, and it certainly is in line with the policy of the United States to adopt such tariff laws as will protect the American wage. There is no other way by which this could be done. If American products must come in direct competition with the products made by cheap labor abroad, it inevitably and irresistibly will force down the American wage scale. We find that this situation could and should receive the attention of the lawmaking power of the United States, but at present we have to deal with conditions as they are. So we recommend to the employers that they revise their cutting scale of January 6, 1919, and, if possible, make it more liberal to the employees, even though this should temporarily consume profits, or even some of the accumulated surplus made in the time of prosperity."

Let me direct your attention further to a report of the United States commercial attaché at Peking, China, under date of December 28, 1917, as follows:

Japanese manufacturers are sending machinery to Hankow to cut the shells into disks, the latter to be sent to Japan for manufacture into buttons. Several Americans interested in these shells are investigating the erection of plants in Hankow for the manufacture of the buttons.

I am told that in other lines, where a foreign corporation enters Japan for the purpose of utilizing the cheap labor, immediately Jap laws and rules and regulations are so entwined around the American-capitalized industry that it is absolutely impossible for them to operate successfully. All kinds of licenses and taxes and special restraints are laid upon these kinds of organizations.

So, my friends, it seems to me that there is but one wise thing to do, and the strangest thing to me is that sensible thinking men, in the interest of their country and the prosperity and the happiness of their people, have not had the foresight and the good judgment to have seen the effect of this real free-trade policy on this splendid industry. Some one will say the shells are about out of our streams.

Let me quote a page from the report of the Tariff Commission, page 26:

The Commissioner of the Bureau of Fisheries, in various communications, states:

"* * * It may be stated with assurance that the fresh-water mussel resources of the United States will endure indefinitely. They can, of course, be practically exhausted in any given locality, but only as the result of very shortsighted practices in the fishery. They can, of course, be seriously depleted over the country as a whole only by widespread and inexcusable negligence.

"There exists no question as to the permanence of the mussel fishery and of the industries based thereupon. To insure perpetuation in the most desirable degree of abundance, it is undoubtedly necessary that protection be given and this supplemented by propagation. We are engaging and expect to continue always to engage in propagation. We observe also that the several States are taking increasing interest in protecting the mussel resources, and several legislatures have recently enacted wise legislation to that end. There has never been a time when the manufacturers or the public could be more confident than now of the permanence of the industry."

The fresh-water button manufacturers are not demanding as much tariff as the law of 1890 provided, but they do demand, and are entitled to, a tariff that equals the difference in the cost of production. They want 1½ cents per line per gross and 15 per cent ad valorem.

I have been told by various members of the Ways and Means Committee, who are now considering a piecemeal revision of the tariff on only three subjects, that it is probable that the pearl-button industry will have to wait until a general revision of the tariff can be made. Now, gentlemen, I have no doubt that the sword of Damocles hangs over hundreds of splendid American industries, but I know of no more alarming situation than threatens the fresh-water pearl-button industry. If we wait until the receiver dismantles the factories and the skilled workmen have scattered, it will be too late to administer the tonic then—the patient will be dead. Let us save this industry, with its 20,000 jobs, in this hour when we are looking everywhere for employment for the boys that come back from France. Why give this employment to the crafty oriental, while our boys walk the streets in idleness?

I appeal to all of you, but especially to the men from the States where this industry is located, to urge that quick, speedy, and effective action be taken by the Ways and Means Committee of the House. An exhaustive investigation has been made by the Tariff Board, and its report is before you, and I call your attention to the fact that the Taussig Tariff Commission has only reported on five or six industries, this being one of them. Why the necessity of delay? I can not go back to my constituents of Martin County and the men working on the rivers without being in a position to report to them that I have raised my voice in their behalf, and put forth every possible effort to have the earliest action possible upon this matter that is of such urgent importance.

Naval Bill.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. JOHN W. RAINEY,
OF ILLINOIS,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Monday, June 16, 1919.

Mr. JOHN W. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, it is a source of great pleasure for me to learn that the Secretary of the Navy proposes to honorably discharge all men except the Regulars immediately upon the declaration of peace and not take advantage of the law that would permit their retention for six months after that period; also that the men who enlisted between the time we declared war and the time that the armistice was signed, even though they enlisted for four years, will be considered by the department as having enlisted only for the duration of the war.

It is very difficult for my people back home to understand, now that the war is over, the necessity of keeping their boys in service, and I am importuned each day with a deluge of mail that it is almost impossible to answer requesting that I assist in the release of their boys.

The parents and the families need their assistance and support; positions are awaiting a great number of them on their return, and I do wish we could effect some legislation to bring this about as speedily as possible.

A great number of these requests are from the wives who willingly gave up their husbands during the great conflict and secured work of some kind or other to sustain themselves and families while we were battling the Hun. Now that hostilities are ended, they want them back, and I am very anxious to see them returned as soon as it can be accomplished.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. OSCAR R. LUHRING,
OF INDIANA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Wednesday, June 18, 1919.

On the bill (H. R. 3854) for repeal of the daylight-saving law.

Mr. LUHRING. Mr. Speaker, I favor the repeal of this so-called daylight-saving law because I believe in supporting such legislation as will result in the greatest good to the greatest numbers, and I am convinced from the great mass of correspondence that I have received, not only from my own the first district of Indiana, but from various parts of the United States, that this law is objectionable to the great majority of the people of this country. It is particularly obnoxious to the farmer, the miner, the laboring man, and the business man in the smaller and rural communities. It is favored only by a certain class of people in the larger cities, notable among whom are professional men, department-store heads, and other business executives.

There is almost universal complaint from the coal miners, truck gardeners, and farmers in southern Indiana. In some parts of my district the coal miner does not live at the mouth of the mine, but in some city or town some distance away, and in order to get to his work it is necessary that he get up before sunrise to have his breakfast and make the train or car for the mine so as to begin the day's toil one hour ahead of sun time. This works a hardship on his wife, because she must get up even earlier to prepare the breakfast. His work is finished while the sun is still high, but in order that he may secure sufficient sleep for his next day's work he must go to bed while it is still light and, in the summer time, while it is still hot. Men who are engaged in the arduous work of mining deserve some consideration, and their comfort and necessities should outweigh legislation in favor of the pleasure and convenience of those more fortunately situated.

The farmer, in my judgment, has been the hardest hit by this law. The most frequent cause of complaint from him is his inability to proceed with his work at the early hour because of the dew. From one to two hours are lost waiting for the sun to dry the fields. Under sun time this hour would be saved and could be added to the latter part of the afternoon. That hour, by the way, and as every farmer knows, is the best for harvest work of the 24. During this idle hour the farmer must employ his hired help at some trifling task, and then in the evening, when there is plenty of light and conditions are most favorable for work, suspend all effort until the next day. Farm labor in southern Indiana is scarce. The hired man who worked from sunup until sundown is no longer to be had at any price. The farm hand of to-day is rapidly assimilating the hours of labor in the industries and, in rapidly increasing number, quits with the blowing of the whistle in the near-by town.

I hold no special brief for the farmer, but I lose patience with the proposition advanced by those favoring the law that the farmers ought to be willing to adjust themselves to the new conditions, notwithstanding the inconvenience and loss such conditions may entail. Why not the farmers ask that the city dwellers do the adjusting? He can with very good grace say that his labor produces all the food for both. He surely can urge that, of all people in the world, he, more than anyone, must adjust his work to prevailing weather conditions. He must make hay while the sun shines. The whole work of the farm, and I mean the outdoor work, depends on sun and rain—work when the sun shines, no work when it rains, and perhaps for several days after. That is the material difference between the farmer and the city dweller. The farmer must make every hour count if we are to have plenty. Hence it is easier in all respects for the city population to do the adjusting.

Another consideration which, from the standpoint of the farmer, prompts the repeal of this law is the difficulty he finds in maintaining his relationship to the church, the store, and the various amusements. Village and city stores under the present law close at 5 o'clock sun time, the very best hour in the day for farm work. Churches close their evening services while it is yet daylight, and, even though he were so inclined, he can not attend the movies or similar amusements, because they begin while he is still in the midst of his work.

We are all complaining about the high cost of living and are earnest in our desire to reduce it. Has it occurred to you that if this law is not repealed we will add from 12½ to 25 per cent to the cost of farm products? I was very much impressed by the statement of Mr. Thomas C. Atkeson, representative of the National Grange, Patrons of Husbandry, which, by the way, is the largest organization of farmers in the United States, with State organizations in 33 States.

Mr. Atkeson said, and I think you will agree that he is authority, that this law will decrease the productivity of the country 12½ to 25 per cent. If that be true, "somebody will have to pay for that 12½ per cent," as he very aptly remarked.

It has been said that this extra hour of daylight is of particular benefit to the laboring classes. Of course, there is divided opinion on this, as well as on any other subject affecting the daily habits of 100,000,000 people. What I am most concerned about is the great majority sentiment, and it seems to me that if the laboring classes of this country were demanding the retention of this law the Illinois State Labor Federation and the Federation of Labor would not ask its repeal. On the 10th of this month the Federation of Labor, at its annual convention at Atlantic City, N. J., by a vote of 450 to 180 voted down a resolution favoring the law and protesting against its repeal by this Congress.

Canada enforced the daylight-saving law as a war measure, but since the signing of the armistice repealed it.

The present law was enacted as a war measure, and, while I will not go to the extent of saying that all war measures should be repealed, I am convinced that this particular measure should be, because it works a hardship on the great mass of American people.

My vote for the repeal of the law is not prompted by personal considerations. It is my earnest desire in this, as in all other matters likely to arise, to vote and use my influence in favor of that proposition which, as I said in the beginning, means the greatest good to the greatest number.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. CORNELIUS A. McGLENNON,

OF NEW JERSEY,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Wednesday, June 18, 1919.

Mr. McGLENNON. Mr. Speaker, we are to-day to legislate on a very important provision of law—one which was conceived as a war measure, but which now seems to have gained such remarkable merit as was not contemplated or anticipated in its original enactment. This measure was enacted as a war measure, but it did not take very long for the people to realize its distinctive and beneficial advantages—advantages which the people of my district, of all classes, wish to have retained. The repeal of this measure unfortunately brings up the question of the city versus the urban districts, the good of the few against the many, and resolves itself into the question, Does the greater number of people demand it? Speaking reservedly and for my district, I have received hundreds of letters and telegrams bearing on the retention of this wholesome legislation, and I have not received a single request asking for its repeal. Labor and capital, the employee and employer, are united in asking for the maintenance of this legislative enactment, which has given to them and their families, with no loss to industry and production, an additional 60 minutes of daylight to promote their health and morals, to add to their physical strength the benefits that must surely accrue from this most beneficial and much-desired legislation.

Daylight-Saving Bill.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. CHARLES J. THOMPSON,

OF OHIO,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Wednesday, June 18, 1919.

Mr. THOMPSON of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I represent a great and imperial district in the extreme northwestern portion of the State of Ohio, covering a territory approximately as large as the States of Rhode Island and Delaware combined. According to the Federal census of 1910, there were 21,000 farms in the district, the value of which, including buildings and farm machinery, amounted to $190,584,467. My district is a part of that great and fertile empire extending from the Great Lakes to the Gulf of Mexico, bounded on the west by the Rockies and on the east by the Alleghenies, and known as the bread basket of the world. The great body of the people living in this section are agricultural and are opposed to the so-called daylight-saving law and demand its repeal. As an evidence of how my constituents view the situation, permit me to have read an illuminating letter from a leading business firm of Edgerton, Ohio, as follows:

EDGERTON, OHIO, April 14, 1919.

CHARLES J. THOMPSON, M. C.,
Defiance, Ohio.

DEAR SIR: We are writing you in regard to the changing of the time from standard time. Last year there was not so much complaint about it, but this year there is a great deal of dissatisfaction in regard to it, and especially among the farmers and the smaller towns in general. Now, the small amount raised on the town lot is very small in comparison to the loss to the farmer with this change, as there are seasons of the year when the farmer can not get at his work so early in the morning which this new time compels him to. When he has hired help (and that is expensive now) they will quit at 5.30 in the evening, which is the very best time for his work. I was talking to a gardener here a few days ago, and he told me of his losing $100 worth of tomatoes last fall by frost on account of this time, as it was too wet in the morning to get at it as early as his men came out to pick; and this was on Saturday, and he offered to pay them double time if they would stay and pick tomatoes for him, but they would not do it, and the frost on Saturday and Sunday nights spoiled all of the balance of his crop. This is just one instance of many that we hear. So you can see what hardship this works on the farmer.

And in regard to the business places, it keeps them open from an hour to an hour and a half longer in the evening than on the standard time, which is no saving in the matter of light and fuel. So we are asking you to use your influence to see that this change of time is discontinued.

Yours, respectfully,

LEE-BUDA CO.

I shall vote, Mr. Speaker, to repeal the daylight-saving law, because I feel that I am correctly representing my constituents and following out their wishes.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. HENRY I. EMERSON,

OF OHIO,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Monday, June 23, 1919.

Mr. EMERSON. Mr. Speaker, I have always contended that it is the duty of this country to protect the lives and property of its citizens, wherever they may be, as long as they are in the lawful pursuit of their affairs. I feel that we have been somewhat negligent in this matter in the past, and especially as regards the protection of the lives and property of our citizens in Mexico.

I took occasion the other day to commend the action of Secretary of War Baker in ordering the United States troops across the border for the purpose of protecting the lives and property of American citizens, because of our negligence in insisting that the rights of our citizens in Mexico be protected by the Mexican Government.

Many Americans have been killed and millions of dollars' worth of property of Americans has been destroyed. How long will we permit this? If I had my way, I would send the Army into Mexico and let it remain there until some stable form of government was established in Mexico. If I could have my way, I would seize Lower California and all that part of Mexico north of the thirty-first parallel of latitude and hold the same until Mexico had compensated Americans for the property destroyed.

Some administration at some time is going to do this very thing. Had we protected the rights of Americans in Mexico in the past years we would not have had to go to war with Germany. Why should not the Kaiser sink the Lusitania? We had never avenged the wrongs done against our citizens in Mexico, and he had good reason to believe we would not avenge any wrong he might commit against the citizens of this country.

To-day many Americans in Mexico claim the protection of the British Government, because they know they will be protected, whereas if they admitted that they were Americans their lives and their liberty would not be respected. The time is not far distant when the United States will send her Army into Mexico to protect the lives and property of our citizens, and will remain there and see that they are protected. The sooner the better. We have insisted that the Monroe doctrine be not interfered with in the drafting of the league of nations. If European nations are to keep off the American Continent, it becomes our duty to see that things move orderly on this side of the Atlantic.

Now that the American Nation has completed its undertaking in the great World War in winning the greatest fight for the preservation and uplift of free nations and their peoples, a result leading to the accomplishment of a world's democracy, its occurs to me it is our imperative duty to turn our eyes and almost constant and undivided attention to the establishment of a permanent stable government in the Republic joining us south of the Rio Grande.

It is not my intention or desire to occupy the valuable time of the House at the moment, whose deliberations are needed to adjust important appropriation bills for the approaching fiscal year, and shall therefore give notice that I shall in the near future avail myself of an opportunity to talk at length on the problems confronting the American Congress pertaining to our duty in protecting the lives and property of our people in Mexico, as well, likewise, the lives and property of the people of other nations, as we have obligated ourselves to do under the provisions and policies of the Monroe doctrine.

Americans generally in the United States have little conception of the true conditions in Mexico. They know little of the habits and customs of its people. Generally speaking, they are ignorant of the vast mineral and agricultural resources of our southern neighbors. Thousands of our American travelers touring Mexico see little of the vast riches of that country only from the plate-glass windows of a Pullman car and observations obtained in and around the cities reached by rail, in which cities only the aristocracy in particular are able to live.

They little realize that only a very short while ago Mexico had an estimated population of about 16,000,000 souls. I say estimated population for the reason that at no time has a systematic enumeration of the inhabitants been taken, and principally, very undoubtedly, for the reason that the country is lacking sufficient intelligence to take a census; and, furthermore, they seemingly do not have any use for one if it were possible to take a census.

Again, generally speaking, our citizens are unmindful of the fact that of these 16,000,000 people 12,000,000 of them are totally illiterate. And can it not be wondered why, since the arrival of Cortez at Vera Cruz in 1545, that such a nation is in constant rebellion and guerilla warfare?

Mr. Speaker, I have given much thought to existing conditions in Mexico, which conditions have maintained for more than three centuries, with little or no improvement.

True, it can be said that Mexico has advanced from time to time only at intervals of a few years; but the erection of industrials and the broadening of agricultural and mining operations have only been consummated to be torn asunder by rebellious mobs against the pilfering and grafting methods of the country's grafting public officials—Federal, State, and municipal.

I have talked with and heard interestingly the stories told by several Americans who have traveled over Mexico from the border to the Isthmus of Tehuantepec on horse and mule back; men who have traveled the trails over mountains, through valleys, barrancas, and canyons; with men who have come in contact with the people of isolated towns and villages in the mountains and valleys two and three hundred miles away from cities, roads, and railroads.

The only ingress and egress to and from these places of habitation and production is by narrow and dangerous trails, over which travel the mule trains with their cargoes of ores, tropical and semitropical fruits, tobacco, coconuts, sugar cane, cotton, and numerous other products of the fertile valleys to find their destination at the markets of the larger cities.

Can you imagine that during the periods of rest from insurrections and rebellions that thousands, yes, millions, of acres of land in Mexico are cultivated, or, in fact, plowing and cultivation is being done or attempted by ox teams? That these vast haciendas or farms owned by the few wealthy class are worked by the peon class, who receive 25 cents Mexican money per day for their labor from sunrise to sunset, in addition to which they receive a pittance of corn and beans—maize and frijoles—for themselves and families of from 3 to 10 children?

The people of Mexico are divided into two distinct classes—the wealthy, who are immensely rich, and the poor, who are miserably poor and illiterate.

The wealthy or ruling class is divided into five or six factions, at all times lined up for warfare against the faction having control of governmental functions.

The leaders and lieutenants of these warring, grafting factions wear the costly sombrero, silver-trimmed costumes, decorated with revolvers, stilettos, and other attractive human blood-producing equipment, mounted on fine horses or mules, ride over the trails, through haciendas, and villages, and by firing their revolvers in air are successful in a short space of time of obtaining hundreds of these poor peons of the farms and villages to follow them, and these poor, ignorant peons have at the time no conception of the purpose of their mission and are led off to be slaughtered in conflict with the opposing faction or drop dead on the trails for want of sustenance.

To discuss the condition of the women and children left behind is to only picture starvation and death.

It can be truthfully said that the people of Mexico are hospitable in the extreme. Even the humble peon is ever ready to give to the traveler any or all his portion of life's necessities, and the offer of compensation for a meal of tortillas is distasteful to them. It is this class of people, whose desire to be generous and industrious, and whose offspring should be afforded the opportunities of free education enabling them to become faithful, industrious, and good citizens, that our attention should be given, and the quicker this Government will extend the helping hand to these millions of suffering people by a determined policy of aggressive interference against these oppressive and rebellious factions, and hold them to strict rules of law ond order, the quicker these poor people will be given a chance permanently to pursue their vocations and secure their proper proportion of the public funds to educate their children to become useful and industrious citizens.

We have accomplished this in Cuba and the Philippines and can do it in Mexico.

The weakness, lack of determination, and seeming indifference of this administration has resulted in the premeditated insult to our flag in Mexico some years ago at Tampico, and as yet the demand of this Government, or rather the present administration, on the Mexican Government that the Stars and Stripes be saluted, has not been carried out.

Mr. Speaker, I hold in my hand an editorial which appeared in the Washington Post of June 18, present month, which I desire to have read and made a part of my remarks, headed "America's duty to Mexico."

AMERICA'S DUTY TO MEXICO.

Rarely have American citizens at any period been subjected to the doubt and anxiety that now surround and confound the foreign policies of the United States. Much of the confusion is due to the unexpected developments of the war, but much of it has been avoidable. Some of the public mystification has resulted from the absence and silence of the President of the United States. In the absence of that bond of sympathy which usually unites a President and the people, which can exist only when the people are kept informed, the public falls back upon rumors and apprehensions, some of which are baseless. It is a situation that makes for mischief by giving foreign nations the impression that the Government of the United States is divided. Advantage will be taken of this supposed internal conflict, both by friendly and unfriendly nations, to advance their own ends at American expense. That is only natural and to be expected.

Apparently there is not an American living who can rely upon any American policy concerning Mexico. Every citizen of this country is affected, or may be affected, by Mexican developments, and yet the subject is shrouded in impenetrable mystery and doubt. There is no consistency of action based upon any known rule of policy, law, or even expediency. Admirable action, founded upon right and law, has been followed sometimes by action so inconsistent that the American people have abandoned the effort to understand the principle, if any, which guided their Government.

Yet Mexico will not down. It is worse than Banquo's ghost, for that was only an apparition, while Mexico comes to the council table in the flesh, a ghastly figure of famine and blood. There is no pushing Mexico away by heated words. The wounded and dying nation stares at America, and from the parched lips comes the accusing question, "What have I done to you?"

Bandits fight like vultures over the body of Mexico. An organization of militarized bandits headed by Carranza is the recognized government. An organization of bandits headed by Pancho Villa is at work trying to dislodge the Carranza band of robbers in order that a fresh band may pillage the Mexican people and such foreigners as remain. The United States has recognized Carranza, who possesses Ciudad Juarez. Villa's band attacks, and bullets fly into El Paso. American forces thereupon cross the line and chase the Villa band away, thus shielding the Carranza band and strengthening its hold upon the Mexican people. The next day the usurper in the City of Mexico causes a protest to go forth against the "invasion of the sovereignty of Mexico." Villa, thwarted, takes steps to retaliate upon every American he encounters, and if opportunity permits he will make a raid across the line and murder more Americans. In the meantime the people of Mexico are starving, with railroads and mines shut down, money debased, life unsafe, and all the operations of government paralyzed if not abandoned.

Has America no duty toward Mexico? Is this Nation bound only to go to the aid of France and never to the aid of the dying millions below the Rio Grande? Do Americans owe a duty only to distant peoples, like the Armenians, the Turks, or the Albanians, and not to the Mexicans?

The stupidity of employing the United States Army against one set of Mexican bandits and thus aiding the opposing set is so gross that even the War Department should be able to see it. The futility of the action equals its stupidity. What was gained, except the intensified resolve by both Carranzistas and Villistas to kill all Americans found at their mercy? A week ago the American authorities refused to permit Carranza soldiers to pass through Texas to defend Juarez, the excuse being that it would show favoritism and thus enrage Villa and lead to reprisals by him against Americans. Now the United States Army goes down and attacks Villa himself—not vigorously and effectively, but just enough to sting him into making reprisals on defenseless Americans! If the United States Army would pursue Villa and capture or kill him the "invasion" of Mexico would be more than justified. Or if it should clean out the Carranza outfit it would be doing equally good work for the Mexican people. But in Mexico, as in Russia, the rule is, while intermeddling, to avoid anything effective or decisive.

If it be true that Great Britain would take a mandate for Mexico under the league of nations, the American cup of humiliation would be complete. There is no denying that Great Britain would perform the task well, but this very fact would bring into sharper contrast the feebleness and failure of America in doing its duty. The league of nations, however, is not yet a reality so far as the United States is concerned. Possibly a way will be found whereby America will befriend Mexico before taking over the government of Armenia, Turkey, or Albania.

Every word of this editorial meets my views, and I am in hearty sympathy with its contents.

Mexico is, in my opinion, the heaviest mineralized country on the Western Hemisphere. Her valleys are rich and highly productive, her climate ideal and continuously even, and her mountains loaded with expansive reservoirs of water and can easily find its way to irrigate the fertile valleys, and to give to the people their proper proportion of land and natural resources, together with permanent opportunity to work and operate these lands, and facilities for the necessary education of their children, Mexico will hold a position industrially, commercially, and financially among all American Republics to which it is entitled; and it is our urgent duty that we encourage progress and happiness among the people of Mexico, if it take the entire military and naval forces of this country to enter Mexico and restore law and order and establish for the downtrodden people a permanent, stable government by the people, of the people, and for the people to enforce it.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. MARION E. RHODES,

OF MISSOURI,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Wednesday, June 18, 1919.

On the bill (H. R. 3854) for repeal of the daylight-saving law.

Mr. RHODES. Mr. Speaker, there are many public questions on which the people of my district do not agree, but, in my opinion, about 9 people out of every 10 do agree the so-called "daylight-saving act" should have been repealed long ago. In fact, we regard the law as a failure from the very start and believe there never was any good reason for such a law, because it has worked a great hardship upon the people.

Personally I hold it never accomplished the results claimed for it and can be justified upon but one ground only, namely, that of being a war measure. Now that the war is over and the reasons for the creation of the law having disappeared the law itself should disappear. Let me say in this connection that when it does disappear I trust it will never return to pester the American people.

In the first place, this so-called "daylight-saving act" was wholly an experiment. It was a misnomer and a failure of the very worst sort; yet I feel certain Congress did what it thought at the time was a wise thing. Everybody wanted to win the war, and wanted it won as quickly as possible, so daylight saving was tried. Many other new and untried things were attempted and found successful, but daylight saving will long be remembered as the most mischievous and pestiferous legal experiment this country ever undertook. As a light-saving device, here is one of many practical examples: In the lead-mining section of southeast Missouri, where the workingman lives from 1 to 3 miles from the mines, he has to get up so early in the morning that his wife is compelled to prepare his breakfast by lamplight and he has to eat his breakfast by lamplight in order to reach his place of employment by 7 o'clock. This was true all during the month of May, and is yet true even at a time when the days are at their very longest. I assume the same thing is true in all parts of the United States of similar latitude. The American farmer, who is compelled everywhere to rise early and work late, was perhaps more inconvenienced as a class than anyone else.

According to the committee report, here are some of the reasons urged by the farmers and laboring people of America in support of the repeal of the daylight-saving act:

CLINTON GRANGE, No. 370,
Clinton, N. Y., May 28, 1919.

Whereas the daylight-saving law, after a fair trial, has proven to be not only of no benefit, but an added burden to the farmer, in that it increases his expense for labor; that it causes him to use artificial light to do early morning work; that daylight is wasted; that the farmer's working hours are lengthened; that loss of sleep is gradually but surely undermining his health; and, further, that the daylight-saving law is a travesty thrown in the face of the farmers throughout the country: Therefore be it

Resolved, That Clinton Grange, No. 370, in regular session convened, May 24, 1919, is hereby opposed to the said daylight-saving law and requests that our Representatives in Congress and in the Senate vote for its repeal; and be it

Resolved, That we lend our united support to the National Grange in its efforts to bring about the repeal of said law; and be it

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be sent to the office of the National Grange at Washington, D. C., and to our Representatives in Congress and in the Senate.

Adopted.

W. G. COMSTOCK, Master.
THOMAS E. ROBERTS, Secretary.

OKLAHOMA CITY, February 1, 1919.

Noticing by the daily papers that the so-called daylight-saving plan is to be made a permanent thing by law and that all clocks and watches are to be set forward one hour in the spring and back again in the fall, we, the undersigned employees of railroads, wish to register a protest against the misnamed plan.

Most of us have to get up at 5 or 5.30 a. m. in order to get to our work by 7.30 or 8 a. m., and during most of the year we get up, eat breakfast, and leave home before daylight—for which we pay the gas and electric companies their increased toll. If the clocks are left alone, we can get some little benefit in the midsummer by having reduced gas and light bills, but this law deprives us of this little benefit, and we are compelled to go to work in the dark the year around.

If there was any class of workers who got any benefit out of the plan, we would cheerfully bear our share of the burden for the benefit of the rest, but we fail to see wherein anyone derives any benefit.

We therefore petition your honorable body to investigate further and take some action toward allowing the working hours to remain as they were "before the war."

[Twenty-two signatures.]

MOUNT VERNON, N. H., May 27, 1919.

Hon. EDWARD H. WASON,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Whereas it seems to the best interest of the farmers of New Hampshire that the so-called daylight-saving law be repealed, we, the members of Prospect Grange, No. 21, of Mount Vernon, respectfully urge you to use your influence to have this law repealed at this extra session of Congress.

Respectfully, yours,

EDWARD A. MILNE,
Secretary Prospect Grange.
W. P. JENKINS, Master.

At a regular meeting of Mount Allison Grange, No. 308, Patrons of Husbandry, held at Allison, Colo., April 25, 1919, the following preamble and resolutions were unanimously adopted:

Whereas the present so-called daylight-saving law is detrimental to the interests and works an undue hardship upon the farmers of this community: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the members of Mount Allison Grange, No. 308, unanimously oppose the present law and demand an immediate repeal of same.

Resolved, That these resolutions be entered upon the minutes of this lodge; that a copy of them be sent to our State Representatives at Washington, D. C., and to the National Grange.

MACHINISTS HELPERS' LOCAL UNION, NO. 868.
Huntington, W. Va., May 16, 1919.

Hon. HARRY WOODYARD, M. C.

DEAR SIR: At a regular meeting of Local No. 868, International Association of Machinsts' Helpers, at Huntington, W. Va., I was instructed by unanimous vote to write you, asking you to use your influence toward having the time turned back one hour, as the working day has been reduced to eight hours and as the warm weather is coming on when one hour's rest in the morning is worth two hours in the evening when it is so warm. Also this fast time was only a war measure. Now, that the war is over, we feel that the time should be turned back to normal. Please give our request your consideration, and oblige, DAVIS MYERS, Recording Secretary.

THOMPSON, CONN., May 6, 1919.

Resolved, That Quinnatisset Grange, No. 65, Patrons of Husbandry, hereby unanimously express our disapproval of the so-called daylight-saving law, which is a serious hindrance to the farming industry. In these times, when labor is so expensive and difficult to obtain and when the demands for shorter hours of labor have to be met, the substitution of an early morning hour with its heavy dew for one hour of the afternoon works a great hardship, and is detrimental to the farmers' interest. We therefore most respectfully urge that in the coming session of the United States Congress this law should be repealed, and this unnecessary burden be removed from the farming interests of the country.

Mrs. HANNAH W. BATES, Secretary.

Not only have the farmers found the law a hardship, but the working people everywhere to a very large extent oppose it. The American Federation of Labor, now in session at Atlantic City, by a vote of 450 to 180, went on record a few days ago as opposing the daylight-saving act. Supporters of the act argue that the repeal of the law is urged by the electric light, gas, and fuel corporations. The facts indicate there is not a word of truth in the contention, because the chief complaint arises among people who have little connection with such corporations, either as patrons or stockholders.

In conclusion let me call attention to another phase of the question. For 5,000 years the ancients studied the phenomena of the heavenly bodies in search of the true science of the solar system, and finally decided the earth and its inhabitants were more largely subject to the influence of the stars than the sun. So the science of astrology was adopted as the correct philosophy, and every man in his day either succeeded or failed according to the particular star under which he happened to be born. But about the middle of the sixteenth century Copernicus announced that the sun was the center of the solar system and that the earth and all other planets revolved about it as a common center; that the earth on which we live maintains certain varying yet fixed positions with regard to the sun, and that body is the fountain of all earthly light and heat. Hence the seasons and the changes thereof, as well as the varying length of day and night, are now understood to be subject to that well-ordered plan in nature known to us all as the Copernican theory.

With the passing of the old philosopher went the hourglass and sundial, both useful inventions in their day, but highly impractical for a commercial age. The trouble about the hourglass was it took an extra hand to feed it, and the sundial could neither be depended upon in cloudy weather nor indoors. I believe the first sundial ever mentioned in recorded history is found in the thirty-eighth chapter of Isaiah, in a reference to the "dial of Ahaz." Ahaz is said to have lived 700 years before the Christian era, and the sundial was continued as an instrument of common use until the middle of the eighteenth century. So when the civilized world accepted the Copernican theory, modern inventors gave us the clock and watch as devices indicating the hour of the day. And in perfecting these modern inventions the equation of time has been determined, based upon the agency of the sun and accepted both by the scientific and industrial world. The understanding being that it is noon the very minute the sun reaches his greatest height above the horizon, because the sun is the chief agent in measuring time. We are therefore justified in drawing this conclusion: After thousands of years of study, science and invention have given us one fixed standard of time and devices for indicating the same. In other words, sun time is natural time, and in my opinion it suits the wants of man much better than this so-called daylight-saving scheme, and the closer we stick to it the better we will get along.

The so-called daylight-saving law is a snare and a delusion, because it saves neither light nor fuel, and is scientifically incorrect.

Telephone Rates.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. RICHARD YATES,

OF ILLINOIS,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Wednesday, June 18, 1919.

Mr. YATES. Mr. Speaker, I have one thing to contribute to this discussion. On the 1st day of January, 1914, I became a member of the State Public Utilities Commission of Illinois, Gov. Edward F. Dunne having done me the honor to appoint me. I was a minority member of that commission, he being a Democrat and I a Republican. I served on that commission throughout the years 1914, 1915, 1916, and until July 1, 1917. It was a hard-working commission of five members, having jurisdiction over the rates and service of all public utilities in Illinois, including those of Chicago, and also of all their issues of stocks and bonds and other securities. There are about 100 railroads in Illinois and about 100 gas companies and about 100 electric-light companies, and, in addition to other utilities, there were 888 telephone companies—more now, I think. The telephone docket was assigned to me. In other words, all of the telephone cases came before me for trial—hundreds and hundreds of them. It became absolutely necessary that I should know telephone rates, and know them thoroughly.

It was impossible to have such a constant and continuous relation to them and not learn all about their building and all the elements going into them. I ought to know about telephone rates. Perhaps I ought not to say it, because I want to be modest; but I think I really do know. If there is one thing which I do know it is that to make a valuation and investigation and schedule of rates which would be thoroughgoing and workmanlike, for example, in the case of the Chicago Telephone Co., would take not less than six months. It took seven months to investigate the telephone rates of the Central Union Telephone Co. at Peoria, Ill., and when I left the commission that investigation was still going on. The Chicago Telephone Co. has 350,000 subscribers—350,000 instruments. If every expert of the Illinois State Commission were put to work to-day they could not complete a satisfactory examination and a reasonably fair schedule in six months, in my opinion. When you add all of the difficulties and problems of 887 other telephone companies, large and small, you formulate a gigantic task. Every telephone company in Illinois will seek to raise its rates and will file an application therefor and will ask for a hearing. Under these circumstances the State experts will not be able to give their entire time, or anything like it, to the consideration of the rates of the Chicago company. It follows that the 1st day of January, 1920, will find the city of Chicago without a new schedule of rates and without the old schedule of rates existing before the joint resolution was passed a year ago, July 16, 1918, and without the rates put into effect by the Postmaster General under the joint resolution; and that city will be without any rates at all—I mean any telephone rates—unless the bill now pending before us is passed with a provision extending the present rates—the Postmaster General's rates—for six months. In other words, there will be an interval of confusion and chaos. This can be avoided by providing, as the pending House amendment to the Senate bill does provide, for the projecting of the Federal rates into the future for six months.

Personally I believe that one year, or at least nine months, would not be too long an interval. I am quite sure that six months will cause a great deal of hurry and haste which will be harmful to everybody and helpful to no one, but it is a possibility that the six months will serve the purpose. I am convinced that 90 days would not do so. In all this I am taking into consideration the needs and interests of the public, and not merely the interests of the company in Chicago or of the hundreds of companies outside of Chicago. The interests of the public are quite as much aided and enhanced as are the interests of the various companies by the allowance of adequate time to permit the State commissions or regulatory bodies to pass on the hundreds of applications which will be filed. It is no favor or benefit or advantage to any community to inflict upon it a schedule of rates too low for the company to live on. The public must have and are entitled to adequate service, and adequate service at reasonable rates, but the service can be adequate only when the rates are reasonable. If a hasty schedule is adopted—I mean if a schedule is put through in a hurry—it is usually too low and has to be revised. Every State Public Utilities Commission starts in with the idea that it will save a large amount of money to the public by making large reductions in rates, but it finds out very soon that unless the company can charge reasonable rates the service is not, and can not be, adequate. Hence no enlightened commissioner in the United States, who belongs to a commission having a large docket, will be found objecting to this extension of the Federal rates for six months—at least, that is my opinion. I concur in, and approve of, and will vote to support the adoption of that part of the committee report which reads as follows:

Your committee believed that the period of 90 days as contained in the Senate act was too short to permit the commissions or regulatory bodies to pass on the hundreds of applications which would be filed, in view of the differing requirements and conditions in the several States, as in Ohio, for instance, where before an application can be passed upon a valuation must be made, or in Michigan, where the municipality must join with the company in making the application. While we are eager to turn back the wire systems at the earliest possible date and limit the operation of the Federal rates to a reasonable period, we feel compelled to extend this period beyond 90 days for the reasons based largely upon the physical limitations imposed upon the commissions or regulatory bodies. On the other hand, we believe a period of one year too long. It would invite delay and dilatory tactics on the part of some of the companies to secure a proper readjustment of their rates. We believe under the circumstances, and in the interest of fairness both to companies and to the public, that a period of six months will be sufficient. Hence the amendments proposed to the Senate bill.

Repeal of the Daylight-Saving Law.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. CARVILLE D. BENSON, OF MARYLAND,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Wednesday, June 18, 1919.

Mr. BENSON. Mr. Speaker, the farmers of the country are unquestionably opposed to the daylight-saving plan. This includes the gardener, trucker, dairy farmer, and grain farmer without exception. It has been clearly shown here that the efficiency of the farmer has been reduced from 12 to 20 per cent. Everyone that knows anything about farming realizes that the hour that is cut off in the afternoon is one of the most valuable hours of the day on the farm. The farmer who employs hired help is not in a position to ask and can not reasonably expect his farm hands to work by sun time while the employees of all other industries measure their day by the clock. They come in the morning to begin work at the usual hour, measuring time by the clock, which has been advanced one hour, and the first hour of the work period is necessarily spent in killing time while the dew lingers on the crops. The sun is an hour late according to clock time in its work of preparing the fields for the day's task. In this manner and for this reason the farmer can not prevent his loss of one hour per day for each man employed on his farm. We all know that hay and grain can not be stored while the dew is on the ground in the morning. We also know that many crops can not be worked advantageously at an early hour—sun time—in the morning.

This, Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, should be sufficient reason for the passage of this bill providing for the repeal of the daylight-saving law, but in my opinion the residents of the cities, who it appears are the chief advocates of continuing the law in force, are not benefited by the daylight-saving plan, especially in a southern climate. During the months of June, July, and August we very frequently have excessively warm weather, and it is impossible to sleep in the small city houses until after midnight. Turning the clock one hour ahead does not cool the atmosphere. The result is the people of the city do not and can not rest until the air has cooled, and being obliged to rise an hour earlier they are deprived of an hour's sleep each night at a time when sleep is most needed to renew their strength and safeguard their health.

The farmers and the members of the Federation of Labor seem to be as one unit in favor of the repeal of this law, and while we would like to please everyone, if it were possible, it seems clear to me that if we are to aid in increasing the productiveness of the farms, advance the interests of labor, and thereby advance the interests of all, this repeal measure should be passed.

The Proposed League of Nations.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. CHARLES F. CURRY,
OF CALIFORNIA,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Monday, June 23, 1919.

Mr. CURRY of California. Mr. Speaker, every normal, civilized human being longs for the time to come when, as foretold in prophecy, "they shall beat their swords into plowshares and their spears into pruning hooks; nation shall not lift up the sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more." But right now we are living in the hypocritical, pharisaical, ragtime age when "from the least of them even unto the greatest of them everyone is given to covetousness, saying peace, peace, when there is no peace."

Everyone abhors war, but there are worse things than war. The sacrifice of personal liberty, of national independence, or of national honor would be worse than war. No nation ever achieved liberty but by the sword, and no nation ever retained liberty longer than it had the ability and willingness and courage to defend it by the sword should occasion require, and no nation ever retained liberty whose citizens were not moral, intelligent, and patriotic and who knew and observed the difference between liberty and license. National liberty without wealth is to be preferred to a nation rolling in wealth but subject to even indirect suzerainty, as personal liberty without wealth is to be preferred to riches and vassalage.

The people of the United States possess wealth and enjoy liberty and independence as a result of attending to their own business and keeping free from entangling alliances with foreign powers.

The league of nations as proposed by President Wilson and approved by ex-President Taft would not elevate the nations of the earth to our standard, but would have a tendency to lower our standard. Liberty is not the natural condition of man; it is the highest expression of government made possible by the best thoughts and best efforts of the best minds that inhabit and have inhabited the earth. The liberty we enjoy is a new thing in government, and dates practically from the Revolutionary War. No other country is free as we are free, not even Switzerland, which is a democracy, maintained as a bumper State by the jealousies of surrounding great nations, and certainly France is not a republic such as we are.

Any American who has studied the league of nations constitution must know we can not subscribe to this constitution and become a part of it without, in a great measure, changing our form of government. We have the best Government in the world and the most enlightened people as a mass, but there are times when the plausible demagogue who appeals to the ideals, the passions, and the prejudices and stirs up the hatreds of the people seems to have more influence than the statesman who appeals to their reason and their intellect.

We have built up a standard for mankind on a higher plane than any other nation in the world. If we enter the proposed league of nations we must either bring up European nations to our standard in every particular way or else we must lower our national standard to meet the level of European if not of Asiatic nations. If we enter the proposed league of nations we must participate more or less in the management of European nations or else the league will be of little force, and if we do this what is to become of the high economic social status of our working people in the United States as compared with the working people in European and Asiatic countries? To bring them up to our standard the whole industrial fabric of the world must be changed or else our present labor standard must be lowered to the European level. There is no use to suggest that this league of nations is simply to prevent war. That declaration means only a hoped-for ultimate result. The things that must be considered in the league of nations are the factors and conditions that lead up to war. They must be controlled in order to prevent war. It is not enough to say that wars of the future can be stopped by simply organizing a league of nations to overwhelm disturbances. If war is to be stopped, the causes of war must be removed, and to do that human nature will have to be changed and selfishness eliminated.

Under the proposed league of nations we would trade off the Monroe doctrine for the obligation to police the world at our expense at the dictation of the league; we would sacrifice our right to control immigration to or emigration from our country. A protective tariff would have to be submitted to the league for its approval. We would sacrifice the right to our coastwise trade for our merchant marine and our right to blockade in case of war without the permission of the league. When our interests were at stake we would not have a vote and would be compelled to abide by the decree of the league, or if we did not our refusal would be an act of war.

The Allies will settle the peace treaty in Europe to suit themselves without giving offense to the United States if it can be avoided, but we should remember that we are not an ally. We failed, refused, and neglected to become an ally and declared war on Germany two and three-quarter years after the Allies declared war on that nation, and for an entirely different reason. We later declared war against Austria, and for an entirely different reason than the Allies did. The only thing we had in common with the Allies was a common Army used against a common enemy, and at that the armies were kept separate, although acting under one command. In our declaration of war against Germany and Austria we stated that we entered the war because Germany and Austria had committed repeated acts of war against the United States.

The war is practically over, so far as we are concerned, and I do not think it is any more our right, our business, or our duty to define boundaries and prescribe the civilization and governments of Europe, or portions of Europe, or any other than the American Continents, because we had the power to do so, than it would have been right for Germany to impose her Kultur and system of government on us had she the power to do so.

The legislation of the Congress and the action of the Senate in approving and disapproving treaties during the next few years will determine whether our country shall remain a Republic with a Constitution that protects all in their life, liberty, and property, whether it shall be an autocracy under which power and wealth are centralized and the rights of the many are ignored, or whether it shall be a mobocracy under which the individual who does not agree with the Government has no rights at all.

President Wilson and ex-President Taft compare the constitution of the league of nations to the Constitution of the United States and the relationship of the nations to the league with the relationship of the States of the Union to the Federal Government. That certainly would be a surrender of nationality and make of the United States a subordinate unit in a league of nations, and even if it would not it would not stop war. The Constitution of the United States is written in plain understandable language, and yet the Supreme Court of the United States from the beginning of the Government to the Civil War wrote hundreds of volumes of decisions on cases involving the conflict of authority and defining the dividing line between the jurisdiction of the States and the jurisdiction of the Federal Government, and yet the irrepressible conflict had to be decided by the arbitrament of arms in the War between the States, the bloodiest and most costly war in history until the present awful international war in Europe, and even to this day the Supreme Court seldom renders a unanimous decision on a case involving a constitutional question.

No two lawyers agree upon the interpretation of any section of the constitution of the proposed league of nations. I fear if it is adopted without being amended so as to safeguard nationality and the rights of individual nations it will lead to a war between the members of the league. It should be remembered there is no proposition to create a league of nations but only a league of nations. Those nations not admitted to the league would feel humiliated, insulted, and revengeful, and when the time came when they could do so would undoubtedly organize another league, and the end no man can foresee, but it almost certainly would end in war. The league of nations is "the Holy Alliance" brought down to date, and is, if possible, more hypocritical and pharisaical.

The world is going through a frightful crisis. I hope and believe our country will be less affected adversely by the readjustment of social, governmental, and economic conditions from the present war to a peace basis than any other. I pray God that the world may become Christianized and live in accordance with His laws, rules, and regulations, but no human agency alone can accomplish that result. The world was one nation speaking one language before the flood and after the flood up to the time of the building of the Tower of Babel. Before the flood the people became so unrighteous that God drowned all the people but the family of Noah. After the flood the people soon again forgot God, and while they were building the Tower of Babel He confused their tongues and scattered them on the face of the earth as separate tribes, nations, and races. In God's good time, as foretold in prophecy, when the world is morally and spiritually prepared for the millennium, we may look for it, but perpetual peace certainly will not grow out of the peace conference in Europe, where there is so much prejudice, passion, and hatred and where even the Allies distrust one another. They speak different languages, think different thoughts, have different ideals, follow different modes of living, believe in different forms of government, and have different religions; each believes his own to be the best, whether he be Christian, Turk, or heathen, white, smoked, or yellow. Until after the battle of Armageddon, which has not as yet been fought, we should remember that St. Paul says:

> God that made the world * * * giveth to all life and breath and all things. And hath made of one blood all nations of men for to dwell on all the face of the earth, and hath determined the times before appointed and the bounds of their habitation.

The conditions in Russia ought to prove conclusively that the world is not prepared to substitute internationalism for national patriotism. Every signatory nation wishes to reserve some particular right for itself that would give it a little advantage over the other members of the league. The fundamental principles of the league are violated by the peace conferees in their treatment of Italy, China, and Korea.

Italy is to be cheated out of Fiume, which was included in "irredeemed Italy," promised to her by the Allies when she cast her lot with them. Japan is to be permitted to occupy Kiaochau and the Shantung Peninsula, that part of China in which Confucius and Mencius were born, lived, and died and are buried. This outrage is being permitted by the peace conference because Japan is militaristically strong and China weak.

Some time ago the Chinese Government burned up $25,000,000 worth of opium and forbade its use in the Republic. Japan and the other great powers agreed to prohibit their citizens and subjects from engaging in the opium trade with China. Japan is keeping the letter of her agreement, but is flooding China, through the Shantung Peninsula, with morphine. Smoking opium is much less deadly than is the hypodermic use of morphine.

Poor, bleeding Korea is being denied her independence by Japan. During the Russo-Japanese War Japan compelled Korea to sign a treaty permitting Japan to occupy and move troops and munitions of war through Korea during the war and pledged herself to evacuate Korea within one year after the war was over. Instead of doing so, Japan disbanded the Korean Army, disarmed the civilian population, placed Japanese in control of the local governments, and assumed entire police control of the country. She then made Korea a province of Japan and changed its name to Chosen. The Koreans are peacefully petitioning and working for their freedom and a restoration of their nationality. As a result, the Japanese soldiers and police have shot and hacked them to death by tens of thousands and have perpetrated as great atrocities on the Koreans as the Germans perpetrated on the Belgians, and worse, as the Belgians had an Army of defense and the Koreans have none.

A few weeks ago a number of Korean men, women, and children that had been shot, clubbed, and stabbed by Japanese soldiers and police for carrying placards on which were printed, "Korea wants her freedom," were being cared for in an American hospital in Seoul. The Japanese arrested the American doctors and nurses and drove the wounded Koreans from the hospital. I wish the peace conference in Europe would immediately frame a treaty of peace that will give peace to the world, so that the people of the world can go to work and stop the anarchy, revolution, Bolshevism, and I. W. W. ism with which so much of the world is being afflicted since the signing of the armistice. After peace has been declared and agreed to the delegates may remain in session and try to work out a league of nations that may have a tendency to minimize the dangers of war, and I hope it may be successful. I do not know whether you have noticed it or not, but the constitution of the proposed league of nations does not provide that the people shall have anything whatever to do with the appointment of its delegates. The members of the present peace conference were appointed, and some of them self-appointed, by the executives of the several nations without even consulting the legislative branches of their Governments.

Mr. Wilson, in his New Freedom, says, "Some men have not yet outgrown the Declaration of Independence." I thank God there are some men who have not outgrown the Declaration of Independence, Lincoln's Gettysburg speech, the Constitution of the United States, the Sermon on the Mount, and the Ten Commandments.

It seems popular with some to run after false gods and political quacks who promise health, wealth, and prosperity to all who will follow them, but if the people follow them and partake of their patent medicines their liberties will be destroyed and go down in anarchy and a despotism will be reared on the ruins of the structure. Without the people immediately stop taking political quack nostrums the Nation will soon be in the same condition as the individual who on his death bed instructed his son to have engraved on his tombstone as his epitaph, "Here lies John Jones. I was well. I wanted to be better. I took physic and died."

Repeal of Daylight-Saving Law.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JOHN W. RAINEY,

OF ILLINOIS,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Wednesday, June 18, 1919.

Mr. JOHN W. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, the repeal of this law would be a serious mistake. It would be detrimental to the best interests of the country, and its repeal is urged on account of its inconvenience to the farmer. The continuance of this law will prove of great benefit to a great majority of the people of this country.

As far as I can analyze the arguments advanced, it resolves itself into a contest between rural and city workers.

Ever since the opening of this Congress Members of this House representing agricultural districts have been tumbling over one another introducing bills to bring about repeal of the law, some of them insisting the demand comes from the laboring class. I can not agree with them as to the latter argument. The millions who sweat and toil in the large industries, in the factories, in the sweatshops, in the wholesale and retail stores of the city, warrant me in saying that if they had an opportunity to vote on this question, if not unanimous in their decision, there would certainly be a preponderance in favor if its continuance. I feel safe in suggesting 90 per cent would vote to continue under present regulations.

Its continuance means a big saving in the conservation of coal, but above and beyond all this as a health measure the benefits accruing to working people, particularly those living in the big cities, are incalculable.

It has benefited them mentally by giving them an extra hour, which they might use to advantage in reading and study. It has benefited them physically by giving them an opportunity to get out of doors and enjoy God's fresh air and sunshine and to indulge in recreation of some kind. It prevents the necessity of working in artificial light, which we all agree is a strain on the eyes and greatly impairs the sight. It reduces the number of accidents in industrial plants, because statistics prove that most of these accidents occur after 4 o'clock in the afternoon. It has benefited them financially by giving them an opportunity to work in their own gardens; also to save about one-third in their gas or electric light bills.

I am willing to admit the farmer may suffer some inconvenience, but feel satisfied, if he would make some slight sacrifice, he could readily overcome the handicap and adjust his time, thereby bringing a little sunshine and happiness into the lives and homes of millions of those who toil in the great cities. After all, the farmer must not consider himself the czar or dictator. Nor should the Members of the House feel there is but one side to this question. I know in advance if the roll is called on this bill the law will be repealed, because the farmers of this country are so thoroughly organized that when they become interested in a measure and start their propaganda working, I know the answer before our names are called, and yet, gentlemen, there are a trifle more than 12,000,000 of people engaged in agriculture, as against more than 25,000,000 working in other lines, and while the people of the city outnumber the farmer two to one, they must submit to his dictation because he is organized and receives from this House whatever he asks. His request seems to be a command to a great majority of our Members. As for myself, I will vote against the repeal of this law.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. THOMAS D. SCHALL,

OF MINNESOTA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Tuesday, June 24, 1919.

Mr. SCHALL. Mr. Speaker, in the great world unrest of war changes are made overnight that would not be accomplished in a cycle of peace. Revolutionary procedures are adopted uncomplainingly, almost without notice, by the people if some one they trust holds out that the change will help to the Nation's victory. Many such changes, into which we were rushed by the exigencies of war, were not for the greatest good of the greatest number, did not help to the winning of the war, and now that sober days of reflection are returning to us will have to be sloughed off.

First among these that should be discarded is the so-called daylight-saving law. This is a pet of the professional class, the semileisure class, the man of the golf club and the amateur gardener, the sojourner at the suburban summer resort, who can all close their desks an hour earlier and hie them to an extra hour of play.

It is not right that for the play hour of one class of the people the whole of another class should be made to suffer. There is nothing to prevent the city man from rising as early as he pleases "to breathe the incomparable fresh air of dawn," now that he had acquired the habit, nothing to prevent the civic and commerce associations from establishing an earlier hour for opening and closing the shops. For those who wish it, let the custom go on; but it is not American to force on the worker a penalty to pay for the pleasure of another class. The man who is benefited insists that the farmer change his mode of life to measure with the new standard. It would be more reasonable that the dwellers in the city, who have less to sacrifice, less at stake, less disadvantage to contend with, should arrange their time to conform.

The plaint of the little child, who had—> —to go to bed by day,

> Who had to go to bed and see
> The birds still hopping on the tree,
> And hear the grown-up people's feet
> Go walking by me on the street—

has more valid basis for objection than in Robert Louis's day. The mothers do not like it that the children have to be robbed of an hour's sleep. No matter if sleep on a hot night does not come to the tossing little chap till after 9, 6 o'clock comes round just as inevitably to rout him out for school. And in the country children who have to walk 3 or 4 miles have to get up before daylight in order to get to school on time, leaving no opportunity to help with chores. Teachers have remarked an increasing restlessness, crankiness, and lack of efficient work in the little ones, a nervousness and tension that is the straight result of not getting sleep enough. Americans, big and little, need more rest, not less sleep.

The economies claimed by those who advocate this law remain to be proved. True, we used less coal last year, but daylight saving can hardly be given credit while the war emergency restricted the output.

Joshua commanded the sun to stand still, and it obeyed, but the Democratic Party out-Joshuaed Joshua by moving the sun an hour forward.

Not even the workers in the cities, who are supposed to be the beneficiaries of this legislation, are pleased. The only result they find from this change is an hour of sleep lost in the morning, when it is cool and there is a chance to rest, while it is impossible to retake that hour from the hot end of the day.

The American Federation of Labor, in recent convention assembled, rejected by an overwhelming majority the proposal to urge defeat of the repeal of this measure.

The new time standard has been especially hard on the farm people of Minnesota, where we are considerably ahead of sun time anyway, being so far west of the meridian where time changes. The hour-a-day loss is a tax on the productive energy of the farm people.

The unsatisfactory labor situation has added to the farmer's burden. Help is scarce and high priced, yet, as is well put in a petition from the farmers of Rockford, Minn., inclosed in the report of your committee—

A farmer's day is from daylight till dark.
A farm laborer's day is from 7 a. m. till 6 p. m.
A farm laborer's day is of value to the farmer only from the time the dew is off the grain till 6 o'clock p. m.
Setting the clock ahead does not dry off the dew, but it does advance the hour of quitting.

I have worked on the farm, and remember how, even under standard time, dew bothered in cultivating corn, tomatoes, and potatoes; in haying, shocking and cutting grain, in stacking, and in digging potatoes with a machine. Although the hired help insist on their day beginning by the new time they can not get to work till the dew is off the grass. And they stop when there is still an hour left for good work, one of the best hours in the whole day.

The animals on the farm regulate their habits by the sun without regard to the clocks. They are unaware of the change in time made by the milk trains. The farmer saves no daylight. He is obliged to rise just that much earlier to get his milk sterilized and meet the early train with his milk and vegetables, or get to market, to accommodate the folks in town. If he is to get enough sleep, he has to go to bed in broad daylight. If he does get a chance to drive to the neighboring town of a Saturday night, after his chores are done, to a movie show or an entertainment, the thing is over before he gets there.

The farmer conformed to the decree as long as the cause for it remained. But no longer is the cause existing. It is a question if ever the benefits of the law were sufficient to call it into existence. If for no other reason than gratitude to the farmer for his loyalty, and the tremendously patriotic service he rendered during the war, planting more and yet more acres, when his sons were called to the colors and his help force was reduced, we should repeal this law.

Now that the industrial danger is past it does not much matter who won the war. But all nations agree that the man who fed the Army, the civilians, and the Allies was the man whose bullets told against the enemy as truly as the boy in the front-line trench or at any other point in that vast line reaching from the shell-torn field back through communicating and supporting line, over the bridge of boats across the treacherous gray waters, to the last line in the loyal patriotic hearts this side the sea.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. AUGUSTINE LONERGAN,

OF CONNECTICUT,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Monday, June 30, 1919,

On the bill (H. R. 3184) to create a Federal power commission and to define its powers and duties; to provide for the improvement of navigation, for the development of water power, for the use of the lands of the United States in relation thereto, and for other purposes.

Mr. LONERGAN. Mr. Speaker, the bill under discussion, with proper amendments, should be passed as soon as possible, so that the United States can start on equal footing with other large nations in the great commercial revival just beginning.

I know of no greater help that this Congress can give in the reconstruction period than to pass the water-power bill.

The first district of Connecticut, which I have the honor to represent, is vitally interested in it, for we have on the Connecticut River, about 12 miles above Hartford, at what is known as the Enfield Rapids, 40,000 horsepower running to waste every day, although it is situated in the heart of a manufacturing district where more than 100,000 horsepower are being manufactured daily out of coal at a high cost to manufacturers.

Power can be supplied to Connecticut concerns within a reasonable radius of the Enfield Rapids at about half the cost of producing steam power. Connecticut has already granted authority for the development of this power, the State of Connecticut owning the bed of the river. The State more than 10 years ago, through its general assembly, went on record as favoring a special act permitting the damming of the river at Windsor Locks. The $5,000,000 necessary for financing this project, I am informed, is ready and waiting. I am told that about 70 Connecticut and Massachusetts men have been organized into a company anxious to see this development made and prepared to invest their money in it. The men include manufacturers, who want the power in their large industries; transportation men, who wish to see the navigable possibilities of the river developed; and men otherwise interested in the growth of the State.

There is no navigation on the Connecticut River above Hartford on account of the Enfield Rapids. The Government has declined to improve the river owing to the expense of placing a dam across it in order to permit boats to surmount the rapids. It has, however, recommended that certain improvements be authorized, provided private capital build a dam at Windsor Locks.

The passage of this act will practically clear the way for wonderul development.

Added to the long story of the water-power controversy is the feature, now palpable to all, that the enactment of the measure will help immeasurably in stimulating industry, without which the United States will lag during this eventful period of reconstruction.

Then, too, there are the other reasons not so important but in themselves compelling. The purpose is to serve the public interest, to safeguard the people against any overcharge for power, to prevent illegal combinations in restraint of trade, and at the same time to permit and encourage the investment of capital in the development of water-power projects in order that the vast amount of hydroelectric power now being wasted in this country can be immediately utilized. From every part of the country there is an insistent demand for electric power. This call comes from the city and from the country, from factory and from farm, from the manufacturing centers of the East, from the arid lands of the West, and from the new industrial cities of the South. More and cheaper electric power is demanded for lighting our houses and streets, for cooking our food, for use in our factories, for moving our railroads now operated by steam and for street railways and for interurban lines, for pumping water for irrigation, and for draining the over-abundantly watered lands of the South.

Cheap electric power is demanded that this country may be on an industrial footing equal to that of the nations of Europe, where, it must be admitted, the development of the new electric chemical industries is far in advance of this country. The present laws have caused what is practically a deadlock between capital and the Government in the development of water powers upon all rivers under the control of the United States. Grants permitted under the terms of the present laws are not such as to encourage the investment of capital in water-power projects. The result is a complete stagnation of water-power developments. The few plants that have been constructed have either been exceptionally favored in their situation or have become bankrupt.

In the attempt to protect the interests of the public preventive measures have been passed, so that the public has been deprived of the great benefits to be secured from the full and adequate development of the water powers of this country. What is needed to-day is a constructive program rather than a destructive one, legislation which will permit and encourage the development of navigation and hydroelectric plants to the utmost, yet at the same time safeguard the people against extortion by high prices for power and combinations to prevent the full development and use of these powers. It is just as important to secure for the public the benefits to be derived from the development of these waterways as it is to protect them against high prices and illegal combinations.

All legislation should be in the public interest, but it is not in the public interest to pass laws which prevent utilization of the greatest natural resources of this country.

It is now time to pass constructive legislation which will enable the development of these water powers on terms fair to the public and to private capital.

It is a mistaken policy to prevent the present development of water powers in the belief that in the future they will be more valuable than now and a large source of income to the United States Government, to be raised through the taxation of these water powers. All taxation must be uniform. Every tax laid on water powers must be paid by the consumers of the power and means a higher price for power to those consumers. The correct policy is to encourage the development of our water powers and to protect the consumers by provisions which will prevent extortionate charges for water power, or a too high rate of return, or more than a reasonable return to capital, a policy which will result in both protecting capital against confiscations and the consumer against extortionate rates.

In addition to increasing power, the bill will add to navigation on the Connecticut River. The present dam has been built since 1831. The plan is now to relocate the dam at the foot of the rapids instead of at their head, and, through locks and canals, to provide a continuous journey from Hartford to Springfield and Holyoke.

No one, I am sure, feels that our waterways should be left to the exploitation of private interests, but a program fair to all concerned should be inaugurated. Perhaps in a generation or two the Government will own all water power, but in the meantime they should be developed along lines laid down by the Government.

The development of the water power at Windsor Locks is a matter which concerns all of the towns situated near that place. This is a manufacturing as well as an agricultural part of the State of Connecticut. The communities which will be directly interested and their population in 1910 follow:

Hartford	98,915
New Britain	43,916
East Hartford	8,138
Windsor	4,178
South Windsor	2,251
East Windsor	3,362
Windsor Locks	3,715
Suffield	3,841
Enfield	9,719
Rockville	9,087
Manchester	13,641
Stafford Springs	5,235
Glastonbury	4,796
Bristol	13,502
Southington	6,516

To-day the population of the above communities, especially Hartford, New Britain, and Bristol, has increased, perhaps, 50 per cent over the figures given.

Every one of these communities is in direct line for the benefits which would result from the developing of the water power at this part of the river. These cities and towns are among the most prosperous as well as the oldest in the State. Among their residents are thousands of people who are engaged in manufacturing and agricultural pursuits and whose products go beyond the border of the United States. There are hundreds of prosperous mercantile and manufacturing concerns and hundreds of thousands of consumers who will indirectly feel the benefit of a substantial movement to increase the manufacturing facilities in their respective localities. Not only the places I have mentioned but several other important towns and cities in Connecticut and Massachusetts will be accommodated by the proposed improvements on the Connecticut River. There is no question but that with the increased population and continued industrial development the demand for water power is growing rapidly. It would be difficult to estimate the great advantages to the industries of northern Connecticut which are bound to follow when the proposed project opens up this new source of power.

The firm belief in the ultimate success of the project is greatly strengthened by the personnel of those who are back of the enterprise. They are substantial men of affairs, who have achieved marked success in other lines and who are identified with the largest commercial and manufacturing interests in their respective towns, and it may be expected that they will bring to this important undertaking the same ability, enterprise, fair dealing, and judgment that have characterized their endeavors in the past.

The Connecticut Valley is anxious to make the most of the natural resources of the Connecticut River. In my speech in the House of Representatives on March 21, 1914, I mentioned the reasons for the widespread desire for the improvement of the Connecticut River. The Connecticut rises in the extreme northern portion of New Hampshire and flows in a southerly direction between that State and Vermont, forming the boundary line between these two States, and through Massachusetts and Connecticut, emptying into Long Island Sound at Saybrook, about 30 miles to the eastward of New Haven and about 40 miles to the westward of New London. Its entire watershed is said to be about 11,000 square miles, of which only about 850 square miles are below Hartford. Most of the important tributaries of the Connecticut River join it above Hartford. Below Hartford there are only five that may be considered of any importance. The Park or Hog River enters the Connecticut from the westward at Hartford about 4,100 feet below the highway bridge, and the Hockanum River flows into it from the eastward about 5,000 feet below the mouth of the Park River. At Middletown, Little River flows in from the westward, and just above East Haddam the Salmon River and, a short distance above Essex, Eight Mile River empty in from the eastward.

As to the possibilities of the freight-traffic development of the river, the value of freight transported on the river in 1917 was about $50,000,000; and the tonnage figures pointed toward the million, being coal, lumber, building materials, fertilizer, petroleum products, and miscellaneous steamboat freight. Furthermore, it costs New England manufacturers nearly $3 to bring every dollar's worth of coal to the section, according to reliable figures. How long can New England expect to do business under this handicap with the aggressive interior and West, so much more favorably situated in regard to the food supply and the market?

An idea of the large number of people who are in position to be benefited by the development of the river is given by referring to the population of the cities and towns concerned. The communities in Connecticut interested in the river improvements have approximately 800,000 inhabitants. They are in the front rank among New England's manufacturing towns, and their products, which are so diversified that they range all the way from an ordinary pin to an automobile, are shipped to all sections of the civilized world.

Historical records show that a hundred or more years ago elaborate plans were commenced for the development of the Connecticut River. A system of canals was proposed, and charters were secured in Vermont, Massachusetts, and Connecticut. Under the Connecticut charter, which was granted in 1824, the recipient was given permission to widen the channel of the river and remove obstructions from that part of the river between the bridge at Hartford and the city of Springfield. Authority to construct canals was also given. Extensive improvements were made at that time, and it is said that at that period the Connecticut River entered upon its era of greatest commercial activity. According to the records, the whole river was open to navigation from Hartford, Conn., to Wells River, Vt. The river is about 345 miles long. Freight was carried in flatboats with capacity of 30 to 40 tons.

The Connecticut Valley is one of the most important tobacco-producing districts in the United States, the crop for last year alone being valued at nearly $12,000,000 for that part of the valley within the confines of Connecticut. The river passes right through the heart of the tobacco belt. The problem of irrigation engages the attention of the growers, and the Department of Agriculture is assisting along constructive lines; but the solution of the whole situation would be hastened if, through the present measure, the way can be opened for the irrigation of this large district.

Another great argument for the development of our water powers is the imperative necessity that we produce sufficient fixed nitrogen in this country to meet its requirements.

The development of water power is more closely related to the production and conservation of food than any other project that has been proposed. Other countries with lands in a high state of cultivation many years ago utilized their water powers in the production of atmospheric nitrogen for use as fertilizer. This country up to the beginning of the war was dependent largely upon the Chilean nitrate fields for its supply of fertilizer. The development of cheap water power furnishes the only other source of supply for this product. The fixation of the nitrogen of the atmosphere as a fertilizer through the electric furnace, using cheap hydroelectric power, ranks among the most important of the economic and industrial elements of this generation. The manufacture of air fertilizers, so far advanced and so well established in France, Italy, Norway, and Germany, as well as in other countries, promises to give us abundant and cheap fertilizers, and the fertilizer industry is recognized to-day as the most important of all of its relation to and possibilities for reducing the high cost of living. Only by the utilization of our great water powers and the fixation of atmospheric nitrogen can we ever meet European competition in commerce. The countries of Europe, on lands that have been in cultivation for thousands of years, use double the amount of fertilizer per acre that is used in this country, and for double the amount of fertilizer the European farmer pays no more than the American farmer pays for half the amount, and as a result the yield per acre in Europe is double that in the United States.

The necessity for news-print paper is recognized everywhere. This can only be secured in sufficient quantities by the use of cheap hydroelectric power in the far West. The great unused stands of pulp-wood timber are almost without exception in sections of this country where the available water powers lie either in the public domain or on navigable streams. As power is absolutely essential in the conversion of wood into paper pulp, it is obvious that we can not remedy this situation without the passage of a bill permitting the development of water powers. This is one form of practical relief that Congress can extend to newspapers in a very trying situation.

Connecticut is the munitions State of the Union. A greater part of its manufacturing industries produced munitions and materials of war than the industries of any other State in the Union.

She has now transformed a large proportion of this industrial energy back to prewar-time manufacturing processes. The crying demand is for more power. Every available water power on its nonnavigable streams has been developed to its limit. There are thousands of horsepower on its navigable streams that have not been developed because of the failure of Congress to legislate.

The bill is therefore a necessity both for purposes of reconstruction and for purposes of continued prosperity in peace.

The nations are grappling as never before for world supremacy in trade, industry, and commerce, and no factor is so important and so necessary to industrial expansion and growth as cheap electric power in unlimited quantities. Action by Congress is all that prevents the utilization of the vast amount of energy contained in the undeveloped water powers of this country. The country needs it and demands that the development of these water powers be utilized.

Mr. Speaker, I have touched in a general way upon the reasons peculiar to Connecticut which should prompt us to pass the present legislation at the earliest opportunity. What is true of Connecticut is, I am sure, true of every State in the Union. The question is no longer a local one. Our whole strength is bent toward keeping in time of reconstruction and peace the high place that the United States won during the war.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. FREDERICK C. HICKS,

OF LONG ISLAND,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Friday, May 30, 1919,

On the joint resolution—

Resolved, etc., That the thanks of Congress are hereby extended to those who served in the armed forces of the United States in the war against the Imperial German Government and who, through their patriotic sacrifice, steadfast fidelity, brilliant strategy, and courageous service, secured a victorious peace, gave to the world a new insight into the high ideals and lofty purposes of America, and left to future generations a splendid heritage of heroic achievement and noble devotion to duty.

That the thanks of Congress are hereby extended to those who served on the selective service boards and in the various auxiliary forces, whose patriotic, humane, and benevolent work at home and on the field of battle contributed so greatly to the organization, comfort, and support of our valiant warriors.

That the thanks of Congress are hereby extended to the mothers, wives, and relatives who, patriotic and uncomplaining, gave their nearest and their dearest in the hour of the Nation's need, and its deep and heartfelt sympathy is extended to those whose kindred fell or were permanently disabled in the great struggle.

That Congress reverently expresses its profound appreciation of the sublime act of those who made the supreme sacrifice by giving their lives for their country and their country's cause.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Speaker, Memorial Day has a significance separate and apart from other days. The hallowed memories that enrich its traditions and glorify its sacredness are the priceless legacies for the generations that follow. At the shrines of our noble dead, whose lives were laid down that liberty might survive, those who seek the source of the greatness of America glean their answer. These heroes sealed the covenant of righteousness by their lives, and from their graves the spirit of triumphant America, sweeping onward under its star of destiny, receives its inspiration and its strength.

The shadow of the greatest war in history still hangs over us. While we can not yet assess the tragedies, the sorrows, and the losses of that titanic conflict, we can, in part at least, measure the devotion and sacrifices of those whose intrepid courage brought victory to American arms.

From every section of our Nation and from every station in life, from every religious creed and every political faith, came the sons of America in response to the challenge of world domination. Wherever the call of duty was answered, upon the land or upon the sea, the soldiers and sailors of our Republic testified by their deeds to the unity of their country and to its ever-expanding influence and power. Hurled against seasoned veterans at the zenith of their strength, these youths, trained in the pursuits of industry, blazed a path of glory across the danger-infested ocean, through the valleys of death at Belleau Wood, Chateau-Thierry, and St. Mihiel, receiving the final vindication of their intrepidity and valor in the tangled forests of the Argonne.

In the darkest hour of the world's history the sterling manhood of America, steadfast in purpose, independent in character, imbued with lofty conceptions of right and justice, crossed the seas in the crusade for the liberation of humanity. To the swaying and fainting hosts of the Allies they brought hope, faith, and victory; to the enemy, consternation, disaster, and defeat.

From the first baptism of fire till the victorious entry into Sedan, through all their campaigns, they displayed a courage and a determination that won for them the admiration of their country and the praise of the world. A German officer in an official report said of them, "They are easy to kill but impossible to stop."

The fighting men at the front made every objective—to the everlasting honor and glory of the Nation. In our praise of them and of their achievements let us not forget those who formed the second line of defense—the men and the women at home who contributed the moral force behind the men on the line, furnishing the material supplies, making sacrifices, and rendering service for the winning of the war, and giving undivided support in unselfish cooperation for the complete vindication of our institutions.

We pay tribute to-day to the heroes of the Nation's wars, to those living and dead who have added prestige to the Nation's honor. Their names stand out, enduring monuments to the ideals and purposes of the Republic for which they fought. All honor to the men who contended for the Union in the Civil War and in the conflicts which established our Nation as one of the great powers of the earth. All honor to the men who emulated their example in the struggle just brought to a triumphant close. With gratitude we salute those who survive; with reverence we whisper the names of those who lie in the sleep of the ages. O valiant dead, your lives were not given in vain! Your blood has been transmuted into glory everlasting, and for all time those who cherish the loftiest precepts of patriotism and the highest attributes of duty will revere your tombs.

Sleep on, ye brave, sleep on, till the golden light of the morning breaks upon the mystic valley of eternity. Sleep while the Nation mourns. Though dead, you live forever in the grandeur of your accomplishments and in the gratitude of your country.

United States Employment Service.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. GUY U. HARDY,

OF COLORADO.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Monday, June 30, 1919,

On the bill (H. R. 6170) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919.

Mr. HARDY of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I want to take this opportunity to say a word in favor of the United States Employment Service as a permanent Government institution. I have heard much criticism of it on this floor. I shall not undertake a defense of its management or personnel, but shall leave that to others who are better posted.

But I will say that nothing much has been said about the extravagance or mismanagement of this department that has not been said of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance, the War Department, the building of cantonments, Hog Island, Nitro, and a dozen other functions and enterprises of the Government during the war.

This criticism is worthy of consideration and should result in the most searching investigation.

But mere criticism or even the finding of extravagance or mismanagement should not damn forever a service that may be of great value to a large number of worthy and needy persons.

If any class of people on this earth is deserving of the fostering care of their Government, it is the unemployed. No philanthropy or charity is asked for. No philanthropy or charity of any kind or anywhere is of so much permanent value as the helpful hand extended to the man or woman looking for a job.

Where can you find a more pitiable sight than the man or woman walking the streets out of money looking for work?

Where can you perform a better service than to help direct the man or woman out of work to the individual or enterprise in need of help?

Every time you find a job for a man or a man for a job you serve equally well the employee and his employer. You help the economic condition for the community. You relieve distress and increase production. You lighten the burdens of the police department. You relieve the burdens on the charity organizations.

To provide jobs for the unemployed on a large scale will largely add to the wealth of the country, will lessen the growing spirit of restlessness, will stem the tide of Bolshevism.

The United States Employment Service has been in operation only about a year. It came into being under the stress and extravagance of war times. It has not been operated long enough to get it down to a permanent basis. Mistakes may have been made.

But I am persuaded that it has shown possibilities of great service and has been a marked success in many sections.

I have approached this question with an open mind, perhaps with a slight prejudice against it. I have made an independent investigation of its operations in my district, the largest city of which is Pueblo, Colo., a large industrial center, including railroad shops, steel mills, and smelters. I began by writing letters of inquiry to a large number of employers, asking their frank opinion of and experience with the United States Employment Service. Their experience has been chiefly with the Pueblo office, which has been operated jointly by the United States Employment Service and the State bureau.

For a week now I have been getting replies from employers from all over Colorado. Almost without exception the employers commend the service rendered and indorse the United States Employment Service as a permanent function of the Government. I have been pleased and surprised at the unanimity with which the employing class of my State indorse this bureau.

I would like to read to you these replies, but a desire to economize the time of the House and space in the RECORD only keeps me from doing that. I do want to quote a few paragraphs from a few of the letters and give you the names of a few more of these Colorado employers to show you the class of people in my State who are indorsing the United States Employment Service.

The Colorado Packing Corporation:

It would seem to us that for all concerned this is the proper method of conducting an employment bureau, since unnecessary and arbitrary expense is thus saved all parties concerned.

Our experience has been in endeavoring to secure labor through private individuals there is a great deal of misrepresentation, resulting often in serious loss on the part of those seeking employment in the way of railroad fare, etc., due to the fact of misstatements made by parties sending such people to us for employment.

The Pueblo Hide & Wool Co.:

The service is very good and far better than the private agencies, where labor must pay for their positions.

The Improved Power & Machinery Co.:

It has been of decided benefit both to the employer of labor and the unemployed men. Our opinion is that the average man, especially the common laborer, is not able to stand the cost of fees charged by the average employment agent, and we have found the Federally controlled office fills our requirements.

White & Davis—Men's, women's, and children's apparel:

Private employment agencies are not always satisfactory on account of labor being unable to pay the fees exacted of them, and they do not always furnish the class of help wanted. The Federal free agency, in our opinion, should be continued as long as it is conducted as it is at this time. The Pueblo agency has been very satisfactory.

Union Depot hotel and restaurant, Pueblo:

I wish to state that I have found it very satisfactory as I have been furnished with nearly all of my employees from this office.

The Norton Land Co.:

The Federal free employment service at Pueblo, Colo., has done us good service sending us a number of good men as well as to many others in the valley, and we would like to see it continued.

The Fountain Sand & Gravel Co.:

We find the free employment service helpful to our business and from our experience find it more efficient than the private employment agencies.

The F. J. Burch Manufacturing Co.—Tents, awnings, and flags:

We have found this service, in this city, a great deal of benefit to us; at times they have furnished us with as many as 12 and 15 men per day. During the war work we depended entirely upon this organization for labor.

Graybeal & Cline—Coal, grain, flour, hay, and produce.

We consider the free employment service, as conducted in Colorado, to be a great benefit to the employers as well as to the employees of this State.

The Golden Cycle Mining & Reduction Co.:

Believe the Federal Employment Agency fine for the employers and employees alike.

The Iron City Fuel Co.:

I consider the service of the free employment agency which has been conducted in Pueblo jointly by the State of Colorado and the United States Government to be very adequate and successful, and I see every reason from my point of view that it should be continued.

Other firms indorsing this service are: Holmes Hardware Co.; the Purity Bread Co.; M. P. Slattery; the Fitts Manufacturing Co.; the city of Pueblo, by M. Studzinski, president of council; the Standard Fire Brick Co.; the Pueblo Foundry & Machine Co.; the Curran Bill Posting Co.; the Colorado Culvert & Flume Co.; American Railway Express Co.; the Colorado State Hospital; the Baker Steam Motor Car & Manufacturing Co.; the Mountain State Telephone & Telegraph Co.; the Empire Zinc Co.; and many others.

Of course the thousands of returning soldiers add greatly to the responsibilities of the Government in helping to connect the man with the job, and I understand the appropriation which is included in this bill will be largely used for this service.

In conclusion let me say that I am convinced that there is good in this service, that it has been and can be used for the benefit of labor and to the advantage of the employer, and that labor, the unemployed especially, is entitled to this much consideration on the part of the Government. I hope this item may be retained in this bill and that Congress may see its way to put the United States Employment Service for men and women on a permanent basis.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. RICHARD OLNEY,

OF MASSACHUSETTS,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Monday, June 30, 1919.

Mr. OLNEY. Mr. Speaker, under unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the sundry civil bill I submit a statement, comprehensive and instructive, from the Department of the Interior on the justification of continuing the appropriation for the Alaskan Railway and the final completion of said project. I personally strongly indorse the recommendations of the Interior Department and the Senate amendment appropriating $12,000,000 for the completion of the Alaskan Railway in 1921. I also desire to have published in the RECORD an interesting and important letter from Daniel O'Connell, of the Bureau of Mines, in behalf of the continuance of appropriation for the Federal regulation of explosives.

The statement and letter are as follows:

DESCRIPTION.

The United States Government Alaska Railroad includes:

Main line (standard gauge), extending from Seward to Fairbanks, a distance of 470.7 miles.

Matanuska branch (standard gauge), 37.7 miles in length, extending from Mile 150.9 on the main line to Chickaloon in the Matanuska coal field. The Eska Spur, 2.7 miles in length, leaves the Matanuska branch at Mile 18.5.

Chatanika branch (narrow gauge), 31.8 miles in length, extending from Mile 463.3 on the main line to Chatanika.

Chena branch (narrow gauge), extending from Mile 466.5 on the main line, a distance of 5 miles to Chena.

A total of 508.4 miles of standard-gauge line, of which 7.4 miles will be constructed for both standard and narrow gauge; 36.8 miles of narrow-gauge branches, and a grand total of 545.2 miles, both standard and narrow gauge lines.

PROGRESS OF CONSTRUCTION MAY 31, 1919.

Track was in place on the main line from Seward, Mile 0 to Mile 227.4; from Mile 365.5 to Mile 413.34, Nenana; from Mile 414.97 to Mile 415.24, and from Mile 453.48 to Mile 470.7 at Fairbanks, a total of 292.73 miles of track in place, of which 214.67 miles was new work, 70.7 miles the Alaska Northern Railway, and 7.36 miles the Tanana Valley Railroad. In addition to the 292.73 miles of track in place on the main line, the Matanuska branch is complete to Chickaloon, a distance of 37.7 miles, or a total of 252.37 miles of new road, and a total of 330.43 miles of standard-gauge track in place, including new and old road, in addition to which there is a total of 36.8 miles of narrow-gauge track in the Chatanika and Chena branches, or a grand total of 369.93 miles of track in place.

Additional work includes the construction of 34.50 miles of sidings, 4.12 miles of spurs, 0.90 mile of temporary spurs, and 1.1 miles of wyes, or a total of 40.62 miles. Sidings have also been graded, and are ready for track laying to a length of 1.25 miles. The total length of narrow-gauge sidings is 1.93 miles.

In addition to the line completed and on which track has been laid, the following work has been accomplished: Grading of road for track laying, 36.17 miles; grade under way, 35.8 miles; cleared ready for grading, 7 miles.

From Mile 463.3 to Fairbanks the Government Railway follows the line of the Tanana Valley Railroad, now a part of the Government system. This distance of 7.4 miles is being reconstructed for both standard and narrow gauge. The Chatanika branch and the Chena branch are both part of the old Tanana Valley Railroad.

PAST WORK.

The new road embraced in the United States Government Alaska Railroad, reaching from Kern Creek to Fairbanks, and including the Matanuska branch, was estimated in 1915 to cost $24,512,117. This work is now estimated to cost, on completion in 1921, the sum of $31,894,523.88, an increase of 30.1 per cent. The average increase in compensation for labor in 1918 over the cost of 1915 was 59 per cent. Lumber delivered was 91.4 per cent; iron delivered, 106 per cent; ocean freight, 115 per cent; railroad freight, 147 per cent; while supplies ranged from about 25 per cent to 161 per cent over the cost of 1915.

The estimate of 1915 only provided for about 20 miles of sidings. The road, when completed, will have a total of about 53 miles of spurs and sidings.

COMPLETE.

The total cost of the United States Government Alaskan Railway project is estimated on completion in 1921 to total $50,436,971. This project will include:

(1) Construction and equipment of 437.7 miles of standard-guage mail line and Matanuska branch.

(2) Construction of 53.9 miles of standard-gauge spurs and sidings.

(3) Purchase and reconstruction of 70.7 miles standard-gauge main line and its equipment (formerly Alaskan Northern Railroad).

(4) Purchase and rehabilitation of Tanana Valley Railroad, 44.2 miles in length. Also 1.9 miles of sidings. Seven miles of this road is being reconstructed as part of main line and equipped for both narrow and standard gauge operation; 36.8 miles are under rehabilitation and will be operated as the narrow-gauge Chatanika and Chena branches.

A total of 508.4 miles of standard-gauge main line and Matanuska branch, 53.9 miles standard-gauge spurs and sidings, 36.8 miles of narrow-gauge branches, and 1.9 miles narrow-gauge sidings, a grand total of 601 miles of track.

(5) Purchase, construction, and equipment of all necessary terminal facilities, including harbor improvements at Anchorage, dock and wharf facilities at Seward, Anchorage, and Nenana. All necessary roundhouse, machine-shop, maintenance, office, storage, and station structures at all terminal and subterminal points, Seward, Kern, Anchorage, Matanuska, Eska, Chickaloon, Talkeetna, Summit, Nenana, and Fairbanks.

(6) Rolling stock, construction, operating, and marine equipment and machinery that, as far as now can be estimated, fully provides for all operating requirements.

(7) Physical property, including—

Operation of coal mines that assure an adequate and independent fuel supply.

Construction and operation of modern hospitals, fully equipped, at Anchorage and Nenana.

Installation and operation of water, light, sewerage, sanitation, and other necessary public utilities, the cost of which will be refunded to the project, at Anchorage and Nenana.

(8) Upbuilding of traffic through encouragement of industries and settlement of the country by a separate department.

(9) Maintenance and operating expenses in excess of revenue during entire period of reconstruction from 1915 to end of 1921, estimated to total $4,423,991.98.

(10) Materials and supplies in reserve on completion of the work that will be available for betterments, maintenance, shop, and commissary requirements, of an estimated value of $1,200,000.

Figuring only on a basis of 508.4 miles of main line and Matanuska siding, and not including any of the spurs, siding, or narrow-gauge branches, the cost of the road, including telegraph, roadway buildings, and sidings, would only be about $73,200 per mile, as against an approximate cost for the Copper River & Northwestern Railroad in Alaska of $83,000 per mile.

The total cost of the Government project, including all of the above-enumerated facilities and equipment, will only total on the basis of 508.4 miles, $99,200 per mile, as against a total value for the Copper River & Northwestern Railway of $146,090 per mile, and a total value for the White Pass & Yukon Railway, from Skagway to the summit of the White Pass, of $115,343 per mile. The latter is a narrow-gauge line. These are the figures as returned to the Interstate Commerce Commission in the 1917 reports.

ECONOMIC COMPLETION OF UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT ALASKA RAILROAD DEPENDENT UPON APPROPRIATION OF $12,000,000 FOR FISCAL YEAR ENDING JUNE 30, 1920.

The economic completion of the Government railroad is dependent upon the approval by Congress of the entire sum of $12,000,000, requested for the furtherance of work during the next fiscal year. Any material reduction in this sum will delay the completion of the project by at least a year, and add to its ultimate cost.

The completion of the work will be pushed from both ends. To handle the work economically all supplies should be purchased for the following season's work and distributed the preceding winter by sled. If this is not done the result is a greatly increased cost. Deliveries of rail and structural steel should be immediately contracted for with assurance of prompt delivery.

The last opportunity of sending supplies to the interior of Alaska this year will be on steamer sailing July 15, from Seattle. On this boat should be sent all of the material and supplies required for this year's work, and, as far as possible, to cover the work of next season. All of the material and supplies required for this north end of the work should be purchased during the next fiscal year and forwarded not later than the July sailing, 1920.

The appropriation requested will provide for practically all of the material and supplies required for the construction from the north end, and for all of the material and supplies required in the construction from the south end for this year and the open working season of 1920, May to October, inclusive, so that delivery can be made of the supplies in the coming winter. This appropriation will also provide for the awarding of station contracts covering the entire open season of 1920. To complete this project on any other basis will result in waste and increased costs.

EARLY COMPLETION ESSENTIAL TO SUCCESS OF PROJECT.

The success of the United States Government Alaska railroad is dependent upon its early completion. Every year's delay in completing the project is adding to its ultimate cost, in a necessity of carrying a large supervisory construction organization, which is a necessity in a region as remote as Alaska and in the loss of traffic which the railroad will secure upon its completion to the navigable waters of the interior.

The people of the interior of Alaska have been hanging on with a determination and courage awaiting the completion of this project so as to secure the economical transportation essential to the building of homes and industries in the great interior of Alaska. The limit of their ability to contend against the uneconomical conditions now prevailing has been reached, and each year's delay in the completion of this project will tend to the closing down of the further industries and the departure of pioneers whose worth can not be estimated. They know of the great undeveloped wealth of the northland and they love their country. One such is worth scores of transients.

Despite the adverse conditions under which these people have been striving, they contributed their part to Alaska's great war record, a record that excels any in this country and probably in any other. Approximately 12 per cent of her men were in the service of the Army or Navy, and Alaska secured nearly all other records for war loans, relief, and other war activities.

Last fall Fairbanks, the interior metropolis of Alaska, had a disastrous fire, resulting in a property loss of over one-quarter of a million dollars. When asked what help could be rendered they immediately wired, "Thank you, no help needed. With the opening of navigation Fairbanks will rebuild."

People who can show such courage and determination, despite their many disappointments, are deserving of the little they ask—the ability to do for themselves—and the first and most pressing need is that of the economical transportation that will permit of the rational development of the great natural resources of Alaska.

JUSTIFICATION OF PROJECT.

The regions tributary to the United States Government Alaska Railroad have produced to date, principally in placer gold, a sum in excess of $111,000,000. These values have been recovered under the most extravagant and wasteful methods, due primarily to the lack of transportation facilities. It has resulted in skimming off the cream of the richer gold placer deposits, with no thought of the economic recovering of the greater values yet remaining. The origin of all of this placer gold is quartz in lode and vein, assuring an extensive lode development when economic conditions prevail. The region immediately tributary to Fairbanks, the interior terminus of the railroad, has produced since 1903 in excess of $71,000,000 in mineral products alone. Those who know Alaska best realize to-day how little they know of the great store of mineral wealth in our northern Territory.

Agriculture is to-day in Alaska a practical reality. In the immediate vicinity of Fairbanks there are 96 homesteaders, who are successfully raising all of the hardier grains and vegetables. Last year 30 tons of seed wheat were harvested.

The success of the reindeer industry, to-day known to all, simply points to the great meat-raising possibilities of our northern Territory. Those who at first scorned are now loudest in praise of our introduction of reindeer into Alaska, without a question one of the most profitable ventures ever inaugurated by the United States Government. We imported 1,280 head of reindeer from Siberia. From this small band we now have to-day 140,000, while over 80,000 have been killed for food. Like success is assured in the musk-ox development. Each animal dressing about 600 pounds of meat comparable to beef, and furnishing twice the quantity of wool secured from a sheep, and of far better quality. Most of the homesteaders now have their cows, and it is only a question of time when cattle acclimated to northern conditions will thrive, and Alaska will become one of our principal sources of meat supply. Finland, in the same latitude as Alaska, exported in the year 1912 dairy products of a value in excess of $36,000,000. It was her industry of second importance. Alaska's agricultural possibilities assure a stable population and of the extensive development necessary to a future prosperity, for she has all of the best resources essential to the upbuilding of a prosperous country, mineral and nonmetallic resources, and fisheries that exceed in extent and potential value that of any known area of this continent.

The investment in this railroad is not with any idea of the immediate traffic being sufficient to return a profit from operations. It is the first step of constructive legislation by the United States for the development of one of its richest areas, which will ultimately not only justify this investment, but make it profitable from the traffic standpoint.

The present conditions in the region to be served by this project are no criterion on which to base the ultimate traffic possibilities, but they do tend to show that the region is potentially rich in mineral and other resources which, if rationally developed on a broad, constructive plan, will result in the building of permanent industries, the establishment of a permanent population, and ultimately in a large and profitable traffic. If the building of railroads through a new country awaited the growth of a sufficient traffic to warrant their construction none of our pioneer transcontinental railroads would have been built and our present frontier, instead of being in Alaska, would probably be east of the Rocky Mountains. Traffic for the Alaskan Railroad will come from the facilities and economies afforded by the improved transportation. It has been only during the last few years that even those best able to judge would concede that Alaska will be a land of a permanent and prosperous people. No one grasped the full extent of her vast, undeveloped wealth of natural resources.

The climate will not prove any barrier to the development of Alaska and will be no deterrent to those accustomed to similar climatic conditions. Success will be attained through settlement by men and women from northern climates, and these will find that the climatic conditions prevailing through the southern and central portions of Alaska are little, if any, different from those of northern Minnesota, North Dakota, Canada, and the Scandinavian Peninsula.

Norway, Sweden, and Finland, in the same latitude as Alaska, with similar climatic conditions, have a combined area about two-thirds as great as that of Alaska. These countries support a population of about 11,000,000 as against approximately 50,000 for Alaska. The Scandinavian countries have little mineral wealth other than iron; no gold, not nearly the area of arable lands or the wealth of fisheries with which Alaska has been so lavishly endowed. Finland, with an area less than one-fourth the size of Alaska, had a population in 1909 of 3,059,324. The total value of her products for 1909 is shown to be $79,468,200, while that of Alaska for 1918, with a population of only approximately 30,000 whites, is $81,161,561. Finland has 2,444 miles of railroad, of which 2,214 miles were built and are being operated by the State.

The utilization of the resources of our great West and of northern Canada during more recent years, with a resulting growth of enormous tonnage where none formerly existed, was only brought about through the building of railroads and other improved means of transportation.

In Alaska during the last few years there has been a development that, although small, has been far-reaching in its importance and has demonstrated to our people that the broad valleys of Alaska will furnish in great part the food for her people and that agriculture will prove profitable where a local market is assured. Cultivation of the soil must, however, be secondary to the development of the mines and other natural resources, which latter must be relied upon to furnish a local market and foster agriculture during its pioneer growth.

When the railroad shall have opened the way to the economical development of the interior, the commerce and output of all products of Alaska should expand rapidly. At present production is limited to the narrow belt of territory adjacent to the coast, to the Copper River & Northwestern Railroad, and to the navigable waterways.

During the last five years and while the United States Government railroad has been under survey and construction Alaska has exported from the limited area open to occupation and industry products of a value of $335,577,700, of which gold and silver represent only $71,175,318. The total commerce of Alaska during this period was $502,098,457.

Since the purchase in 1867 the value of her exported products has been in excess of $840,000,000, while her total commerce has exceeded $1,295,000,000, an output of practically two dollars for every dollar received, a result that challenges comparison with any country.

The wise utilization of Alaska's great wealth in fisheries; gold, copper, and other minerals; coal, wood, furs, and other nonmetallic products will result in permanent industries and provide homes for a strong, contented people, who will be the source of inestimable strength to the Nation and assure the early return of the cost of the railroad as well as all other governmental expenditures in Alaska.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, BUREAU OF MINES,
Washington, June 28, 1919.

Hon. RICHARD OLNEY,
House Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN: I understand that legislation in the form of an amendment to the sundry civil bill will come before Congress Monday for the continuance of Federal regulation of explosives.

In view of what has happened in Boston and throughout the country during the past month there should be no doubt as to the outcome of this amendment.

I understand that the Senate passed favorably upon legislation for the continuance of Federal regulation yesterday.

I am inclosing herewith a clipping from one of the Boston papers on June 25 which shows conditions in Boston.

Supt. Crowley had all of the police and the reserves on duty on that day, fearing further bomb outrages, and the same condition existed in Lynn and Lawrence, where there are a great many of the Bolshevik type living.

Federal regulation of explosives is favored by the manufacturers, who desire to protect themselves against bomb outrages. It is also favored by police chiefs throughout this State.

I believe that you, as a Representative from Massachusetts, should say a word in favor of this legislation if occasion requires when the bill comes before Congress.

I am sending this clipping so that you will have some information should any opposition to this legislation be made.

Yours, very truly,

DAN O'CONNELL.

Federal Farm Loan Act.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. LOUIS T. McFADDEN,

OF PENNSYLVANIA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Monday, June 16, 1919.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, in a recent speech I referred to the tax-exemption features of the bonds issued under the provisions of the Federal farm-loan act. Certain extracts from that speech have been referred to by Hon. Herbert Quick, a member of the Federal Farm Loan Board. A statement by him published in Hoard's Dairyman contains many misleading assertions and numerous errors as to facts. Its wide circulation by the excellent paper referred to and by the propagandists connected with the Federal Farm Loan System, political as well as social, is likely to cause a wide misunderstanding of the truth about the relation of Mr. Quick and his associates to the American taxpayers. I deem it in the interest of the people of Pennsylvania, whom I represent, to correct some of the blunders found in the statement made by the head of the publicity department of the Farm Loan Bureau.

ANNUAL EXPENSES.

At the outset of his discussion of the annual expenses of the Federal Farm Loan Board Mr. Quick admits that the Federal land banks have the free use of nearly $750,000 for each of the 12 banks, but he omits the cost of that item from the total expenses. In referring to my statement that the annual cost to the National Treasury is over half a million dollars per year he says:

> The actual expenses of the Federal Farm Loan Bureau for the year ending November 30, 1918, for salaries, traveling expenses, furniture and fixtures, stationery and supplies, printing, telegrams, telephone service, and other expenses were $186,603.28. This is the overhead expense and falls very far short of the estimate given of $500,000 per year, and, as a matter of fact, over $150,000 of that may be charged off as profits made by the Treasury on purchases of Federal farm loan bonds.

WITHHELD PART OF FACTS.

The gentleman withheld part of the facts. That no one may be deceived by his partial statement, I will give further details. The money alleged to have been made by the Treasury Department by its speculation in Federal farm-loan bonds in not a part of the regular business, because it was made through the use of a portion of the special appropriation of $200,000,000 made in January, 1918, for that particular purpose, which is not a part of the annual expenses. The expense appropriations are made for the fiscal year beginning July 1 and ending June 30 following. The appropriation for the year ending June 30, 1918, was $260,000. The National Government is now paying 4½ per cent and 4¾ per cent interest on more than $8,000,000, which is loaned without one cent of interest to the Federal land banks, and the law specially provides that this large loan shall not participate to the extent of one penny in any dividends that may be paid by the Federal land banks to stockholders. Giving them the benefit of the use of the free capital in excess of $8,000,000 and figuring the interest on $8,000,000 at 4½ per cent, the annual cost to the National Treasury for the free capital furnished is $360,000.

Giving them the benefit of their own method of calculation and taking Mr. Quick's own figures of $186,603.28 for the year ending November 30, 1918, and adding the cost for the free capital furnished, the net total cash cost for the year is $546,603.28. In addition to this expense the Government is compelled to furnish free use of the mails for sending out the propaganda of the Federal Farm Loan Bureau and other expenses are incurred for which no accounting is made. Clearly there is an inaccuracy of over $360,000 in the statement made to Hoard's Dairyman by this member of the Federal Farm Loan Board.

As further evidence of the incompleteness of Mr. Quick's statement of expenses, I call attention to page 30 of the Second Annual Report of the Federal Farm Loan Board, from which I quote three items:

	Appropriation.
Salaries and expenses Federal Farm Loan Board for year ending June 30, 1918	$260,000.00
Total expenditures from the above appropriation to Nov. 30, 1918		186,603.28
Unexpended balance available for charges incurred prior to June 30, 1918, for which bills have not yet been approved		73,396.72

It is plain that in addition to the error of omitting $360,000 of expenses from his statement, Mr. Quick failed to account for the "charges incurred prior to June 30, 1918," which may have been unpaid at the time that report was made.

TAX ON SHOE SHINES.

Again I will call attention to the inaccuracies of this official spokesman for the Federal Farm Loan Board. He says:

> A good deal is said about loss to the Government through the selling of farm-loan bonds, which are exempt from taxation. As a matter of fact, this is pure fallacy. To say that the Government incurs a loss when it fails to tax any particular thing is foolishness. People might be taxed for wearing laundered shirts, white collars, or having their shoes shined, but to say that the Government incurs a loss by not taxing these things is highly absurd.

Persons familiar with the revenue laws know that mortgages given to individuals and companies are subject to income tax as well as to property tax. They are now a source of revenue to local treasuries and to the National Government. This is an established custom and a well-known source of revenue. When an existing taxable mortgage is refunded by a Federal land-bank mortgage or a joint-stock land-bank mortgage it ceases to be a source of revenue, and both local and national treasuries suffer. One of the principal avowed objects of the Federal farm-loan system is to refund existing mortgages. More than half of their loans are made for that purpose, according to their own reports. There is no honest comparison between the levying of a tax on mortgages owned by rich investors and a tax on laundered shirts or shoe shines, which have not been subject to taxation.

MISINFORMED AS TO MUNICIPAL BONDS.

I will entertain the House with another quotation from the romance written for the Dairyman by this same member of the Federal Farm Loan Board, as follows:

> Why is it that cities and towns are able to give their inhabitants fine roads and streets and beautiful public buildings, parks, and other things that minister to the enjoyment of life? Because municipal corporations are able to issue bonds which are exempt from taxation, and therefore bear a low rate of interest.

MUNICIPAL BONDS ARE TAXED IN MANY STATES.

If the gentleman would give a little time to the study of revenue laws and less time to the development of his poetic imagination, he would not show such ignorance in discussing this important question. Had he investigated the subject, he would know that in many States municipal bonds are not now and have not in the past been exempt from taxation. In Pennsylvania, Virginia, Ohio, and many other States municipal bonds are taxed.

In the States where municipal bonds are subject to taxation, the parks and public buildings and streets are as beautiful as in the States where municipal bonds are exempt. People of towns and cities pay special taxes for these improvements and conveniences.

Very few public improvements have been made since war was declared. It has only been during the last two years that the Federal income tax has been large enough to be of importance. Before 1913 there was no Federal income tax whatever. Therefore immunity of municipal bonds from Federal income tax can not honestly be given as a reason for public improvements.

It only requires a comparison of the tax receipts issued to town taxpayers and country taxpayers to prove that the town people pay for these conveniences in extra taxes that are not levied against the farms.

In States where municipal bonds are exempt from taxation the same exemption is extended to drainage bonds, road bonds, schoolhouse bonds, courthouse bonds, and any other bonds for which the farmer is taxed and for whose benefit the debt is incurred. In a city-park bond the intent of the exemption is to benefit all of the people equally according to the assessed valuation of their property in the park district. In the case of bonds issued for building a country schoolhouse or a highway or a similar local improvement the exemption is granted as in the matter of the town bond. In both cases all of the citizens of the improvement district are treated on the same basis. In no case is the exemption intended to benefit one man at the expense of ninety-nine of his neighbors. The intent of the exemption of Federal land-bank bonds is to benefit only the men who borrow money from the Federal land banks. This is at the expense of their neighbors, who will naturally be compelled to pay higher direct or indirect taxes, because the man who holds the bond representing borrower's mortgage will avoid all tax paying. Last winter a bill passed the House of Representatives imposing a Federal income tax on all future issues of municipal bonds. If the public demands it, such a law might in the future pass both Houses of the Congress.

These are fair samples of the statements made to the public by a man who receives a salary of $10,000 a year from the National Treasury and who devotes a considerable portion of his time to publicity work for the Federal Farm Loan Board.

INSTRUMENTALITIES OF THE GOVERNMENT.

Mr. Quick denies that the people are deceived as to the character of Federal land-bank bonds and joint-stock land-bank bonds. He contends at length that the Federal Farm Loan Board takes special pains to convince the public that these bonds are not Government obligations. He says:

No one on this board knows of a "line, word, or syllable" uttered either in word or writing by anyone "drawing a salary from the Government" indicating, stating, or even hinting that Federal farm-loan bonds are obligations of the Government or guaranteed by it.

The Federal Farm Loan Board supervises the management of the Federal land banks and of the joint-stock land banks, and that includes the sale of the bonds to the public by these organizations and their agents. The language above used by Mr. Quick plainly reveals a serious lack of information on the part of the Federal Farm Loan Board as to what is going on in the world outside of the Washington office.

A circular issued by a syndicate of bond dealers now selling $54,000,000 of Federal land-bank bonds starts off with this statement:

Fifty-four million dollars of Federal land bank 4½ per cent farm-loan bonds issued under the direction and control of the Federal Farm Loan Board, a bureau of the Treasury Department of the United States.

Another paragraph in the same circular states:

Federal land-bank bonds are declared by Congress to be instrumentalities of the Government of the United States, and, as such, exempt from Federal, State, municipal, and local taxation. These bonds, therefore, have as complete exemption from taxation as the first Liberty loan 3½ per cent bonds.

A circular issued by a Chicago company dealing in joint-stock land-bank bonds begins with these words:

Tax-free instrumentalities of the United States Government.

An explanatory paragraph in the circular says:

By act of Congress these bonds are declared instrumentalities of the Government of the United States and are prepared and engraved by the Treasury Department.

PUBLIC CONFIDENCE DESTROYED.

I assert, Mr. Speaker, that it is not to be expected that the ordinary citizen will draw any distinction between an "instrumentality of the Government" and an "obligation of the Government." The Supreme Court of the United States has not as yet passed on that question. The average citizen might hire a lawyer to investigate the correctness of these circulars and thus learn that there is a difference between "instrumentalities" and "obligations," but the average citizen thinks he understands the English language, and he also thinks that a department of the Federal Government would not willfully mislead him. So he makes no further inquiry.

Selling agents for whose acts the Federal Farm Loan Board is morally responsible find it to their advantage to make specially prominent these words: "Instrumentalities of the United States Government."

Other selling agents, in order to still more definitely fasten in the minds of the guileless customer the idea of Government responsibility, call special attention to the fact that the United States Government owns a large part of the stock of Federal land banks. They do not inform their customers that the United States is expected to be safely rid of that stock within a very few years, long before any of the bonds become due.

At the close of my remarks I will insert copies of the circulars to which I have referred, so that they may be critically examined. The reader can then judge for himself as to whether Mr. Quick and his associates are subject to censure and criticism for permitting a selling campaign to be carried on in which it appears to be implied that the United States Government is responsible for the bonds.

HOW THE LAW IS VIOLATED.

United States Farm Loan Commissioner Hon. G. W. Norris, in an address delivered to the Pennsylvania bankers' convention a few days ago, said of the Federal land banks:

These banks were authorized to make loans to farmers cultivating their own lands, every loan to be secured by an absolute first mortgage, and no loan to exceed $10,000.

Technically this is a correct statement of the law, but it is far from a correct statement of the customs of the Federal land banks as guided and controlled by the Federal Farm Loan Board. Mr. Norris told the Pennsylvania bankers what the law says he and his associates ought to do, but he did not tell them that they do not live up to the legal requirements.

I charge that it is not the practice of the Federal land banks to observe these provisions of the law in good faith. In their mad rush to secure a large volume of loans the Federal land banks continuously and persistently violate these express provisions of the law by resorting to subterfuges that render them liable to the censure of Congress and of the courts.

TWO LOANS ON ONE FARM.

I will now quote from an advertisement which appeared in the Republican, a newspaper published in Humboldt, Iowa, over the signature of G. E. Briggs, secretary and treasurer of the Humboldt National Farm Loan Association:

Husband and wife can each get loans on the same land if the wife has a half interest in the land. In such cases one mortgage is made and two notes.

Town people can borrow on their farms if the owner will see that the land is properly farmed. The lease usually provides for this.

TOWN PEOPLE CAN BORROW.

By making a lease which is called a contract for employment, under which the owner of the land agrees to give the renter a certain share of the grain for his services instead of having the renter give the owner a share of the grain for the use of the land, all kinds of nonresident landowners can make loans. In order that the article of agreement may not be understood to be a lease by those unversed in the tricks of the system a special clause is inserted, which I here quote:

It is further agreed that this contract is to be construed as a contract of employment and not as a lease.

RENTED FOR SHARE OF CROP.

Nine people out of ten in reading the contract would say that it was a straight lease. The owner of the land gives two-thirds of the crop to the employee for working the farm instead of receiving one-third of the crop for the use of the farm—no distinction whatever.

VICIOUS RULINGS OF THE FARM LOAN BOARD.

The assertions of Commissioner Norris are further repudiated by the literature of the Federal Farm Loan Board. The Borrowers' Bulletin is the official organ of the Federal Farm Loan Board. It is printed in Washington and sent through the mails free of postage under the authority of the United States Treasury Department. On page 6 of the issue for April–May, 1919, I find the following under the heading "Questions we are most frequently asked":

6. Question. Does a farmer have to live on the farm mortgaged to be able to make a loan with the land bank?

Answer. No. Neither does he have to be a farm hand. The rules as to this are about as follows: The borrower must cultivate the land mortgaged personally or by hired labor. But since he is permitted to pay the wages in a part of the crop as well as in money, this rule practically amounts to this: The borrower must reserve the right to enter and control his farm and to direct the farming operations, and must exercise such right to the extent of seeing that the soil is conserved, improvements kept up, and that crops are cultivated in good farmerlike manner. This supervision may be exercised personally or by an agent.

TENANT FARMING ENCOURAGED.

Mr. Speaker, the ordinary lease for share of crop contains these restrictions and provisions. Recently I was informed that a man living in Kentucky had borrowed money from the Texas Federal land bank on a tract of land located in the State of Texas and that the Kentucky man's agent had rented the farm to a Texas tenant for a share of the crop. When that statement was first made to me I thought there must be some mistake about it. The rulings of the Federal Farm Loan Board above quoted show that tenantry is encouraged and that practically no restriction is imposed to enforce the intent of the law requiring loans to be made to actual farmers.

LOANS IN EXCESS OF $10,000.

In order to violate the law by borrowing more than $10,000, the farmer can sell an undivided interest in his farm to his wife and then they can borrow up to $20,000. If he desires to borrow more than $20,000, the farmer may take in another relative as a temporary partner and then they can borrow up to $30,000. If he desires to borrow more than $30,000, he may deed an interest to a fourth person and then he is eligible, by the aid of these confederates, to get a loan of $40,000.

LOAN OF $32,000 ON ONE FARM.

Mr. Edward A. Ames, of Cerro Gordo County, Iowa, borrowed $32,000 from the Omaha bank by executing quitclaim deeds to his wife and brother-in-law and sister-in-law, who helped him borrow the money. After the money was obtained they quitclaimed back to him, so that he now owes the bank $32,000. It required less than two months to complete the entire transaction. No revenue stamps were required on the deeds because there were no actual sales. When Mr. Ames began this conspiracy with the Federal land bank in January, 1919, he owed $24,000 on the farm and it drew interest at 5½ per cent. The mortgage was subject to both income tax and local tax and it was not due until March 1, 1922.

NATIONAL TREASURY LOSES TAXES.

On the 6th of March Mr. Ames had completed the entire transaction and had the farm back in his own name, subject to a mortgage of $32,000, for which he had received $30,400 in cash and stock in the Omaha bank for $1,600. He was and is also liable for $1,600 as a personal liability. He now pays the same rate of interest, 5½ per cent. He has received no benefit as to reduction of interest, and the man why buys the bonds to the amount of $32,000 will be exempt from both local and Federal income tax. The National Government is liable to a loss of several hundred dollars a year on this loan alone because of the tax exemption of bonds. I have the full particulars of this loan as to dates of deeds and all of the details. They were obtained from the records of Cerro Gordo County, Iowa, by Mr. Hugh H. Shepherd, a reliable abstractor of Mason City, Iowa.

$41,300 LOANED TO NONRESIDENT SPECULATORS.

Hoyer & Schultz, real estate dealers and speculators, of Fort Dodge, Iowa, by executing six deeds to parts of a swamp in Hamilton County, Iowa, located over 30 miles from their place of residence, succeeded in borrowing $41,300 from the Omaha Federal land bank on 791 acres, a large part of which is covered with peat and moss and does not raise either pasture or meadow grass. The fact that no revenue stamps were attached to the deeds, and that they were made out to relatives shows that they represented dummy sales for the purpose of a technical evasion of the law. These lands are a speculative proposition, and the loans are far in excess of what would have been made by reliable private loan men. The full particulars in this case were furnished by Mr. Varick C. Crosley, a reliable abstractor of Webster City, Iowa. I also have a very interesting set of photographs of the land showing the correctness of the reports as to its being a swamp.

FALSE REPORTS AS TO SIZE OF LOANS.

I call particular attention to these dummy deals for the purpose of showing that the Ames loan is essentially a $32,000 loan and the Hoyer & Schultz loan is essentially one of $41,300.

On the books of the Federal land bank the Ames loan would show as four loans and the Hoyer & Schultz loan would stand as six loans.

When Hon. C. E. Lobdell, of the Federal Farm Loan Board, stated in an article published in a leading financial journal that the average size of the loans in the United States was about $2,500 he may have been technically correct, but actually and morally he was far from correct, because when several loans are made on the farm for the purpose of circumventing the law the loan should be figured as one instead of as several. The average size of loans made in Iowa from organization of the system to November 30, 1918, was $6,755, as shown on page 19, second annual report of the Federal Farm Loan Board. This average would be higher if an honest return had been given in cases where two or more loans were made on one farm. The average size of loans on Iowa farms is doubtless now considerably higher. During the first few months some pretense was made of observing the law respecting the size of the loans. Now the amount borrowed is only limited by the value of the farm and the number of relatives or friends of the owner and actual borrower who can be temporarily conscripted for borrowing purposes.

Mr. Lobdell was well aware of these facts when he stated that the average loan was about $2,500, but the readers of his article were made to think that each loan represented a farm instead of a part of the farm or an undivided interest in a farm.

TWO KINDS OF LITERATURE USED.

The Federal Farm Loan Board and its agents use two kinds of literature, one kind for the millionaire investors, who are invited to buy bonds in order to dodge paying taxes, and another kind for farmers, who are invited to sign up long-time mortgages to furnish security for tax-free bonds that may be sold to tax-evading investors. In a circular issued this month by a syndicate of bond companies acting as agents for the Federal Farm Loan Board in offering for sale $54,000,000 of Federal land-bank bonds, I find this statement:

Federal land-bank bonds are secured by deposit of an equal amount of United States Government bonds or first mortgages on farm lands cultivated by the owner, which mortgages are appraised and guaranteed by the local national farm loan association, of which the borrower is a member and stockholder. Each stockholder is liable for twice the par value of his stock.

On the title page of a booklet issued by the Texas Federal land bank I find the following statements:

No red tape. No joint liability. No restrictions on sale of farm. Not required to live on farm.

When I read that the borrower was not required to live on his farm I concluded that the Texas bank must be exceeding its authority, but reference to the rulings of the Federal Farm Loan Board which I have quoted shows that the Texas bank acts under Washington instructions.

AMBIGUOUS LANGUAGE DECEIVES BORROWER.

Again referring to the Borrowers' Bulletin for April-May, 1919, on page 6 I find a ruling of the Federal Farm Loan Board as follows:

4. Question. Will a borrower of a Federal land bank be responsible for the debts of other borrowers?

Answer. No. If the association should become insolvent he would become liable for the debts thereof to the extent of 5 per cent of the amount of his loan, but there is no other liability of one member for the debt or obligation of another. This 5 per cent liability is personal. The farm is only responsible for the amount borrowed.

TEN PER CENT LIABILITY.

That language is clearly intended to deceive the borrower. He is given to understand that there is no double liability. Most borrowers do not see the hidden meaning in the sentence, "The farm is only responsible for the amount borrowed." When the borrower makes his loan he discovers that the Federal land bank holds out 5 cents on every dollar and puts it where the farm borrower can not touch it until his debt is all paid. The borrower gets only 95 cents on every dollar of the face of his mortgage. He is given bank stock for the other 5 cents. This bank stock is liable for every dollar of indebtedness of all of the 12 Federal land banks in the United States. That constitutes 5 per cent of the liability of the borrower, and, in addition to that, he is personally liable for 5 per cent more. The borrower is therefore liable for 10 cents on every 95 cents which he receives. This amounts to a little more than 10½ per cent liability on the actual cash that is turned over to him. In the answer to question 4 which I have quoted the language is deceptive. It is interpreted by the average borrower to mean that he will be liable for only 5 per cent, and that liability confined to his local association. In order that there may be no mistake about the dual character of the literature circulated, I quote here from the circular to investors first mentioned, issued by the bond syndicate:

All 12 Federal land banks are liable for the ultimate payment of all bonds issued by each and every Federal land bank.

Mr. Speaker, every farmer of Pennsylvania who receives $950 in cash from the Federal land bank becomes responsible to the extent of an additional $100 for the management of all 12 of the land banks for the debts of his neighbors and for the payment of the mortgages given by farmers on the arid plains of the West, the cut-over lands of the North, and in other localities where drought and weather hazards make farming and debt paying uncertain. It is entirely possible that the borrower who receives $950 cash may be obliged to pay $1,050, besides interest.

MAY SELL FARM TO NONRESIDENT SPECULATOR.

As a further evidence of the "double-dealing" kind of inducements offered to borrowers and investors by the Federal Farm Loan Board, I desire to quote again from the Borrowers' Bulletin:

5. Question. Will mortgaging my farm to the Federal land bank prevent my selling it or any part of it if I should want to do so?
Answer. Not in the least. There is no limitation on the sale of your land. You may sell it to whom you please, when you please, and need not consult the Federal land bank. However, a loan with a Federal land bank facilitates the sale of the farm. A purchaser prefers assuming a long-time loan with low interest and easy payments to paying cash.

BONDHOLDER NOT PROTECTED.

In other words, Mr. Speaker, the landowner who desires to sell is encouraged to borrow from the Federal land bank so that he may sell to better advantage to some speculator who may rent the farm until he can sell it to another speculator at a profit. In my opinion, the Federal Farm Loan Board does not deal in good faith with other borrowers or with investors when it issues such rulings. The loans are made for 35 years. The borrower is assured that he may sell at once to any person desired. What about the assurance to the investor that the land is cultivated by the owner?

NO REDUCTION OF INTEREST IN BEST FARMING STATES.

I will at the close of these remarks quote an extended discussion proving by reliable statistics and observations that no material reduction in interest rates to farmers has been made except in hazardous localities, where loans are now made at lower than previous rates, because the farmers of these high-rate districts now have the benefit of the credit of the reliable farming States like Pennsylvania, Illinois, and Iowa. There have been certain districts where pioneer conditions and irregular and uncertain climatic conditions made farming hazardous, in which higher interest rates prevailed.

The great volume of farm loans has always been made and is now in the 12 great food-producing States of the Mississippi Valley, which grow about three-fourths of the food products sold in the markets of the United States. In these States the Federal Farm Loan Board is now making the great bulk of its loans at a rate not materially lower than that which has prevailed for the last 20 years.

TAXABLE SECURITIES MADE NONTAXABLE.

As rapidly as possible the Federal Farm Loan System is converting the mortgages now subject to local and income taxes into nontaxable bonds. The statement made by the member of the Federal Farm Loan Board to Pennsylvania bankers was very far from correct when he said in speaking of interest rates charged before the creation of the Federal land banks:

The loan which the eastern investor made at 6 per cent usually cost the borrower 9 or 10 per cent.

If he had said that a small portion of the loans from a few localities sometimes cost the borrower 8 or 10 per cent, but that the credit of farmers of better known and more reliable States is now extended to these places of poor farm credit, so that they borrow at a lower rate, his statement would have been more nearly correct.

ADVERTISE LOANS AT 3.6 PER CENT.

Mr. Speaker, accuracy of statement in dealing with either borrowers or investors is not a characteristic of the Federal Farm Loan Board. The loans now made to landowners by the Federal land banks bear interest at the rate of 5½ per cent per annum. The borrower pays at that rate for every dollar that he owes for every minute that he owes it. To show the deceptive character of the propaganda perpetrated on borrowers I will quote in full an advertisement that appeared in the Corsicana Democrat and Truth, published at Corsicana, Tex.:

THE GOOD-ROADS PROBLEM SOLVED.

If the farmers of Navarro County will transfer their farm mortgages that they are paying 8 per cent and 10 per cent interest on to the Corsicana National Farm Loan Association, where they only have to pay 3.6 per cent interest if they keep it for 35 years, or 5½ per cent if they keep it in 5 or 10 years, the difference in a few years will be enough to pike every public road in Navarro County.
This association has loaned one-half million dollars on this plan since organization.
If you are interested in cheaper money, see—
J. Y. ROBERTS, Secretary-Treasurer,
Office over First State Bank, Corsicana, Tex.

When I read that advertisement, stating that money would be loaned for 35 years at 3.6 per cent, I decided that Corsicana would soon have a new secretary-treasurer, because the Federal Farm Loan Board could not be expected to permit such gross misrepresentation. On referring to page 6 of the Borrowers' Bulletin of the April-May issue I discovered that by a peculiar jugglery of contradictory statements the official organ of the Federal Farm Loan Board tried to prove that the borrower is only required to pay 3.6 per cent interest on a mortgage which legally draws 5½ per cent.

ENCOURAGED TO EVADE LAW.

The member of the Federal Farm Loan Board who addressed the Pennsylvania bankers quoted to them law and theory. He refrained from stating many facts and he ignored many rulings and practices of his organization. I hope that every Member of Congress and every banker of Pennsylvania will carefully read the Borrowers' Bulletin for April–May, 1919. It contains the most ingenious lot of rulings ever devised for evading, ignoring, and nullifying the purposes of the law to which they refer. Many of these rulings are evidently made for the express purpose of encouraging subordinate officials of the Federal land banks to evade the legal requirements prescribed by Congress.

KANSAS BANKERS HEARD FROM.

There are no Federal land banks in Pennsylvania and no joint-stock land banks. In Kansas they have both, and the people can view them at short range, a Federal land bank at Wichita and a joint-stock land bank at Salina. In the State of Pennsylvania very few people have made a careful study of the Federal Farm Loan System. The statements of the Federal land bank officials have been accepted without much questioning. Out in Kansas, the home State of some of the leading Federal land bank officials, where many loans have been made and where the methods and results of the system are critically analyzed, there is no hesitation about denouncing the tax exemption of Federal land bank bonds and joint-stock land bank bonds. The following resolutions were adopted by unanimous vote of the State convention of the Kansas Bankers' Association at its annual meeting in May of this year:

Whereas every dollar's worth of property should bear the just burden of taxation and every person should as a patriotic duty carry a fair portion of the public expense: Be it
Resolved, That this convention is opposed to any legislation to encourage legal tax dodging by permitting the transformation of taxable property into tax-exempt property, and that we are therefore opposed to the enactment of any new tax-exemption laws; be it further
Resolved, That, recognizing the additional burden imposed on all taxpayers by the exemption from taxation of the bonds of Federal land banks and joint-stock land banks, we urge the repeal of that section of the farm-loan act covering exemptions; be it further Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent to the Senators and Representatives in Congress from the State of Kansas.

LIBERTY BONDS DEPRECIATED.

A year ago when the people were using all available dollars to pay for Liberty bonds, the Federal Farm Loan Board advertised and sold over $50,000,000 of 5 per cent bonds as free from taxes as the Government 3½ per cent bonds. At the present time $54,000,000 of Federal land-bank bonds are offered. Boldly featured items of their advertising are the statements that these bonds are as free from taxation as Government 3½ per cent bonds, that they are "instrumentalities of the Government," and that they yield 4½ per cent. Is it any wonder that Government war bonds are selling below par?

SHOULD PROTECT LIBERTY BONDS.

The enormous volume of these tax-free bonds that the Federal Farm Loan Board promises to issue in the future will be sure to have a permanent depressing effect on the price of Government war bonds. As between patriotic citizens who bought war bonds when the Nation needed the money and rich investors who now wish to shirk their war taxes, the duty of Congress is plain. We can stimulate the price of Liberty bonds and compel tax dodgers to pay war taxes by requiring owners of Federal land-bank bonds to pay income taxes.

DEFEATS PURPOSES OF GRADUATED INCOME.

Prof. George E. Putnam, of the School of Finance of Washington University, St. Louis, in a very able paper on the subject published in the Annalist explains that the exemption of these bonds defeats the purpose of the graduated income tax. The very rich man is exempted from a tax of 77 per cent, the man with an income of more than $2,000 to $6,000 is exempted from a tax of 6 per cent, and the man with an income of $2,000 or less is not granted any exemption whatever on Federal farm-loan bonds. This is an unfair discrimination in favor of the rich.

Mr. Speaker, the Federal farm loan system was devised for a good object, but changed conditions and the open and flagrant violations of the law by the Federal Farm Loan Board are perverting it from the purposes for which it was intended.

CHANGES BROUGHT BY WAR.

When the proposed law was first considered there was no Federal income tax. When the law was enacted the Federal income tax was only 6 per cent. Now the highest income tax is 77 per cent. When the law was enacted the national debt was only about $1,000,000,000; now the national debt is about $26,000,000,000.

Every citizen of the United States ought to pay his fair share of the enormous war debt.

The Federal Farm Loan System is now being used to finance wealthy landowners in a way not expected by the framers of the law.

WEALTHY INVESTORS ESCAPE TAXATION.

The transformation of taxable farm mortgages into tax-free Federal land bank bonds enables the wealthy investor to escape the payment of his just share of taxes, while the farmer, the merchant, the miner, and the manufacturer will be required to pay heavier taxes, and the cost of living will be made higher to the consumer.

The present mortgage indebtedness on farms is estimated to be $4,500,000,000. The Federal Farm Loan Board is endeavoring to get its borrowers to refund old mortgages with bigger ones. In a few years the mortgage indebtedness on farms is likely to be $6,000,000,000. The joint-stock land banks and Federal land banks are factories in which taxable mortgages are made over into tax-free bonds. Tax dodgers can buy them and evade paying war taxes and local taxes.

I do not ask for a repeal of the Federal farm loan act, but the tax-exemption section should be amended, and the loans should be made in amounts not exceeding $10,000 to each farm, and the borrower should be a farmer who honestly cultivates his own farm.

I protest against the economic crimes that are committed in the name of the Federal farm loan act. The farmers of Pennsylvania and of the United States will be opposed to the tax exemption of bonds when they know the truth.

REVIEW OF THE FARM-LOAN SYSTEM.

I desire to refer to a statement by Hon. William E. Humphrey, of Washington. It is a complete discussion of the Federal farm-loan law by a man who served in Congress for 14 years from the State of Washington and was recognized as a leading thinker and debater. Since this was written by Mr. Humphrey, the Federal land banks have greatly increased their loans in the better agricultural States.

This statement by ex-Congressman Humphrey and the article to which he refers, written by Mr. Chassell, were based on calculations made under the revenue-tax law of 1917. The evils and inconsistencies to which they refer have been made worse by the revenue law since enacted and now in force. The statement follows:

"Another socialistic bubble, fathered and inflated by the Government, has been saved from collapse only by the powerful stimulant of millions of dollars taken from the National Treasury. In the midst of war, when the Nation was appealing for funds, millions needed for war purposes were taken from the National Treasury and given to the Federal farm-loan banks to save the system from disaster.

"Yet this system was loudly proclaimed as the one socialistic scheme that would demonstrate the benefits and the beauties of Government ownership—and it has.

"The purpose of the act creating these banks was declared to be to provide capital for agricultural development, to create standard forms of investments based upon farm mortgages, and to equalize interest rates on farm mortgages. A more correct title would be 'an act to tax the American people to give special privileges to a few well-to-do farmers, to furnish the superrich the most profitable investment in the world, and to give them a legitimate way to escape payment of their income tax, to discredit Government bonds and increase the burden of taxation of the American people.' A splendid and exhaustive article upon the workings of the Federal loan system by E. D. Chassell, secretary of the Farm Mortgage Bankers' Association of America, was published in the January, 1919, bulletin of that association. This article should be read by every Member of the next Congress.

EULOGISTIC VERBIAGE.

"Sometimes a Government report contains some fact of real value, if you have the patience to dig it out from under the eulogistic verbiage intended to conceal it. The philosopher who said that 'language was made to conceal thought,' anticipated the average Government report. These thoughts are suggested by an examination of the second annual report of the Federal Farm Loan Board, bearing date of January 2, 1919. According to this report the system is almost self-supporting. Like all Government institutions, when reported by those responsible for it and whose jobs depend upon its continuance, while it never is it always is going to be self-supporting. 'As these banks were given, to establish them, $9,000,000 by the Government, on which they pay no interest and which they will probably never repay, it certainly indicates financial ability of high order that under such circumstances its managers can almost make the system pay running expenses. If this institution ever does pay the cost of maintenance, it will do something that no other Government institution has ever yet done in the history of this Nation.

"In the report it is stated: 'There was in some quarters a mistaken impression that there was an element of philanthropy or paternalism in the system—that it was designed to give credit to persons unable to get credit elsewhere.' Why does the lady protest when not accused?

"For explanation examine the loans that have been made. The two banner States are Texas and North Dakota. Texas borrowed $13,568,461; North Dakota, $10,324,300, while Illinois has borrowed but $2,551,850.

REPORT IS EXPLANATORY.

"Is there any room for suspicion that the large amounts loaned in Texas and North Dakota were in any degree due to the fact that these borrowers were 'unable to get credit elsewhere'? If the great difference in the wealth and population between North Dakota and Texas as compared with Illinois did not give the answer, the report itself furnishes the explanation.

"Texas has a constitution that prohibits the mortgaging of a homestead that contains less than 200 acres. It is hard to figure how any of this money could be used in Texas to purchase a home. It is equally apparent that most of the loans made in Texas were more or less speculative. In short, these loans were largely made for real estate promotion schemes.

"How about North Dakota? Why are the loans so large in that State? North Dakota has been blessed with a nonpartisan, socialistic, Bolshevistic legislature, and true to their faith they have been trying several socialistic schemes. Among others, in order to enable the farmer to escape from the obligations of his contracts, they provided that under certain circumstances the North Dakota farmer might contract debts that would be a prior lien on his farm to any mortgage that he had executed or might thereafter execute.

BIG RISKS ON LOANS.

"All the sophistry, explanations, and covering up that the Secretary of the Treasury may offer can not hide the truth that the large loans made in Texas and in North Dakota were largely due to the fact that those loans were made to those who, to some extent, were 'unable to get credit elsewhere.' It is certain that the private loan institutions were not satisfied with the security that satisfied the farm-loan officials. The large loans made in Texas and North Dakota may not be an illustration of 'fools rush in where angels fear to tread,' but they do demonstrate that men will loan the money of the Government on terms that they would not loan their own.

PURPOSE WAS GOOD.

"Of course the great purpose of the farm-loan act was to aid the farmer and to encourage the buying of farms and the building of homes. The number of loans that have been made to purchase homes is practically none, while the loans that have been made to purchase land for any purpose whatever have been almost negligible. Practically all the loans that have been made by Federal farm loan banks were made to take up existing indebtedness. Does this benefit the farmer? Except in unusual cases, it is doubtful.

"Remember, these loans are not made to the poor, to the land hungry trying to secure a home, but to the well-to-do farmer, the average farmer borrower owning property worth $5,000 or more.

LEAD TO SPECULATION AND EXTRAVAGANCE.
